Special Registration

Part Attorney General's Opinions

State Taxation of Nontribe Member Not Preempted by Federal Concerns: While generally state taxation will be preempted if it impermissibly interferes with a comprehensive federal statutory scheme or established tradition of tribal governance, the simple fact that a particular on-reservation activity may validly be taxed by a tribe does not preclude state taxation of the same activity, and taxation of a nonmember has no effect on federal concerns. A tribe's sovereignty interest does not negate state authority over nonmember activity. Therefore, the interest of a nontribal member in motor vehicles, mobile homes, or personal property (whose tax situs is within the exterior boundaries of the reservation) and which interest is held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common with a tribal member is subject to those state taxes generally applicable to such property. 42 A.G. Attorney General's Opinions

Authority of Local Government to Levy Additional Mills to Make Up Difference Between Light Vehicle Tax Reimbursement and Amount Assessed for Fiscal Year 2001: In enacting 15-1-121, the Legislature provided for a reimbursement of an average of 88% of the amount lost by counties in light vehicle fee collections compared to the amount that the counties actually received in combined fees and property taxes in fiscal year 2001. The legislative intent was to simplify the collection and disbursement of county revenue while maintaining rough revenue neutrality for the counties. Under 15-10-420, the Legislature also provided an inflation adjustment to the mill levy cap and allowed for an increase in mill levy capacity for a decrease in reimbursements, in effect enabling local governments to maintain for fiscal year 2002 the amount of revenue collected in fiscal year 2001. Thus, a local government was authorized to levy additional mills sufficient to make up the difference between the amount reimbursed by the state for light vehicle fees and taxes under 15-1-121 and the amount of fees and taxes assessed by the local government for fiscal year 2001. 49 A.G. Op. 4 (2001).

Definition of "General Transportation Purposes": As used in this section, the term "general transportation purposes" includes driving related to employment, education, maintenance of a household, and similar activities, but does not include activities associated with the vehicle's status as a collector's item, such as driving to and from car club activities, exhibits, parades, or the display of a private collection. 44 A.G. Severability Clause: Section 10, Ch. 296, L. 1967, was a severability clause.

Part Case Notes

County Miscalculation of Amount of Loss Per Vehicle — State Reimbursement: When a County Treasurer miscalculated the amount the county would have received under the loss-per-vehicle provisions of section 61-3-536 (now repealed) after repeal of the former property tax system and the state refused to accept a corrected figure submitted after the mistake was realized, it was not error for the District Court to order the state to reimburse the county for revenue lost under the erroneous calculation. The Supreme Court found that the legislative intent was clear that enactment of the flat fee system was intended as a tax relief measure and that counties were not supposed to lose any revenue under the law. Lewis & Clark County v. St., 224 M 223, 728 P2d 1348, 43 St. Rep. 2150 (1986).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Light Vehicle Registration Fee Not Assessable Against Certain Indian-Owned Vehicles or Vehicles Owned by Nonresident Active Duty Military Personnel: Although designated as a fee, the light vehicle registration fee enacted by referendum in 1999 actually functions as a three-tiered, value-based annual motor vehicle tax. The fee is not related to the cost of administering the vehicle registration system, and fee revenue is distributed in essentially the same manner as the sales taxes and value taxes that it replaced. Thus, sharing many of the salient characteristics of and being substantively indistinguishable from the taxes that it replaced, the fee is functionally a tax and, like the taxes that it replaced, may not be levied against tribally owned vehicles or vehicles owned by enrolled tribal members residing on their reservations or against the personal vehicles of nonresident active duty military personnel stationed in Montana. 48 A.G. Op. 24 (2000). See also 39 A.G. Op. 45 (1981).

Property Tax Freeze Inapplicable to Light Vehicle Tax: Although Ch. 211, L. 1987, replaced the fee in lieu of tax on light vehicles with a property tax, the property tax freeze instituted by Initiative No. 105 applies only to property described in Title 15, ch. 6, part 1, and is inapplicable to items of personal property such as light vehicles, motorcycles, motor homes, quadricycles, travel trailers, and campers. 42 A.G. Op. 21 (1987).

State Taxation of Nontribe Member Not Preempted by Federal Concerns: While generally state taxation will be preempted if it impermissibly interferes with a comprehensive federal statutory scheme or established tradition of tribal governance, the simple fact that a particular on-reservation activity may validly be taxed by a tribe does not preclude state taxation of the same activity, and taxation of a nonmember has no effect on federal concerns. A tribe's sovereignty interest does not negate state authority over nonmember activity. Therefore, the interest of a nontribal member in motor vehicles, mobile homes, or personal property (whose tax situs is within the exterior boundaries of the reservation) and which interest is held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common with a tribal member is subject to those state taxes generally applicable to such property. 42 A.G. Op. 11 (1987).

Payment Into State Special Revenue Fund — When Proper: State aid received pursuant to section 61-3-536 (now repealed) during March 1984 is, as to any county whose public assistance programs and protective services were assumed on July 1, 1983, by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), properly paid into the state special revenue fund under 53-2-813 (now repealed) in such amount as determined by fiscal year 1984 mill levies. 41 A.G. Op. 26 (1985).

Motor Vehicle Dealer Not to Obtain "Title Only" on Vehicle in Inventory: A motor vehicle dealer may not obtain a "title only" (meaning receipt of title without registration or payment of taxes) from the Registrar's Bureau on a motor vehicle that is part of his inventory. If a dealer wishes to obtain a title on such a vehicle, he must also register the vehicle and pay any taxes or fees due on the vehicle. 40 A.G. Op. 70 (1984).

Military Personnel Exempt: Because the money generated by the former light vehicle license fee is to be used primarily for revenue purposes, section 574 of the federal Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 exempts military personnel on active duty at a military installation in Montana from payment of the fee. 39 A.G. Op. 46 (1982).

Purpose of Fee System: Although the title to the new licensing system has changed, the underlying purpose has not. The fee system is more akin to a property tax than a registration fee as the money generated is to be used primarily for revenue purposes. 39 A.G. Op. 46 (1982).

Indian Persons Exempt From Vehicle License Fee: An Indian person residing on his or her tribe's reservation is not required to pay the vehicle license fee imposed by 61-3-533 (now repealed). 39 A.G. Op. 45 (1981). See also 48 A.G. Op. 24 (2000), which held that the light vehicle registration fee enacted by referendum in 1999 may not be levied against tribally owned vehicles or vehicles owned by enrolled tribal members residing on their reservations.

Motor Vehicle Licenses for Disabled Veterans: A disabled veteran who qualifies under 10-2-301 (renumbered 61-3-451, now repealed) may receive free license plates for a new motor vehicle upon payment of 1% personal property tax and without payment of a new motor vehicle sales tax imposed under 61-3-502 (now repealed). 38 A.G. Op. 21 (1979).

The light vehicle registration fees, local option vehicle taxes or fees, fees in lieu of tax, and other fees must be paid from the first day of the new period for a minimum period of 1 year. When the change is to a later registration period, light vehicle registration fees, local option vehicle taxes or fees, and other fees must be prorated and paid based on the same tax year as the original registration period. Application to Indian Tribes and Individuals: The Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and the enrolled members of those tribes residing on that reservation are exempt from payment of the personal property tax imposed by this section; and Indians residing on that reservation and not enrolled in either of the tribes are subject to the tax. The Assiniboine & Sioux Tribes v. Mont., 568 F. Supp. 269, 40 St. Rep. 1318 (D.C. Mont. 1983).

Purpose of Act: The intent and purpose of this section were to insure the collection of the current property taxes on automobiles authorized to use the highways. While this section fixed the first day of January as the time of assessment of "motor vehicles in stock, in dealers' possession or in dead storage, as well as in use" (prior to amendment), the obvious purpose of this provision was to make it possible to carry out the other provisions of this act coupling the registration and issuance of license plates with the payment of taxes. State ex rel. Sadler v. Evans, 106 M 286, 77 P2d 394 (1938).

Constitutionality: Assertion that Legislature in amending this section by enacting Ch. 72, L. 1937, and making special provision for taxing automobiles included in class 2 of section 84-301, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), among other property without first amending such section, unlawfully discriminated against motor vehicles, was not well made. The Legislature may properly go even to the extent of placing identical articles in the hands of different owners, and different uses resulting in different productivity in different classes, and the amendment did not violate Art. XII, sec. 11 (similar to Art. VIII, sec. 1, 1972 Mont. Const.), and Art. III, sec. 27, 1889 Mont. Const. Wheir v. Dye, 105 M 347, 73 P2d 209 (1937).

Attorney General's Opinions

Motor Vehicle Dealer Not to Obtain "Title Only" on Vehicle in Inventory: A motor vehicle dealer may not obtain a "title only" (meaning receipt of title without registration or payment of taxes) from the Registrar's Bureau on a motor vehicle that is part of his inventory. If a dealer wishes to obtain a title on such a vehicle, he must also register the vehicle and pay any taxes or fees due on the vehicle. 40 A.G. Op. 70 (1984).

Attorney General's Opinions

Authority of Local Government to Levy Additional Mills to Make Up Difference Between Light Vehicle Tax Reimbursement and Amount Assessed for Fiscal Year 2001: In enacting 15-1-121, the Legislature provided for a reimbursement of an average of 88% of the amount lost by counties in light vehicle fee collections compared to the amount that the counties actually received in combined fees and property taxes in fiscal year 2001. The legislative intent was to simplify the collection and disbursement of county revenue while maintaining rough revenue neutrality for the counties. Under 15-10-420, the Legislature also provided an inflation adjustment to the mill levy cap and allowed for an increase in mill levy capacity for a decrease in reimbursements, in effect enabling local governments to maintain for fiscal year 2002 the amount of revenue collected in fiscal year 2001. Thus, a local government was authorized to levy additional mills sufficient to make up the difference between the amount reimbursed by the state for light vehicle fees and taxes under 15-1-121 and the amount of fees and taxes assessed by the local government for fiscal year 2001. 49 A.G. Op. 4 (2001).

Proportion of Vehicle-Related Taxes Applicable to Rural Fire Districts: Vehicle-related taxes referred to in subsection (1) of this section must be distributed proportionately to rural fire districts on the basis of all mill levies applicable to personal property located within the geographical boundaries of the districts. For distribution entitlement purposes, the residence or assignment address appearing on the certificate of registration determines if a particular vehicle is within a district's boundaries. 43 A.G. Op. 4 (1989).

Distribution of Motor Vehicle Fees: Motor vehicle fees subject to distribution under this section are properly allocated in the same manner as personal property taxes (see 1999 amendment). Consequently, for fiscal year 1984 the state special revenue fund is entitled to receive, under 53-2-813, the appropriate proportional share of such money collected between January 1, 1984, and December 31, 1984, from counties whose public assistance programs and protective services were assumed on July 1, 1983. 41 A.G. Op. 26 (1985).

The motor vehicle division has been and is currently performing the function described in 61-3-535. vehicle. It is intended that this system commence with registration of vehicles on January 1, 1982.

In order to facilitate registration and to reduce energy consumption, the Department of Revenue is mandated to develop a procedure for mail registration. More precisely, the procedure relates to reregistration. Registration for the first time, as well as transfers of registration, will still be done in person at the office of the county treasurer. It is anticipated that the reregistration procedure will involve mailing to the vehicle owner an application specifying the vehicle and the various fees that are due for registration. The owner will sign the application and return the signed application and the fee to the county treasurer. Upon receipt of the signed application, the treasurer shall send the applicant a valid registration and tabs to be attached to the license plates. The rules to be adopted by the Department of Revenue should provide the details to implement the above described procedure. The emphasis should be on the convenience of the vehicle owner.

The financial aid provisions of the bill are designed to provide a mechanism to give financial relief to local governments due to the loss of revenue from automobile and light truck property tax."

Attorney General's Opinions

Light Vehicle Registration Fee Not Assessable Against Certain Indian-Owned Vehicles or Vehicles Owned by Nonresident Active Duty Military Personnel: Although designated as a fee, the light vehicle registration fee enacted by referendum in 1999 actually functions as a three-tiered, value-based annual motor vehicle tax. The fee is not related to the cost of administering the vehicle registration system, and fee revenue is distributed in essentially the same manner as the sales taxes and value taxes that it replaced. Thus, sharing many of the salient characteristics of and being substantively indistinguishable from the taxes that it replaced, the fee is functionally a tax and, like the taxes that it replaced, may not be levied against tribally owned vehicles or vehicles owned by enrolled tribal members residing on their reservations or against the personal vehicles of nonresident active duty military personnel stationed in Montana. 48 A.G. Op. 24 (2000). See also 39 A.G. Op. 45 (1981).

Power of State to Enact and Courts to Enforce Laws Regulating Motor Vehicles: Appellant, appearing pro se, challenged as unconstitutional laws requiring driver's license, mandatory insurance, and vehicle registration. The Supreme Court held that the issues raised by the appellant were frivolous, unreasonable, and groundless in that the court had previously recognized the state's power to regulate motor vehicles in the interests of public safety at the expense of individual rights. Case Notes

Dealer's Plates: Fact that dealer-transferor placed dealer's plates on automobile sold on Saturday in order that transferee might drive the vehicle over the weekend did not estop dealer and his insurer from denying ownership of vehicle at time of accident later that day. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Newell, 329 F. Supp. 172 (D.C. Mont. 1971), distinguished in Am. States Ins. Co. v. Angstman Motors, Inc., 343 F. Supp. 576 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Constitutionality: This section was not open to the constitutional objection that it is a revenue measure, but it may be justified as a reasonable police regulation. St. v. Pepper, 70 M 596, 226 P 1108 (1924).

Attorney General's Opinions

Automobile Leasing: Automobile leasing companies which sell automobiles must either be licensed as motor vehicle dealers under 61-4-101 or registered as branch establishments of licensed motor vehicle dealers pursuant to this section. 38 A.G. Op. 2 (1979).

Case Notes

Delivery to Buyer: Delivery to buyer at the time of an accident arising out of operation of the vehicle by buyer's employee, the vehicle had been delivered to buyer but buyer had not executed an application for certificate of title. The title had not passed under subsection (d) (deleted in 1971), section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), and the subsequent registration of the transfer could not cause the transfer to relate back to the time the vehicle was delivered to the buyer but only to the time that buyer executed an application for certificate of title. Liability arising out of the accident was covered by seller's insurance. Am. States Ins. Co. v. Angstman Motors, Inc., 343 F. Supp. 576 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Execution of Application — Delivery on Next Business Day: A buyer took possession of vehicle and executed application for certificate of title on Saturday and dealer-seller endorsed the old certificate and delivered the documents to the County Treasurer on Monday, the next day of business for that office. The requirements of section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), were met and title passed as of Saturday, despite subsection (d) (deleted in 1971) of section 53-109 and despite death of buyer later on Saturday. Seller's insurance policy did not cover liability for accident arising out of operation of vehicle with buyer's consent occurring on Saturday after delivery of vehicle to buyer. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Newell, 329 F. Supp. 172 (D.C. Mont. 1971), distinguished in Am. States Ins. Co. v. Angstman Motors, Inc., 343 F. Supp. 576 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Attachment of Vehicle: Where plaintiff assignee of vehicle had not recorded the title in her name even though she had possession of the vehicle and endorsed documents of title, she was a stranger to the title under subsection (d) (deleted in 1971) of section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), and had no standing to complain of a wrongful attachment for the debt of the supposed owner, her former husband. Ott v. Fidelity Fin. Co., 158 M 91, 488 P2d 1148 (1971).

No Endorsement on Title — Liability on Dealer's Insurance: A certificate of title had not been endorsed by dealer-seller and there had been no application for a certificate in buyer's name. The failure to meet the requirements of section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), invalidated the sale under the terms of subsection (d) (deleted in 1971), section 53-109. The seller was still legally in possession, and buyer was not excluded by an exclusion of persons to whom possession had been delivered pursuant to a contract of sale despite the fact that the vehicle and the documents of title had been physically delivered to buyer. Dealer's insurance covered liability for an accident involving buyer's brother's operation of the vehicle. Glen Falls Ins. Co. v. Irion, 323 F. Supp. 1164 (D.C. Mont. 1970).

No New Title: None of the parties had taken any steps to have a new certificate of title issued to buyer of a vehicle. Title remained in the dealer-seller under subsection (d) (deleted in 1971), section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), even though the vehicle and the executed documents of title had been delivered to the buyer by a third-party nondealer who had purchased from the dealer. Liability for an accident arising out of the buyer's brother's operation of the vehicle was covered by the insurance of the dealer and the third party rather than by the insurance of the buyer. Irion v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 154 M 156, 461 P2d 199 (1969), explained in Glen Falls Ins. Co. v. Irion, 323 F. Supp. 1164 (D.C. Mont. 1970), and distinguished in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Newell, 329 F. Supp. 172 (D.C. Mont. 1971).

Installment Sale: Dealer-seller retained possession of the certificate of registration of a vehicle pending payment of the final installments of the purchase price. The title remained in the seller under the provisions of subsection (d) (deleted in 1971), section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), even though the vehicle had been delivered to buyer. Liability for an accident involving buyer's son's driving of the car was covered by the seller's insurance rather than by the 30-day automatic coverage for a new car under buyer's policy or by uninsured motorist coverage of injured parties. Ostermiller v. Parker, 152 M 337, 451 P2d 515 (1968), explained in Glen Falls Ins. Co. v. Irion, 323 F. Supp. 1164 (D.C. Mont. 1970), and distinguished in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Newell, 329 F. Supp. 172 (D.C. Mont. 1971).

Exercise of Control Overtime: Purchaser of vehicle had exercised complete dominion over a vehicle for over 3 years, had taken possession of the seller's certificate of registration, had purchased license plates for it in his own name for 2 years, had purchased insurance for it, and had repaired it. He was the owner of the vehicle for purposes of the nonowned clause of his insurance policy, despite the fact that there had been no compliance with section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), and no certificate of registration had been issued to him as required by subsection (d) (deleted in 1971), section 53-109. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co. v. Colbrese, 368 F2d 405 (9th Cir. 1966), reversing Colbrese v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 227 F. Supp. 978 (D.C. Mont. 1964), certiorari denied 386 US 991, 87 S Ct 1306 (1961), questioned in Irion v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 154 M 156, 461 P2d 199 (1969).

Insurance Coverage: Buyer of a vehicle had not executed an application for registration in his name and neither party had filed any documents relating to the transfer with the registrar of motor vehicles. Title had not passed to the buyer even though the parties had agreed on the price and buyer had taken possession. Liability from an accident while buyer was driving was covered by dealer-seller's insurance rather than by the owned-replacement clause of buyer's insurance. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am. v. NW. Mut. Ins. Co., 142 M 155, 382 P2d 174 (1963), distinguished in Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co. v. Colbrese, 368 F2d 405 (9th Cir. 1966), and in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Newell, 329 F. Supp. 172 (D.C. Mont. 1971).

Contract for Purchase: Registrar never issued certificate of registration to purchaser of a vehicle, so that under subsection (d) (deleted in 1971), section 53-109, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-3-201), title did not pass to the purchaser. A nonnegotiable promissory note given by the purchaser was without consideration and was therefore voidable against an assignee of the note. Sonnek v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 140 M 503, 374 P2d 105 (1962).

Attorney General's Opinions

Motor Vehicle Dealer Not to Obtain "Title Only" on Vehicle in Inventory: A motor vehicle dealer may not obtain a "title only" (meaning receipt of title without registration or payment of taxes) from the Registrar's Bureau on a motor vehicle that is part of his inventory. If a dealer wishes to obtain a title on such a vehicle, he must also register the vehicle and pay any taxes or fees due on the vehicle. 40 A.G. Op. 70 (1984).

Sale of Automobile Franchise — Error in Failure to Resolve Mootness as Threshold Issue Before Underlying Dispute Addressed: Ford Motor Company (Ford) notified franchisee Shamrock Motors (Shamrock) that it intended to terminate Shamrock's automobile dealer franchise because Shamrock had sold 80% of its stock without Ford's knowledge or consent, which violated their franchise agreement. The Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of Justice issued a ruling that Ford had good cause, so Shamrock filed for judicial review in the District Court. Ford then removed to federal court, where the ruling was reversed, so Ford appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court. Shamrock then sold the dealership, and the decision was vacated because of lack of jurisdiction. The case was remanded to state court, where Ford moved to dismiss for mootness. The District Court denied the motion without discussion and ruled for Shamrock, concluding that the franchise could not be terminated as a result of the sale of 80% of the franchise stock. Reversing on appeal, the Supreme Court cited Adkins v. Livingston, 121 M 528, 194 P2d 238 (1948), in holding that mootness is a threshold issue that must be dealt with before the underlying dispute may be addressed. A matter is moot when, because of an event or happening, the issue has ceased to exist and no longer presents an actual controversy. A question is moot when a court cannot grant effective relief. If the parties cannot be restored to their original position, an appeal becomes moot. When Shamrock chose to sell the franchise during the appellate process, the question of whether Ford had good cause to terminate the franchise in the first instance became academic and thus moot. The District Court erred when it did not resolve the issue of mootness before addressing the merits of the claim, not recognizing that once Shamrock sold the dealership and was no longer the franchisee, there was no effective relief that the court could fashion under this part, so the appeal from the Motor Vehicle Division's ruling should have been dismissed as moot. Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150, 56 St. Rep. 99 (1999), followed in Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Improper Finding That Franchise Did Not Exist — Failure to Address Nonrevenue-Based Circumstances in Determining Substantial Reliance — Summary Judgment Reversed: On the question of whether a franchise existed, the parties agreed that their relationship met the definition of franchise in this section, but disputed whether plaintiff was substantially reliant on defendant for a continued supply of new motor vehicles, parts, and accessories. The District Court applied the common meaning of the term and concluded that plaintiff did not generate 50% or more of its revenue from sales of products supplied by defendant, so plaintiff was not substantially reliant on defendant, and therefore no franchise existed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court applied an unnecessarily restrictive and simplistic standard and failed to consider other nonrevenue-based circumstances that potentially impacted on the issue of substantial reliance. The question of whether a franchise existed was reversed and remanded for consideration of nonrevenue as well as revenue-based circumstances. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Case Notes

Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Whether Franchise Exists: Plaintiff filed an action under 61-4-210, contending that defendant failed to follow the notice provisions in 61-4-205 in terminating plaintiff's dealership agreement and that defendant needed to exhaust its administrative remedies before the District Court could obtain subject matter jurisdiction. Defendant contended that the Department of Justice Motor Vehicle Division lacked jurisdiction because the dealer agreement did not constitute a franchise, so the administrative and notice provisions did not apply. The Supreme Court noted that a vehicle dealer that believes that its agreement with a manufacturer, distributor, or importer constitutes a franchise and that the notice requirements have not been complied with may bring a direct action in District Court pursuant to 61-4-210 for violation of the notice requirement. That is what plaintiff did. However, an action under 61-4-210 is not connected to the administrative contested case proceedings provided for in 61-4-205 and 61-4-206 and does not require a party to initiate and exhaust administrative proceedings prior to bringing the action. Thus, the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction over the question of whether a franchise agreement existed between the parties. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005).

Improper Finding That Franchise Did Not Exist — Failure to Address Nonrevenue-Based Circumstances in Determining Substantial Reliance — Summary Judgment Reversed: On the question of whether a franchise existed, the parties agreed that their relationship met the definition of franchise in 61-4-201, but disputed whether plaintiff was substantially reliant on defendant for a continued supply of new motor vehicles, parts, and accessories. The District Court applied the common meaning of the term and concluded that plaintiff did not generate 50% or more of its revenue from sales of products supplied by defendant, so plaintiff was not substantially reliant on defendant, and therefore no franchise existed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court applied an unnecessarily restrictive and simplistic standard and failed to consider other nonrevenue-based circumstances that potentially impacted on the issue of substantial reliance. The question of whether a franchise existed was reversed and remanded for consideration of nonrevenue as well as revenue-based circumstances. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005), distinguishing Kans. City Trailer Sales v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 1994 WL 49932 (W. Dist. Mo. 1994).

Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Whether Franchise Exists: Plaintiff filed an action under 61-4-210, contending that defendant failed to follow the notice provisions in this section in terminating plaintiff's dealership agreement and that defendant needed to exhaust its administrative remedies before the District Court could obtain subject matter jurisdiction. Defendant contended that the Department of Justice Motor Vehicle Division lacked jurisdiction because the dealer agreement did not constitute a franchise, so the administrative and notice provisions did not apply. The Supreme Court noted that a vehicle dealer that believes that its agreement with a manufacturer, distributor, or importer constitutes a franchise and that the notice requirements have not been complied with may bring a direct action in District Court pursuant to 61-4-210 for violation of the notice requirement. That is what plaintiff did. However, an action under 61-4-210 is not connected to the administrative contested case proceedings provided for in 61-4-206 and this section and does not require a party to initiate and exhaust administrative proceedings prior to bringing the action. Thus, the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction over the question of whether a franchise agreement existed between the parties. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005).

Effect of Department Failure to Mail Termination Notice: The Department of Business Regulation (functions now handled by Department of Justice) must, within 5 days of the receipt of notice to terminate a franchise from the franchiser, send a copy of the notice to the franchisee and any other person entitled to notice. Once this notice is received by the franchisee, he may object to the approval of the proposed action by filing written objections with the Department. Here, the Department failed to send out such notice, so the time for filing franchisee's written objections in this case has not commenced to run. State ex rel. Billings Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. v. Dept. of Business Regulation, 36 St. Rep. 151 (1979) (not reported in Montana Reports).

Amendment effective January 1, 2004.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 221 in (4), near beginning, inserted "or upon objection to the establishment of a new motor vehicle dealership", after "continue" inserted "or not establish", and deleted former last sentence that read: "When there is an objection to the establishment of a new motor vehicle dealership, the burden of proof that good cause does exist shall be with the franchisor"; inserted (9) requiring agreement to continue in effect until remedies are exhausted and requiring franchisor to comply with agreement and law; and made minor changes in style. Improper Federal Court Jurisdiction and Review of State Agency Decision: Ford Motor Company sought to terminate an automobile dealer franchise, and the franchise holder sought a Montana Department of Justice administrative hearing under 61-4-206. The Department's decision in favor of Ford was appealed to a Montana District Court under 2-4-702. Ford successfully removed the case to the United States District Court, which reversed the Department's decision and rendered judgment in favor of Ford. The franchise holder appealed. The Montana procedure clearly provided for state District Court appellate review, not de novo review, of the administrative agency decision. Therefore, the federal District Court had neither original jurisdiction nor removal jurisdiction over review of the administrative agency decision. The removal to the federal District Court was error. The federal District Court's reversal of the administrative agency decision and rendering of judgment in favor of Ford were also in error. The judgment was vacated, and the case was remanded to the federal District Court for further remand by it to the state District Court. Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 120 F3d 196 (9th Cir. 1997), overruled in BNSF Railway Co. v. O'Dea, 572 F3d 785 (9th Cir. 2009).

Sale of Automobile Franchise — Error in Failure to Resolve Mootness as Threshold Issue Before Underlying Dispute Addressed: Ford Motor Company (Ford) notified franchisee Shamrock Motors (Shamrock) that it intended to terminate Shamrock's automobile dealer franchise because Shamrock had sold 80% of its stock without Ford's knowledge or consent, which violated their franchise agreement. The Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of Justice issued a ruling that Ford had good cause, so Shamrock filed for judicial review in the District Court. Ford then removed to federal court, where the ruling was reversed, so Ford appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court. Shamrock then sold the dealership, and the decision was vacated because of lack of jurisdiction. The case was remanded to state court, where Ford moved to dismiss for mootness. The District Court denied the motion without discussion and ruled for Shamrock, concluding that the franchise could not be terminated as a result of the sale of 80% of the franchise stock. Reversing on appeal, the Supreme Court cited Adkins v. Livingston, 121 M 528, 194 P2d 238 (1948), in holding that mootness is a threshold issue that must be dealt with before the underlying dispute may be addressed. A matter is moot when, because of an event or happening, the issue has ceased to exist and no longer presents an actual controversy. A question is moot when a court cannot grant effective relief. If the parties cannot be restored to their original position, an appeal becomes moot. When Shamrock chose to sell the franchise during the appellate process, the question of whether Ford had good cause to terminate the franchise in the first instance became academic and thus moot. The District Court erred when it did not resolve the issue of mootness before addressing the merits of the claim, not recognizing that once Shamrock sold the dealership and was no longer the franchisee, there was no effective relief that the court could fashion under Title 61, ch. 4, part 2, so the appeal from the Motor Vehicle Division's ruling should have been dismissed as moot. Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150, 56 St. Rep. 99 (1999), followed in Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Motion to Amend Judgment Inappropriate When Testimony and Evidence Available in Original Proceedings: Plaintiff moved to alter or amend a summary judgment order based on affidavits and evidence regarding whether a franchise existed between the parties. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The affidavits and evidence were not considered newly discovered or previously unavailable, and plaintiff failed to establish that the District Court had the evidence available during the original proceeding, so a motion to alter or amend the judgment was inappropriate. Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Whether Franchise Exists: Plaintiff filed an action under this section, contending that defendant failed to follow the notice provisions in 61-4-205 in terminating plaintiff's dealership agreement and that defendant needed to exhaust its administrative remedies before the District Court could obtain subject matter jurisdiction. Defendant contended that the Department of Justice Motor Vehicle Division lacked jurisdiction because the dealer agreement did not constitute a franchise, so the administrative and notice provisions did not apply. The Supreme Court noted that a vehicle dealer that believes that its agreement with a manufacturer, distributor, or importer constitutes a franchise and that the notice requirements have not been complied with may bring a direct action in District Court pursuant to this section for violation of the notice requirement. Case Notes

If the Motor Home Is Rockin' — Reasonable Attempts to Remedy Vehicle Problem — Lemon Law Applicable: Defendant manufacturer contended that the Montana Lemon Law did not apply because plaintiffs failed to make a reasonable number of attempts to fix a swaying and handling problem with their motor home prior to expiration of the warranty period. Evidence at trial showed that plaintiffs repeatedly delivered the motor home to dealerships for repair and complained of the swaying problem, but that dealers refused to attempt to repair or even document the problem in a work order because they viewed it as a problem for which the chassis manufacturer was responsible. Despite a lack of documentation of attempted repairs, the jury found plaintiffs' testimony credible, and the Supreme Court affirmed that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to find that plaintiffs had made a reasonable number of attempts to have the vehicle problem remedied, so the requirement of this section was satisfied. Case Notes

Grounds for Investigative Stop of Vehicle — Knowledge Owner Is Unlicensed Is Sufficient — No Need to Determine Owner Not Licensed Elsewhere: To make an investigative stop of a pickup, the officer needed only a reasonable or particularized suspicion, based on objective data, that an offense was being committed. After the officer observed that a pickup was oscillating between 50 and 60 miles an hour on a freeway and that the plate was new and shiny, in contrast to the rest of the pickup, he had dispatch do a license check and was informed that the pickup owner's license was expired. Knowledge that the pickup owner's license was expired was enough to validate the officer's stop of the pickup because it gave the officer a particularized suspicion that an offense was being committed. The officer did not have to also ascertain, before the stop, that the pickup owner did not have a valid license from another state. St. v. Hatler, 2001 MT 38, 304 M 211, 19 P3d 822A (2001).

Licensing Drivers — Legitimate Exercise of Police Power of State — Ability to Drive on Public Roads Not Fundamental Right: Requiring drivers to be licensed by the state is a justifiable, reasonable, and desirable exercise of the police power of the state. The ability to drive a motor vehicle on a public highway is not a fundamental right. The right to travel granted by the state and federal constitutions is separate from the right or privilege to operate a motor vehicle on the public highways and does not include the ability to ignore the laws governing the use of the public highways. St. v. Skurdal, 235 M 291, 767 P2d 304, 45 St. Rep. 2394 (1988).

Constitutionality: Enforcement of the provisions of this section requiring a valid driver's license is not a violation of constitutional rights. Billings v. Skurdal, 224 M 84, 730 P2d 371, 43 St. Rep. 2036 (1986).

Case Notes

Liability of Parent for Child's Alleged Negligent Driving — Theories of Negligent Entrustment and Vicarious Liability Under Family Purpose Doctrine Rejected: Following a car accident, the plaintiffs sued both the teenage driver (defendant) for negligence and her mother for negligent entrustment and vicarious liability under the family purpose doctrine. The District Court granted the mother summary judgment after analyzing the three elements in Crisafulli v. Bass, 2001 MT 316, 308 Mont. 40, 38 P.3d 842, and concluding that there was no evidence to establish that the mother should have known that her daughter was an incompetent driver. The District Court also rejected the application of the family purpose doctrine. A jury subsequently found that the defendant was not negligent. On appeal, the plaintiffs claimed the District Court had erred in granting the mother summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the defendant had never received any traffic citations and had never been involved in an accident. Therefore, the plaintiffs failed to meet their burden of proof that the mother should have known that her daughter was an incompetent driver or would drive in a manner that would create an unreasonable risk to others. Similarly, the Supreme Court rejected the application of the family purpose doctrine in this case as there was no agency relationship between the mother and daughter. A family relationship alone will not satisfy the agency relationship for applying the family purpose doctrine. Styren Farms, Inc. v. Roos, 2011 MT 299, 363 Mont. 41, 265 P.3d 1230.

Denial of Montana Driver's License Based on Suspension of Driving Privileges in Michigan: In Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001), the Supreme Court held that the Department of Motor Vehicles had to accept Chain's driver's license application but could still choose to deny Chain a license after completing an investigation. Chain then applied for a Montana driver's license, but after an investigation, the application was denied because Chain had been convicted in Michigan of twice operating a vehicle under the influence of liquor, twice having an unlawful bodily alcohol content while driving, driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license five times, and refusing to be tested for intoxication five times. In total, Michigan authorities took 16 separate actions against Chain's driving privileges, including five suspensions, two revocations and nine denial/revocations, resulting in suspension of Chain's Michigan driving privileges until 2022. Chain filed an action in District Court requesting that he be issued a driver's license, but the District Court denied Chain's claim on grounds that Chain could not receive a license in Montana when his driving privileges were suspended or revoked elsewhere. Chain appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Giving Chain's Michigan suspensions and revocations the same force and effect as if they were committed in Montana, the state was within its discretion to deny Chain a license. Chain v. Motor Vehicle Div., 2004 MT 216, 322 M 381, 96 P3d 1135 (2004).

Driver's License Application Allowed One Year After Suspension or Revocation — Department's Discretionary Power to Issue License: Before moving to Montana, Chain lived in Michigan, where he was convicted of DUI on at least four separate occasions, which resulted in suspension or revocation of his driving privileges. Once here, Chain attempted to apply for a Montana driver's license, but the Department of Motor Vehicles cited this section and refused to let him apply because his driving privileges were still suspended or revoked in Michigan. Chain requested that the District Court order the Department to allow the application and to issue a license if all the application requirements were met, but the request was denied. Chain argued on appeal that the Department should have instead applied 61-5-208, which limits revocations or suspensions to 1 year and allows application for a new license at the end of that period. Chain also cited the Driver License Compact in 61-5-401 as support for the proposition that he should have an opportunity to reapply 1 year after revocation. The Supreme Court noted nothing in the record to indicate whether Michigan was a member of the Compact and thus declined to apply 61-5-401, but the court found Montana licensing statutes to be dispositive. The court agreed that this section prohibits issuance of a license if driving privileges are still suspended or revoked but found nothing in the statutes that disallowed application for a license. Under 61-5-107, after receiving an application, the Department should have requested a copy of Chain's driving record from Michigan and then analyzed it in the same manner as if it had been amassed in Montana. Once 1 year had passed after Chain's revocation or suspension, he could apply for a license like any other citizen in similar circumstances, as provided in 61-5-208, and after investigation, the Department had the discretionary power whether or not to issue a license. Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001).

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in

PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 364 in (3) inserted second sentence allowing the transmission of a driving record manually or electronically; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 364, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to a person who, on or after October 1, 1995, applies for a Montana driver's license or who seeks to renew a Montana driver's license that expires on or after October 1, 1995."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 195 near beginning of (1), after "driver's license", deleted "commercial vehicle operator's endorsement"; and made minor changes in style.

Denial of Montana Driver's License Based on Suspension of Driving Privileges in Michigan: In Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001), the Supreme Court held that the Department of Motor Vehicles had to accept Chain's driver's license application but could still choose to deny Chain a license after completing an investigation. Chain then applied for a Montana driver's license, but after an investigation, the application was denied because Chain had been convicted in Michigan of twice operating a vehicle under the influence of liquor, twice having an unlawful bodily alcohol content while driving, driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license five times, and refusing to be tested for intoxication five times. In total, Michigan authorities took 16 separate actions against Chain's driving privileges, including five suspensions, two revocations and nine denial/revocations, resulting in suspension of Chain's Michigan driving privileges until 2022. Chain filed an action in District Court requesting that he be issued a driver's license, but the District Court denied Chain's claim on grounds that Chain could not receive a license in Montana when his driving privileges were suspended or revoked elsewhere. Chain appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Giving Chain's Michigan suspensions and revocations the same force and effect as if they were committed in Montana, the state was within its discretion to deny Chain a license. Chain v. Motor Vehicle Div., 2004 MT 216, 322 M 381, 96 P3d 1135 (2004).

Driver's License Application Allowed One Year After Suspension or Revocation — Department's Discretionary Power to Issue License: Before moving to Montana, Chain lived in Michigan, where he was convicted of DUI on at least four separate occasions, which resulted in suspension or revocation of his driving privileges. Once here, Chain attempted to apply for a Montana driver's license, but the Department of Motor Vehicles cited 61-5-105 and refused to let him apply because his driving privileges were still suspended or revoked in Michigan. Chain requested that the District Court order the Department to allow the application and to issue a license if all the application requirements were met, but the request was denied. Chain argued on appeal that the Department should have instead applied 61-5-208, which limits revocations or suspensions to 1 year and allows application for a new license at the end of that period. Chain also cited the Driver License Compact in 61-5-401 as support for the proposition that he should have an opportunity to reapply 1 year after revocation. The Supreme Court noted nothing in the record to indicate whether Michigan was a member of the Compact and thus declined to apply 61-5-401, but the court found Montana licensing statutes to be dispositive. The court agreed that 61-5-105 prohibits issuance of a license if driving privileges are still suspended or revoked but found nothing in the statutes that disallowed application for a license. Under this section, after receiving an application, the Department should have requested a copy of Chain's driving record from Michigan and then analyzed it in the same manner as if it had been amassed in Montana. Once 1 year had passed after Chain's revocation or suspension, he could apply for a license like any other citizen in similar circumstances, as provided in 61-5-208, and after investigation, the Department had the discretionary power whether or not to issue a license. Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001).

61-5-108. Application of minors — imputed liability.

Compiler's Comments

Applicability: Section 25, Ch. 309, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to license applications, renewals, and reexaminations submitted after September 30, 1999."

1991 Amendment: In (1), near middle after "oaths", inserted "or an employee of the department", substituted "a parent" for "both the father and mother", after "applicant" substituted "or, if none is available" for former language regarding surviving parent, person having custody, or employer, and after "responsible" substituted "adult" for "person"; in (2), near end after "misconduct", inserted reference to liability when a liability policy is in effect for the minor and deleted reference to subsection (3); deleted former (3) excepting a parent or guardian from liability for a minor upon acceptance of proof of deposit of financial responsibility in respect to a vehicle owned or operated by the minor; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Standard of Care of Licensed Minor Driver: It was error for the District Court to give an instruction in a pedestrian/automobile accident case stating that a child is not held to the same standard of care as an adult. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that a 16-year-old with a valid Montana driver's license is held to the same standard of care while driving an automobile as an adult in the same circumstances. Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988).

Minor's Driver's License Application — Time for Deposit of Proof of Financial Responsibility: Under 61-5-108, a parent, parents, guardian, or other responsible person may sign a minor's driver's license application and deposit proof of financial responsibility "in form and in amounts as required under the motor vehicle financial responsibility laws" and thereby escape imputation to them of the minor's negligence. This does not require the proof to be deposited when the minor's application is filed. From the time proof is deposited there is no imputed negligence, whether the deposit is before, in conjunction with, or after the filing of the minor's application, so long as insurance is in effect at the time of a given accident. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986).

When Liability Not Imputed to Signers: Under appellant's construction of this section, if a parent or guardian signs the application and provides proof of financial responsibility, then liability is not imputed to that parent or guardian. However, if both parents or some other responsible person signs and provides proof, he is still subject to imputed liability. This is not a reasonable construction, as is shown by the title of the enacting session law chapter, and would not be adopted. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986).

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: (Temporary version) Chapter 53 in (1), in second sentence after "eyesight", inserted "a knowledge test examining", after "signs" deleted "regulating, warning, and directing traffic", and after "state" inserted exception clause and inserted fourth sentence waiving the knowledge and road tests or the skills test for an applicant who works in a farm-related service industry; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) Within 90 days of receipt of an application for a commercial driver's license, the department shall give an examination to the applicant in the county where the applicant resides"; near middle of second sentence of (2) substituted "knowledge test and the road test or the skills test" for "written examination and actual demonstration of the operation of a motor vehicle"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment terminates September 30, 1999.

(Version effective October 1, 1999) Chapter 53 in (1), in second sentence after "eyesight", inserted "a knowledge test examining", after "signs" deleted "regulating, warning, and directing traffic", and after "state, and" substituted "a road test or a skills test demonstrating the applicant's" for "must include an actual demonstration of" and inserted fourth sentence waiving the knowledge and road tests or the skills test for an applicant who works in a farm-related service industry; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) Within 90 days of receipt of an application for a commercial driver's license, the department shall give an examination to the applicant in the county where the applicant resides"; near middle of second sentence of (2) substituted "knowledge test and the road test or the skills test" for "written examination and actual demonstration of the operation of a motor vehicle"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

In both versions, the amendments in (2) were rendered void by sec. 9, Ch. 364, L. 1995, a coordination section.

Chapter 364 in (1), in second sentence after "eyesight", inserted "a knowledge test examining" and after "signs" deleted "regulating, warning, and directing traffic" and inserted fourth sentence allowing waiver of the knowledge test or road test under certain circumstances; inserted (2) allowing certification of certain state-approved high school traffic education courses; in (3), at end of first sentence, inserted "successful completion of a vision examination, and, if requested by the examiner, completion of either the knowledge test or road test, or both" and at beginning of second sentence substituted "In addition, a resident surrendering a commercial driver's license issued by another state shall successfully complete" for "A resident who obtains a Montana driver's license in this manner is exempt from the written examination and actual demonstration of the operation of a motor vehicle provided for in subsection (1) but is not exempt from the eyesight test or, in the case of commercial drivers" and at end inserted "before being issued a commercial driver's license by the department"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 12, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 364, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to a person who, on or after October 1, 1995, applies for a Montana driver's license or who seeks to renew a Montana driver's license that expires on or after October 1, 1995."

House Bill No. 248 was approved April 12, 1995, as Ch. 364, L. 1995; therefore, the amendments to subsection (2) of 61-5-110 in Ch. 53, L. 1995, are void.

Case Notes

No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Mistrial Based on Jury Selection Process Involving Combined List of Potential Jurors: Under 3-15-402 and 61-5-127, a list that included licensed drivers as well as registered voters was to be provided by the Secretary of State to the Clerk of the District Court of each county for the exclusive purpose of making a list of persons to serve as trial jurors during the ensuring year. The term "ensuing year" was not defined. The District Court concluded that the Legislature intended that the first combined jury list would be provided to Clerks of Court on or before the first Monday of May 2008 and that the Clerk of Court would use the combined list to prepare the annual jury panel for calendar year 2009. Norquay contended that the combined list should have been used to draw the jury in his trial in September 2008 and that failure to do so necessitated a mistrial. The Supreme Court held that the term "ensuing year" was ambiguous and that Norquay failed to carry the burden of demonstrating that the District Court abused its discretion in interpreting the statutory scheme and in denying his motion for a mistrial. The District Court was affirmed. St. v. Norquay, 2010 MT 85, 356 Mont. 113, 233 P.3d 768.

61-5-128. Legislative finding and direction to state agency not to implement REAL ID Act.

Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 198, L. 2007, provided: "WHEREAS, in May 2005, the U.S. Congress enacted the REAL ID Act of 2005 (REAL ID Act) as part of the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Tsunami Relief Act (Public Law 109-13), which was signed by President Bush on May 11, 2005, and which becomes fully effective May 11, 2008; and

WHEREAS, some of the requirements of the REAL ID Act are that states shall:

(1) issue a driver's license or state identification card in a uniform format, containing uniform information, all as prescribed by the Department of Homeland Security;

(2) verify the issuance, validity, and completeness of all primary documents used to issue a driver's license, such as those showing that the bearer is a U.S. citizen or a lawful alien, a lawful refugee, or a person holding a valid visa;

(3) provide for secure storage of all primary documents that are used to issue a federally approved driver's license or state identification card;

(4) provide fraudulent document recognition training to all persons engaged in issuing driver's licenses or state identification cards; and

(5) issue a driver's license or state identification card in a prescribed format if it is a license or card that does not meet the criteria provided for a federally approved license or identification card; and

WHEREAS, use of the federal minimum standards for state driver's licenses and state-issued identification cards will be necessary for any type of federally regulated activity for which an identification card must be displayed, including flying in a commercial airplane, making transactions with a federally licensed bank, entering a federal building, or making application for federally supported public assistance benefits, including Social Security; and

WHEREAS, some of the intended privacy requirements of the REAL ID Act, such as the use of common machine-readable technology and state maintenance of a database that can be shared with the United States and agencies of other states, may actually make it more likely that a federally required driver's license or state identification card, or the information about the bearer on which the license or card is based, will be stolen, sold, or otherwise used for purposes that were never intended or that are criminally related than if the REAL ID Act had not been enacted; and

WHEREAS, these potential breaches in privacy that could result directly from compliance with the REAL ID Act may violate the right to privacy, as secured by Article II, section 10, of the Montana Constitution, of thousands of residents of Montana; and

WHEREAS, the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, the National Governors' Association, and the National Conference of State Legislatures have estimated, in an impact analysis dated September 2006, that the cost to the states to implement the REAL ID Act will be more than $11 billion over 5 years, and the Motor Vehicle Division of the Montana Department of Justice has estimated that the implementation of the REAL ID Act will cost Montana $2,660,000 to fully implement the Act, none of which costs are or will be paid for by the federal government; and

WHEREAS, for all of these reasons, the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, the National Governors' Association, and the National Conference of State Legislatures, in a letter dated March 17, 2005, to the majority and minority leaders of the U.S. Senate, opposed the adoption of the REAL ID Act, but the opposition of those groups, and the groups' request that Congress rely on driver's license security provisions already passed by Congress in the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004, was largely ignored by Congress; and

WHEREAS, the regulations that are to be adopted by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security to implement the requirements of the REAL ID Act have yet to be adopted and, in reality, will probably not become effective until the spring of 2007, effectively giving the states only 1 year in which to become familiar with the implementing regulations and comply with those regulations and the requirements of the REAL ID Act; and

WHEREAS, the mandate to the states, through federal legislation that provides no funding for its requirements, to issue what is, in effect, a national identification card appears to be an attempt to "commandeer" the political machinery of the states and to require them to be agents of the federal government, in violation of the principles of federalism contained in the 10th amendment to the U.S. Constitution, as construed by the United States Supreme Court in New York v. United States, 488 U.S. 1041 (1992), United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995), and Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898 (1997); and

WHEREAS, some states, or legislative bodies in some states, such as New Hampshire and Washington, have, through legislation, opposed the implementation of the REAL ID Act.

THEREFORE, the purpose of the Legislature in enacting [this act] is to refuse to implement the REAL ID Act and thereby protest the treatment by Congress and the President of the states as agents of the federal government and, by that protest, lead other state legislatures and Governors to reject the treatment by the federal government of the 50 states by the enactment of the REAL ID Act."

Part 2
Revocation, Suspension, or Cancellation of Licenses

Part Case Notes

Driver's License — Property Interest, Not Right — Revocation Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment: Revocation of driver's license under habitual traffic offender's law is civil in nature, and the due process standards are not as strict as in criminal actions. The law's predispositional court hearing satisfies due process rights, and a postdispositional hearing is not necessary. Licensing drivers is within the police power of the state, and the fact that the law gives a judge no discretion to determine who is a habitual traffic offender or the consequences of being one does not constitute cruel or unusual punishment. State ex rel. Majerus v. Carter, 214 M 272, 693 P2d 501, 41 St. Rep. 2468 (1984).

Case Notes

Officer's Suspension of License Advice to Nonresident Driver Refusing Alcohol Testing Not Misleading — Motion to Suppress Test Results Denied: Following an arrest for DUI, Simmons, a Nevada resident, was informed by the arresting officer that failure to comply with a request for a breath sample would result in possible seizure or suspension of his Nevada driver's license. In a motion to suppress the evidence, Simmons argued that the District Court had erred in denying his motion to suppress the breath test results because, since Montana had no authority to seize or suspend a Nevada license, his consent to the test was invalid because the officer provided erroneous and misleading information about the consequences of refusing testing. Simmons cited a Georgia decision, St. v. Coleman, 455 SE 2d 604 (Ga. App. 1995), in which the Georgia court ruled that informing holders of out-of-state driver's licenses that they will lose driving privileges if they refuse blood alcohol testing constituted misinformation that justifies excluding from evidence any subsequent breath test results. Under Georgia law, drivers must be informed that the penalty for refusing a blood alcohol test is the loss of driving privileges "at least on the highways of this state". In affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court adopted the reasoning of the three-judge minority in Coleman, ruling that the advisory read to Simmons was technically correct in informing him that failure to submit to a blood alcohol test would result in the seizure and suspension of his driver's license. If a person refuses a testing request, Montana law specifically authorizes the Department of Justice to suspend or revoke nonresident driving privileges and to forward the seized license, along with a report of the testing refusal, to the licensing authority of the nonresident's home state. Since by definition a driver's license includes "any nonresident's driving privilege", the advisory read to Simmons informing him that his driver's license would be seized and suspended was technically correct. Case Notes

Driving While Ability Impaired in New York Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — License Suspension Affirmed: Montanye was arrested in New York for driving while impaired, and his driver's license was suspended in Montana under the reciprocal application of the Driver License Compact. Montanye contended that because conviction in New York of driving while impaired requires a lesser degree of intoxication than conviction for driving under the influence in Montana, the offenses are totally dissimilar and suspension of his license was improper. The Supreme Court noted that there were a few differences between the states' statutes, but that both laws deal with a driver's diminished ability to drive while under the influence of alcohol and both provide for suspension of license as punishment and are thus substantially similar. Therefore, the District Court did not err in revoking Montanye's license under Montana law. Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234, 50 St. Rep. 1541 (1993), overruled in St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002). See also St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Case Notes

Validity of Driver Rehabilitation Point System: The driver rehabilitation point system implemented by ARM 23.3.202 is a valid administrative rule expressly authorized by 61-2-302 and impliedly authorized by 61-5-206. The point system increases the fairness of the suspension process, harmonizes with its enabling legislation, and is necessary to effectuate statutory purposes. Bick v. Dept. of Justice, 224 M 455, 730 P2d 418, 43 St. Rep. 2331 (1986).

Administrative Suspension Not to Remove Habitual Offender Points: The Highway Patrol petitioned to have defendant formally declared a habitual traffic offender. The District Court refused, contending that the defendant had accumulated only 11 points since his license had been suspended under 61-5-206. At that time he had 27 habitual offender points. The District Court held that those points were removed by the administrative suspension. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, holding that the removal of points required by 61-11-211 applied only to revocations and not to administrative suspensions. No contrary legislative intent is indicated by the statutes. Suspension of a license under 61-5-206 is a civil proceeding and not a criminal prosecution. The deprivation of the driving privilege under 61-5-206 is intended to protect the public and is not done for the punishment of the individual. The Supreme Court held that the same traffic offense may be used first to suspend a license under 61-5-206, and then to be cumulated with additional points to allow revocation as a habitual offender. State ex rel. Griffith v. Brustkern, 202 M 438, 658 P2d 410, 40 St. Rep. 194 (1983).

Suspension of License Not Punishment: The purpose and nature of the suspension of a driver's license are for the protection of the unsuspecting public and does not constitute "punishment" as understood within the meaning of the law. The Highway Patrol Board can take into consideration past driving violations before a previous suspension of a driver's license in suspending his license again. In re France, 147 M 283, 411 P2d 732 (1966).

Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Style changes were slightly different in the chapters. In each case, the codifier chose appropriate text.

Case Notes

Denial of Montana Driver's License Based on Suspension of Driving Privileges in Michigan: In Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001), the Supreme Court held that the Department of Motor Vehicles had to accept Chain's driver's license application but could still choose to deny Chain a license after completing an investigation. Chain then applied for a Montana driver's license, but after an investigation, the application was denied because Chain had been convicted in Michigan of twice operating a vehicle under the influence of liquor, twice having an unlawful bodily alcohol content while driving, driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license five times, and refusing to be tested for intoxication five times. In total, Michigan authorities took 16 separate actions against Chain's driving privileges, including five suspensions, two revocations and nine denial/revocations, resulting in suspension of Chain's Michigan driving privileges until 2022. Chain filed an action in District Court requesting that he be issued a driver's license, but the District Court denied Chain's claim on grounds that Chain could not receive a license in Montana when his driving privileges were suspended or revoked elsewhere. Chain appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Giving Chain's Michigan suspensions and revocations the same force and effect as if they were committed in Montana, the state was within its discretion to deny Chain a license. Chain v. Motor Vehicle Div., 2004 MT 216, 322 M 381, 96 P3d 1135 (2004).

Driver's License Suspension Limited to One Year When Original Sentence and Suspension Discharged: Following his involvement in a fatal car accident in 1994, Parpart was sentenced to a 2-year prison sentence followed by an 8-year placement in an appropriate program, and Parpart's driver's license was suspended for the entire 10-year period. In 1999, Parpart's sentence was discharged, and he requested reinstatement of his driver's license in 2000, but the request was denied. During the following year, Parpart was twice convicted of driving with a suspended license. The Department of Justice, Motor Vehicle Division, assumed that Parpart's 1994 suspension extended through 2004 and that any subsequent violations required continuation for a like period under 61-5-212, so two additional 10-year suspension periods were added for each violation, extending the suspension to 2024. Parpart challenged the constitutionality of the initial license suspension and the two subsequent license suspensions. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Department, and Parpart appealed. Without addressing the constitutional issues, the Supreme Court held that the sentencing court had the authority to impose the initial license suspension as a condition of the sentence, but once the sentence was discharged in 1999, the suspension was discharged as well. Parpart should have appealed the denial of his request for reinstatement rather than disregarding it and driving without a license, but because the 1994 sentence was discharged, the Department's authority to suspend Parpart's license for each of the subsequent violations was limited to 1 year, pursuant to this section. Thus, because Parpart's two 1-year suspensions would have ended in 2002, Parpart was entitled to reinstatement of driving privileges upon compliance with 61-5-218. Parpart v. Dept. of Justice, 2004 MT 4, 319 M 182, 84 P3d 1 (2004).

Driver's License Application Allowed One Year After Suspension or Revocation — Department's Discretionary Power to Issue License: Before moving to Montana, Chain lived in Michigan, where he was convicted of DUI on at least four separate occasions, which resulted in suspension or revocation of his driving privileges. Once here, Chain attempted to apply for a Montana driver's license, but the Department of Motor Vehicles cited 61-5-105 and refused to let him apply because his driving privileges were still suspended or revoked in Michigan. Chain requested that the District Court order the Department to allow the application and to issue a license if all the application requirements were met, but the request was denied. Chain argued on appeal that the Department should have instead applied this section, which limits revocations or suspensions to 1 year and allows application for a new license at the end of that period. Chain also cited the Driver License Compact in 61-5-401 as support for the proposition that he should have an opportunity to reapply 1 year after revocation. The Supreme Court noted nothing in the record to indicate whether Michigan was a member of the Compact and thus declined to apply 61-5-401, but the court found Montana licensing statutes to be dispositive. The court agreed that 61-5-105 prohibits issuance of a license if driving privileges are still suspended or revoked but found nothing in the statutes that disallowed application for a license. Under 61-5-107, after receiving an application, the Department should have requested a copy of Chain's driving record from Michigan and then analyzed it in the same manner as if it had been amassed in Montana. Once 1 year had passed after Chain's revocation or suspension, he could apply for a license like any other citizen in similar circumstances, as provided in this section, and after investigation, the Department had the discretionary power whether or not to issue a license. Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001).

License Revocation — DUI and BAC Synonymous: In August 1983, petitioner was convicted of DUI in violation of 61-8-401. In November 1984, petitioner was convicted of a BAC violation under 61-8-406. The Motor Vehicle Division revoked petitioner's driver's license for 1 year for a second offense within 5 years. Petitioner argued that the license should be revoked for only 6 months because one BAC plus one DUI is not equal to a second offense under 61-5-208. The Supreme Court agreed with the state's contention that although the criminal statutes defining DUI and BAC are different, the concern here is only with the civil penalty of revocation of a driver's license, and the statute is clear. For purposes of license revocation, DUI and BAC are synonymous and a 1-year revocation is required in this case. Additionally, 61-5-208 is not void for vagueness. Horton v. St., 221 M 233, 717 P2d 1108, 43 St. Rep. 772 (1986), followed in Dewart v. St., 254 M 215, 835 P2d 769, 49 St. Rep. 706 (1992).

Case Notes

Suspended License Remains Suspended After Expiration: Driver was properly charged with driving while her license was suspended or revoked since she never paid the required reinstatement fees and thus her license remained suspended, despite the fact her license had expired due to the passage of time. St. v. Bessette, 2008 MT 346, 346 M 300, 195 P3d 311 (2008).

Improper to Convict of Driving With Suspended or Revoked License When Driver Never Licensed: Several drivers who never possessed a license or who had not possessed a valid license in recent years challenged their convictions of driving with suspended or revoked licenses, arguing that the state must first have granted the privilege to drive before they could be charged under this section. The Supreme Court agreed. Under the plain language of the statute, a person must possess a privilege to drive before that privilege can be suspended or revoked. The state could have charged the drivers of driving without a license under 61-5-307, but charges brought under this section were improper, and the court reversed with orders to vacate the sentences. (See 2007 amendment.) Billings v. Gonzales, 2006 MT 24, 331 M 71, 128 P3d 1014 (2006).

Erratic Driving and Occupants Switching Drivers — Sufficient Particularized Suspicion to Justify Investigative Stop: The fact that an officer observed that the occupants had switched drivers during the time that the officer lost sight of a vehicle and that the vehicle was driving in the center of a gravel road constituted a sufficient particularized suspicion under the totality of the circumstances, including the officer's 27 years of experience, to warrant an investigative stop. St. v. Britt, 2005 MT 101, 327 M 1, 111 P3d 217 (2005).

Driver's License Suspension Limited to One Year When Original Sentence and Suspension Discharged: Following his involvement in a fatal car accident in 1994, Parpart was sentenced to a 2-year prison sentence followed by an 8-year placement in an appropriate program, and Parpart's driver's license was suspended for the entire 10-year period. In 1999, Parpart's sentence was discharged, and he requested reinstatement of his driver's license in 2000, but the request was denied. During the following year, Parpart was twice convicted of driving with a suspended license. The Department of Justice, Motor Vehicle Division, assumed that Parpart's 1994 suspension extended through 2004 and that any subsequent violations required continuation for a like period under this section, so two additional 10-year suspension periods were added for each violation, extending the suspension to 2024. Parpart challenged the constitutionality of the initial license suspension and the two subsequent license suspensions. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Department, and Parpart appealed. Without addressing the constitutional issues, the Supreme Court held that the sentencing court had the authority to impose the initial license suspension as a condition of the sentence, but once the sentence was discharged in 1999, the suspension was discharged as well. Parpart should have appealed the denial of his request for reinstatement rather than disregarding it and driving without a license, but because the 1994 sentence was discharged, the Department's authority to suspend Parpart's license for each of the subsequent violations was limited to 1 year, pursuant to 61-5-208. Thus, because Parpart's two 1-year suspensions would have ended in 2002, Parpart was entitled to reinstatement of driving privileges upon compliance with 61-5-218. Parpart v. Dept. of Justice, 2004 MT 4, 319 M 182, 84 P3d 1 (2004).

Payment of Child Support Improper Condition of Sentence for Felony DUI — Victim and Correlation to Underlying Offense Necessary for Imposition of Restitution: Horton was arrested for DUI, and a search of his driving record revealed nine prior DUI convictions. A further search showed that Horton also owed more than $47,000 in back child support. Horton was charged with felony DUI, with driving with a suspended or revoked license, as a habitual traffic offender operating a motor vehicle, and with felony nonsupport. By plea agreement, Horton agreed to plead guilty to the traffic offenses in exchange for dismissal of the nonsupport charge. The plea agreement stated that the state would recommend a 13-month sentence to be served in prerelease, followed by 4 years of probation, and, as a condition of the probationary sentence, provided that Horton would also make regular child support payments plus an additional sum monthly toward the support arrearage. As set out in the agreement, Horton pleaded guilty to the traffic offenses, and the nonsupport charge was dismissed. At sentencing, the habitual traffic offender charge was subsequently dismissed for failure of the state to prove that a valid habitual offender designation was in place at the time of the offense, and in addition, Horton's counsel objected to the court ordering payment of any child support arrearage, arguing that because the nonsupport charge had been dismissed, Horton would be paying restitution on a count for which he had not been convicted. Nevertheless, the court ordered Horton to pay support and promised to revoke his probation and sentence him to 4 years in prison with no parole if support was not paid. On appeal, Horton argued that the District Court abused its discretion and exceeded statutory mandates when it required him to pay restitution for an offense that was dismissed, citing St. v. Brown, 263 M 223, 867 P2d 1098 (1994), for the position that restitution is statutorily limited to the victim of the crime and that because there was no victim who sustained pecuniary or economic loss as a result of the felony DUI or driving with a suspended or revoked license, restitution was inappropriate. The state argued that Horton was attempting to receive the benefit of the plea agreement—having the felony nonsupport charge dismissed—without holding up his end of the bargain by paying child support. The Supreme Court noted that a plea agreement is subject to contract law and that the court will not assist a defendant in escaping the obligations of a plea agreement once its benefits are received. However, the court also pointed out that a District Court's authority to impose sentences in criminal cases is defined and constrained by statute. The statutory authority for payment of restitution is in 46-18-201, which limits payment of restitution to the victim of a crime for which a defendant is convicted, and because Horton was not convicted of nonsupport, there was no victim to whom Horton could be ordered to pay restitution. The state also contended that ordering Horton to pay child support was proper because under 46-18-202(1), a sentencing court may impose any condition reasonably related to the objectives of rehabilitation and the protection of the victim and society. The Supreme Court noted that under St. v. Ommundson, 1999 MT 16, 293 M 133, 974 P2d 620 (1999), a sentencing condition must have some correlation or connection to the underlying offense, but there was no correlation or connection between Horton's conviction for DUI and ordering him to pay child support. Thus, the Supreme Court ordered that the portion of Horton's sentence requiring payment of child support be stricken. St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), followed in St. v. Setters, 2001 MT 101, 305 M 253, 25 P3d 893 (2001).

Officer's Knowledge of Vehicle Owner's Revoked License Sufficient Basis for Suspicion of Criminal Activity to Warrant Stopping Vehicle: Deputy Keintz observed a vehicle displaying a distinctive personalized license plate being driven by a female south of Missoula. The officer recognized the license plate, recalled the prior arrest and license suspension of the vehicle owner, and initiated a traffic stop. Halvorson was the owner and driver of the vehicle and was ticketed for driving with a suspended license. On appeal, Halvorson contended that the officer did not have sufficient information to form a particularized suspicion that the occupant of the vehicle was or had been engaged in criminal activity to justify stopping the vehicle. Applying the criteria in St. v. Gopher, 193 M 189, 631 P2d 293 (1981), the Supreme Court followed St. v. Pike, 551 NW 2d 919 (Minn. 1996), in holding that an officer's knowledge that the owner of a vehicle has a revoked driver's license is enough to form the basis of a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity when the officer observes the vehicle being driven, as long as the officer remains unaware of any facts that would render unreasonable an assumption that the owner is driving the vehicle. St. v. Halvorson, 2000 MT 56, 299 M 1, 997 P2d 751, 57 St. Rep. 270 (2000), followed in Billings v. Costa, 2006 MT 181, 333 M 84, 140 P3d 1070 (2006). Costa was followed in St. v. Neil, 2009 MT 128, 350 M 268, 207 P3d 296 (2009).

Requirement of Payment of Reinstatement Fee Not Violation of Ex Post Facto Law: Cooney argued that under the law as it existed prior to 1989, the revoked status of his license would have been removed whether or not he paid any fee when his license expired by its own terms and that therefore the application of the new law requiring payment of a fee before the revoked status of a license may be changed was an ex post facto violation as applied to him. The Supreme Court held that the application of the law did not violate the ban on ex post facto legislation because it did not change the legal consequences of Cooney's prior conduct and that in addition, the 1989 amendment was intended to clarify that a period of revocation continues until a defendant pays the required fee. St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891, 54 St. Rep. 967 (1997).

Reasonable Time for Preliminary Examination or Leave to File Information — Time for Commencement of "Reasonable Time" — Higley Clarified: McElderry was arrested on October 14 for DUI, fifth offense; reckless driving; and driving while her license was revoked. On October 16, she made her initial appearance in Lake County Justice's Court and was charged by complaint with the offenses for which she was arrested. On October 25, the state filed a motion in District Court for leave to file an information. The motion was granted on October 28, and an information was filed the same day. On October 29, McElderry filed a motion in District Court to dismiss the charges, arguing that 46-10-105, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in St. v. Higley, 190 M 412, 621 P2d 1043 (1980), required that a determination of probable cause be made within 10 days after a defendant's initial appearance. The District Court dismissed the information, reasoning that the state failed to hold a preliminary examination in Justice's Court or to obtain leave from the District Court to file the information within the reasonable time required by 46-10-105. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in calculating the reasonable time as beginning with the time of McElderry's arrest because the plain language of 46-10-105 requires that the period be calculated from the date of initial appearance of the defendant. The Supreme Court therefore recalculated the total delay at 12 days, rather than 14 days. The Supreme Court further explained that its use of the 10-day time period in Higley was intended to mean that the 10-day period at issue in that case was not unreasonable but was not intended to limit the period of reasonable time to 10 days in all cases. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in interpreting Higley to apply a 10-day limitation in every case. Because the District Court erred in determining the start of the reasonable time and in applying Higley, the Supreme Court held that a new time must be calculated. However, the Supreme Court was unable to tell how the District Court would properly apply its discretion in redetermining a reasonable time and therefore vacated the judgment of the District Court and remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's opinion. St. v. McElderry, 284 M 365, 944 P2d 230, 54 St. Rep. 922 (1997), followed in St. v. Robison, 2003 MT 198, 317 M 19, 75 P3d 301 (2003).

Constitutionality of Statute Requiring Mandatory Suspension of Driver's License for Failure to Appear or Pay Fine — Matthews Applied: Pyette was fined $270 in Justice's Court for traffic violations and entered a time-pay contract that allowed monthly payments. If the payments were not made, Pyette was advised that indefinite suspension of the driver's license would occur until payments were made and a reinstatement fee was paid. Pyette made two payments but not the remainder of the payments. A second notice was sent to Pyette stating that action was required within 10 days or the license would be suspended. Pyette did nothing and was notified that the driver's license was suspended pursuant to this section for failure to pay the fine, but the notice stated that the license could be reinstated upon the payment of fees if Pyette appeared before the court. Again, Pyette did nothing. About 6 months later, Pyette was stopped for speeding and cited for driving with a suspended license. Pyette moved to dismiss the driving-with-suspended-license charge on grounds that this section was unconstitutional on its face for failure to provide for a hearing prior to license suspension in violation of due process. The District Court agreed and ordered the Justice's Court to dismiss the charge. The state appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the statute was presumed constitutional and that the burden was on Pyette to prove otherwise. Once issued, a driver's license becomes a property interest that may not be suspended or revoked without procedural due process. Challenges to statutes based on a violation of due process rest on lack of notice and may be overcome when reasonable persons are advised what must be done to avoid a certain result. If a person of ordinary intelligence is given fair notice of what is required to forestall an adverse result from the application of a statute, the statute is not unconstitutionally vague. Under Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 US 319 (1976), when the adequacy of notice of a proposed action is given pursuant to a statute providing for the revocation of a driver's license, three factors are considered: (1) the private interest that will be affected by the official action; (2) the risk of erroneous deprivation of the interest through the procedure used and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute safeguards; and (3) the government's interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that additional or substitute procedures would entail. In this case, the Matthews test was met. The notice provided to Pyette that the license was to be suspended if Pyette did not appear before the court, although not perfect, was sufficient to satisfy due process. The Supreme Court reversed. St. v. Pyette, 2007 MT 119, 337 M 265, 159 P3d 232 (2007).

Driver's License Suspension Limited to One Year When Original Sentence and Suspension Discharged: Following his involvement in a fatal car accident in 1994, Parpart was sentenced to a 2-year prison sentence followed by an 8-year placement in an appropriate program, and Parpart's driver's license was suspended for the entire 10-year period. In 1999, Parpart's sentence was discharged, and he requested reinstatement of his driver's license in 2000, but the request was denied. During the following year, Parpart was twice convicted of driving with a suspended license. The Department of Justice, Motor Vehicle Division, assumed that Parpart's 1994 suspension extended through 2004 and that any subsequent violations required continuation for a like period under 61-5-212, so two additional 10-year suspension periods were added for each violation, extending the suspension to 2024. Parpart challenged the constitutionality of the initial license suspension and the two subsequent license suspensions. The District Court granted summary judgment for the Department, and Parpart appealed. Without addressing the constitutional issues, the Supreme Court held that the sentencing court had the authority to impose the initial license suspension as a condition of the sentence, but once the sentence was discharged in 1999, the suspension was discharged as well. Parpart should have appealed the denial of his request for reinstatement rather than disregarding it and driving without a license, but because the 1994 sentence was discharged, the Department's authority to suspend Parpart's license for each of the subsequent violations was limited to 1 year, pursuant to 61-5-208. Thus, because Parpart's two 1-year suspensions would have ended in 2002, Parpart was entitled to reinstatement of driving privileges upon compliance with this section. Parpart v. Dept. of Justice, 2004 MT 4, 319 M 182, 84 P3d 1 (2004).

Denial of Montana Driver's License Based on Suspension of Driving Privileges in Michigan: In Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001), the Supreme Court held that the Department of Motor Vehicles had to accept Chain's driver's license application but could still choose to deny Chain a license after completing an investigation. Chain then applied for a Montana driver's license, but after an investigation, the application was denied because Chain had been convicted in Michigan of twice operating a vehicle under the influence of liquor, twice having an unlawful bodily alcohol content while driving, driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license five times, and refusing to be tested for intoxication five times. In total, Michigan authorities took 16 separate actions against Chain's driving privileges, including five suspensions, two revocations and nine denial/revocations, resulting in suspension of Chain's Michigan driving privileges until 2022. Chain filed an action in District Court requesting that he be issued a driver's license, but the District Court denied Chain's claim on grounds that Chain could not receive a license in Montana when his driving privileges were suspended or revoked elsewhere. Chain appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Giving Chain's Michigan suspensions and revocations the same force and effect as if they were committed in Montana, the state was within its discretion to deny Chain a license. Chain v. Motor Vehicle Div., 2004 MT 216, 322 M 381, 96 P3d 1135 (2004).

Driving While Ability Impaired in Colorado Not Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — Felony DUI Sentence Reversed — Montanye Reversed: The District Court found that Colorado law was substantially similar to Montana's DUI statute, and based on McNally's four prior DWAI convictions in Colorado, the court sentenced McNally for felony DUI. McNally appealed on grounds that the Colorado convictions did not constitute previous convictions under a similar statute for purposes of determining the number of prior DUI convictions under Montana law. The Supreme Court examined Colorado law and agreed with McNally. Colorado law allows a person to be convicted for DUI if the person's ability is impaired to the slightest degree, which is a lower standard than Montana law. Therefore, McNally's prior Colorado convictions did not qualify as convictions for purposes of enhancing McNally's conviction to a felony, and McNally's felony conviction was reversed. St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002), following Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224 (1986), and overruling Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234 (1993). However, see St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110, ruling that Montana and Idaho DUI statutes were sufficiently similar to uphold felony sentence.

Driver's License Application Allowed One Year After Suspension or Revocation — Department's Discretionary Power to Issue License: Before moving to Montana, Chain lived in Michigan, where he was convicted of DUI on at least four separate occasions, which resulted in suspension or revocation of his driving privileges. Once here, Chain attempted to apply for a Montana driver's license, but the Department of Motor Vehicles cited 61-5-105 and refused to let him apply because his driving privileges were still suspended or revoked in Michigan. Chain requested that the District Court order the Department to allow the application and to issue a license if all the application requirements were met, but the request was denied. Chain argued on appeal that the Department should have instead applied 61-5-208, which limits revocations or suspensions to 1 year and allows application for a new license at the end of that period. Chain also cited the Driver License Compact in this section as support for the proposition that he should have an opportunity to reapply 1 year after revocation. The Supreme Court noted nothing in the record to indicate whether Michigan was a member of the Compact and thus declined to apply this section, but the court found Montana licensing statutes to be dispositive. The court agreed that 61-5-105 prohibits issuance of a license if driving privileges are still suspended or revoked but found nothing in the statutes that disallowed application for a license. Under 61-5-107, after receiving an application, the Department should have requested a copy of Chain's driving record from Michigan and then analyzed it in the same manner as if it had been amassed in Montana. Once 1 year had passed after Chain's revocation or suspension, he could apply for a license like any other citizen in similar circumstances, as provided in 61-5-208, and after investigation, the Department had the discretionary power whether or not to issue a license. Chain v. Dept. of Motor Vehicles, 2001 MT 224, 306 M 491, 36 P3d 358 (2001).

Out-of-State Convictions in Home State — Driver License Compact Not Applicable — Nonjurisdictional Claims Waived by Guilty Plea: Wheeler was charged with DUI, fifth offense. The affidavit in support of the information alleged that Wheeler had four previous DUI convictions. Three of the convictions occurred in Colorado. Wheeler moved to expunge those convictions, arguing that those convictions would have been expunged if they had occurred in Montana. The state argued that Colorado was Wheeler's home state when he received the DUI convictions, that the Driver License Compact did not apply, and that Wheeler had no reasonable expectation that the Colorado convictions would be expunged. The District Court denied the motion to expunge. The Supreme Court held that the expungement claim is a nonjurisdictional claim that was waived by Wheeler's guilty plea and affirmed the District Court decision. St. v. Wheeler, 285 M 400, 948 P2d 698, 54 St. Rep. 1213 (1997).

Driving While Ability Impaired in New York Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — License Suspension Affirmed: Montanye was arrested in New York for driving while impaired, and his driver's license was suspended in Montana under the reciprocal application of the Driver License Compact. Montanye contended that because conviction in New York of driving while impaired requires a lesser degree of intoxication than conviction for driving under the influence in Montana, the offenses are totally dissimilar and suspension of his license was improper. The Supreme Court noted that there were a few differences between the states' statutes, but that both laws deal with a driver's diminished ability to drive while under the influence of alcohol and both provide for suspension of license as punishment and are thus substantially similar. Therefore, the District Court did not err in revoking Montanye's license under Montana law. Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234, 50 St. Rep. 1541 (1993), overruled in St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002). See also St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Violation in Another State Included in Habitual Offender Calculation: Defendant was declared a habitual traffic offender. In order to reach the point designation, a speeding violation from the state of Washington was included. Defendant contended that because violations of Montana speed limits mandated by federal fuel conservation conditions may not be included in the calculation, the Washington violation should not be included. The court found that the Washington violation would not be a mere conservation violation in Montana but a violation of the interstate nighttime speed limit. Under 61-5-401, Montana has adopted a Driver License Compact giving effect to violations committed in other jurisdictions. The Washington violation was correctly treated as a speeding violation in the habitual traffic offender calculation. State ex rel. Landon v. Macek, 208 M 172, 676 P2d 228, 41 St. Rep. 247 (1984).

RESPONSIBILITY OF VEHICLE USERS AND OWNERS

Uniform Motor Vehicle Accident Reparations Act, 14 U.L.A. 41 through 134.

Part 1
Motor Vehicle Insurance Responsibility and Verification

Part Case Notes

Underinsured Motorist Coverage Applied to Vehicle Rather Than Owner or Operator: Plaintiffs' vehicle was struck by a rental truck driven by an intoxicated driver. Plaintiffs obtained a default judgment against the driver and settled with the truck rental company and then sought benefits from their own insurer under their underinsured motorist policy. The policy provided for payment only after the limits of liability under any applicable bodily injury bonds or policies were exhausted. Thus, application of underinsured coverage was dependent on the available coverage on the vehicle at issue, which, in this case, was the rental truck that was covered by a $7 million bodily injury policy. That amount exceeded plaintiffs' damages, so the rental truck could not be considered underinsured, and plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to remuneration from their insurer. Mecca v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2005 MT 260, 329 M 73, 122 P3d 1190 (2005), distinguishing Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114 (1998).

Antistacking Statutes Applicable to Specific Types of Coverage — Section Interpreted: In interpreting 33-23-204, the Supreme Court clarified three points regarding the statute: (1) it is directed at insurance against liability; (2) it is directed at insurance coverage that is required by law; and (3) it is concerned with liability insurance that is not only required but that is required by both parts 1 and 3 of Title 61, ch. 6. There are only three variations of coverage that meet these criteria, and those coverages are the per person, per vehicle, and property damage coverages. Underinsurance coverage and medical payment coverage do not qualify as insurance against liability but rather are excess or additional coverage designed to protect the first party insured; therefore, the prohibition against stacking in 33-23-203 does not apply to underinsurance and medical payment coverage. Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 278 M 274, 924 P2d 1315, 53 St. Rep. 904 (1996), distinguishing Grier v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 248 M 457, 812 P2d 347 (1991). Stacking of Optional Motor Vehicle Coverages Not Allowed — Underinsurance and Medical Payment Coverage Not Included: The U.S. District Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the question of whether 33-23-203 prohibits the stacking of underinsured motorist coverage and medical payment coverage available under a policy of motor vehicle liability insurance when a premium is charged for coverage of each motor vehicle listed within the policy.

The Supreme Court answered in the negative, noting that 33-23-203 does not allow stacking unless a liability policy provides otherwise. The antistacking provisions apply to any policy of motor vehicle insurance against liability now or hereafter required under 33-23-201 or Title 61, ch. 6, parts 1 and 3. However, the antistacking provision does not apply to underinsurance and medical payment coverage when a premium is charged for coverage of each motor vehicle listed within the policy because those coverages do not qualify as liability insurance. Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 278 M 274, 924 P2d 1315, 53 St. Rep. 904 (1996), distinguishing Grier v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 248 M 457, 812 P2d 347 (1991). See also Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114, 55 St. Rep. 601 (1998).

Vehicle Owner Not Liable for Adult Daughter's Accident — Speculative and Conclusory Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact: The plaintiff sued the owner of a vehicle driven by the owner's adult daughter. The District Court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was proper because the plaintiff failed in the burden to raise any genuine issue of material fact that the daughter was the owner's agent at the time of the accident or that the owner negligently entrusted the vehicle to the daughter. As a matter of law, the owner was not liable for the daughter's alleged negligence merely by being the owner of the vehicle. Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937, 52 St. Rep. 1198 (1995).

Allowance of Greater Liability Protection for Named Insured Than for Permissive User: Nothing in the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act or in the public policy of Montana prohibits an insurance agreement from affording a named insured greater liability protection than an omnibus insured, such as a renter. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Kemper Financial Serv., 667 F. Supp. 714, 44 St. Rep. 1561 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Family Exclusion Clause Void: A parent is not immune from a negligence action brought against him by a child under the age of emancipation injured in the operation of a motor vehicle. Therefore, a family exclusion clause in an automobile insurance policy obtained under the mandatory liability insurance law is void and unenforceable because 61-6-301 requires motorists to carry insurance against loss resulting from liability imposed by law for injury suffered by any person. If the policy had been certified under the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act, the exclusion clause would have been invalid because liability under that act is "absolute". Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Royle, 202 M 173, 656 P2d 820, 40 St. Rep. 12 (1983), contrasted in Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32, 54 St. Rep. 925 (1997), and Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. Livengood, 1998 MT 329, 292 M 244, 970 P2d 1054, 55 St. Rep. 1336 (1998).

Insurance Coverage Not Mandated as to Nonowned Automobiles: The mandatory liability protection law does not incorporate the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act except for 61-6-103, and thus the provisions of the latter Act do not apply to defendant's policy, and her contention that coverage as to nonowned automobiles is mandated by law is erroneous. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Queen, 38 St. Rep. 608 (1981).

Intent of Legislature: The general legislative intent in enacting financial responsibility provisions of the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act was: (1) to provide for voluntary and not compulsory automobile liability insurance for motorist who has not become involved in automobile accident; (2) to require compulsory proof of ability to respond in damages resulting from automobile accident after motorist becomes involved in such accident; and (3) to require compulsory proof of financial responsibility for future automobile accidents, from a motorist (a) convicted of certain driving offenses, or (b) who has outstanding unsatisfied judgment against him as a result of past automobile accident. A motorist who voluntarily carried ordinary automobile liability policy at time he became involved in accident was exempted from requirements of proof of ability to respond in damages whereas motorist who has neither been convicted nor forfeited bail for one of driving offenses referred to in Act nor who has outstanding unsatisfied judgment against him as result of previous automobile accident is not required to furnish proof of future financial responsibility at all. Boldt v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 151 M 337, 443 P2d 33 (1968).

Case Notes

"Owner": A wife was co-owner (see 61-1-101 for definition of "owner") with her husband of a vehicle, but her registration, even though indivisible from that of her husband, was excluded from the operation of section 53-422, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), after the husband was involved in an accident with another vehicle. He became subject to the provisions of the section regarding suspension. State ex rel. Penhale v. St. Highway Patrol, 133 M 162, 321 P2d 612 (1958).

Case Notes

Underinsured Motorist Coverage Applied to Vehicle Rather Than Owner or Operator: Plaintiffs' vehicle was struck by a rental truck driven by an intoxicated driver. Plaintiffs obtained a default judgment against the driver and settled with the truck rental company and then sought benefits from their own insurer under their underinsured motorist policy. The policy provided for payment only after the limits of liability under any applicable bodily injury bonds or policies were exhausted. Thus, application of underinsured coverage was dependent on the available coverage on the vehicle at issue, which, in this case, was the rental truck that was covered by a $7 million bodily injury policy. That amount exceeded plaintiffs' damages, so the rental truck could not be considered underinsured, and plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to remuneration from their insurer. Mecca v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2005 MT 260, 329 M 73, 122 P3d 1190 (2005), distinguishing Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114 (1998).

Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Coverage for Transported Property Valid: Plaintiffs were transporting snowmobiles on a trailer when they were involved in a multiple vehicle accident that resulted in damage to their vehicle and the destruction of the trailer and snowmobiles. The insurer covered the loss of the trailer, but declined to compensate for the loss of the snowmobiles on grounds that they were excluded from policy coverage, and plaintiffs filed suit to recover damages. The District Court held that the policy exclusion for damage to property being transported was valid and granted the insurer summary judgment. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the policy provision violated 61-6-301, which mandates motor vehicle insurance. The Supreme Court agreed that an exclusion to mandatory coverage is void and unenforceable absent a statutory exclusion, but then noted that the statutory exclusion in this section allows a policy exclusion for damage to property transported by the insured. The court held that the exclusion in this section is not inconsistent with the purpose and intent of 61-6-301 and that because the policy provision was not void, there was no genuine issue of material fact and summary judgment was proper. Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005). See also Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153 (1986), and Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32 (1997).

Underinsured Motorist Coverage Not Necessarily Created by Mere Ownership of Insured Vehicle if Owner Not Named Insured on Policy:

Defendant insurer claimed that plaintiffs' claims in a 2002 action were barred by collateral estoppel and res judicata because of the prior holding in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001). Applying the test in Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), for determining whether collateral estoppel barred the present action because it might be a relitigation of the 2001 case, the Supreme Court disagreed with defendant's assertion. Plaintiffs had not previously litigated whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss because that issue did not arise until defendant refused to indemnify Hoss and Hoss confessed judgment. Also, the issue of whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss was different from the issue in the 2001 case, which concerned whether Lee was a named insured under Hoss's policy, thereby entitling Lee to underinsured motorist benefits. Because the present issue was never litigated, there was never a final judgment on the merits, so defendant's collateral estoppel and res judicata arguments were inapplicable. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

Lee's long-term cohabiting companion, Hoss, purchased insurance from USAA Casualty Insurance Co. (USAA) that covered two vehicles owned jointly by Lee and Hoss, but Lee was not a named insured on the USAA policy. As is typical, the policy language extended coverage to the named insured and the insured's spouse or family member by blood, marriage, or adoption, but did not cover a cohabiting partner unless the partner was driving or was a passenger in a covered vehicle. The policy included underinsured motorist (UIM) coverage that did not necessarily require that the covered person be driving or be a passenger in a covered vehicle, thereby potentially extending UIM coverage to Lee. Lee was injured in an accident in Louisiana while in a taxi and filed a UIM claim, contending that she was entitled to stack coverage under both vehicles. Although USAA initially indicated that Lee would be entitled to UIM coverage because she was a co-owner of the vehicles, the insurer later changed its position and denied coverage on grounds that because Lee was not a named insured and as a matter of law not a "covered person" under the relevant policy provisions, USAA had no obligation to treat her as insured. The District Court granted summary judgment for USAA, concluding that Lee was not an insured for purposes of UIM coverage under the express language of Hoss's policy and that Lee could not benefit from a policy to which she was not a party. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. The insurance agreement between USAA and Hoss could not be construed because of a patent ambiguity to confer the status of named insured upon Lee. The court declined to reform the insurance policy to include, as a matter of public policy, all owners of insured vehicles as named insureds under liability policies covering the owners' vehicles. It is the vehicle, not the driver, that is the focal concern of the mandatory liability laws. Those laws do not require that each named insured be the registered vehicle owner or that all registered owners be named insureds. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Insurer Required to Pay Undisputed Medical Coverage Without Settlement Agreement When Liability Reasonably Clear — No Bad Faith Claim for Pre-Watters Conditioned Settlement Offer: Defendant insurer offered to pay plaintiffs the policy limit of $1 million in exchange for a full release of claims against the insureds. Plaintiffs refused to provide a release, the case went to trial, and plaintiffs were awarded more than $3 million. Plaintiffs then counterclaimed against the insurer, claiming that refusal to pay the undisputed medical claims without a release violated 33-18-201(6) and (13). The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of 33-18-201 is to ensure prompt payment of damages for which an insurer is clearly obligated. Thus, pursuant to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626 (2000), the insurer had a duty to pay plaintiffs' undisputed medical expenses up to the limits of its coverage and without the benefit of a settlement agreement. Nevertheless, because the insurer made its settlement offer in 1998, more than 2 years prior to the Watters decision, the insurer had an arguably reasonable basis under 33-18-242 for asserting that it was entitled to condition payment of policy limits on plaintiffs' provision of a release of claims, so the insurer was not liable for acting in bad faith in violation of 33-18-201. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003), overruling Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and overruling Watters to the extent that Watters implies that an insurer's obligation under Ridley is limited to the minimum coverage required by the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act.

Accident Involving Multiple Liable Insureds — Maximum Insurance Coverage Limited to Policy Amount: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to determine whether persons insured under one policy, who are both found legally liable for causing one accident, must each be covered by the mandatory limits in this section. The District Court found that Montana's vehicle insurance omnibus statutes do not require separate, full coverage for multiple insureds when each insured is liable for independent acts of negligence arising from one accident. The court reasoned that this section refers to each accident, not each separate act of negligence that may have contributed to causing the accident, and held that as a matter of law, once the injured person's damages resulting from the one accident exhaust the $50,000 policy limit, the insurer's obligation to cover any further claims ceases. The Supreme Court noted that if the Legislature ever intended to allow a double recovery system, it never expressly provided the language necessary for such an interpretation, but also noted that the language of this section does not expressly prohibit double recovery. Rather, the clear statutory language provides that an owner's policy must provide a base amount of coverage, subject to limits exclusive of interest and costs, with respect to each motor vehicle, not each insured, in the event that the vehicle causes damage to persons or property, regardless of who is behind the wheel. The legislative history provided no evidence that the Legislature ever contemplated or wished to require that the minimum amounts of liability could or should be increased depending on the number of insureds found liable for causing one accident, and the Supreme Court, declining to construe the statute in any way that would insert a particular and precise meaning that had been omitted, affirmed the District Court's conclusion that the insurer was obligated under these circumstances to pay the policy limit on behalf of its insureds, and no more. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

No Direct Action Allowed Against Insurer Until Liability of Insured Established: Montana law does not allow a plaintiff to bring a direct action against an insurer until the liability of the insured has been established, unless such right is expressly sanctioned by the Legislature and not merely inferentially deduced. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000). See also Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937 (1995).

No Liability Per Se for Paying Mandatory Minimum Policy Limits — Avoiding Liability Through Coerced Economic Necessity: Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. Guaranty argued that without a full release, it would be subject to a bad faith claim by Moore for placing the interests of a third-party claimant above those of its insured to whom it owed a fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court noted that under 33-18-242, an insured, but not a third-party claimant, is prohibited from bringing a bad faith action in connection with the handling of a claim. In purchasing the minimum required statutory coverage, Moore could not have reasonably expected that Guaranty would be obligated to provide greater coverage than that purchased by demanding a full liability release as a condition of paying the limits of the minimum coverage. When the monetary consequences of a person's tortious conduct undisputedly exceed policy limits and liability is clear, the only incentive for an injured third-party claimant to settle for policy limits and provide the insured with an absolute release from liability is some form of coerced economic necessity. Compelling an innocent third party to proceed to trial to recoup that which is already owed is inconsistent with public policy to encourage settlement and avoid unnecessary litigation. Guaranty would not have been exposed to per se liability for bad faith from Moore by paying the policy limits. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to this section, the prompt, fair, and equitable settlement of the claims cannot be forestalled by an insurer based on an illusory bad faith or breach of contract claim that an insured may bring, and to refuse payment based on such an unfounded potential liability is itself a deceptive practice within the meaning of 33-18-201. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Purpose of Mandatory Liability Insurance Law — Absolute Liability of Insurer Not Applicable to Coverage in Excess of Statutory Minimum: The mandatory liability insurance law seeks to protect members of the general public who are innocent victims of automobile accidents and was enacted for the benefit of the public, rather than for the benefit of the insured. The liability of an insurance carrier with respect to motor vehicle mandatory liability insurance becomes absolute whenever injury or damage covered by the policy occurs, but the absolute liability standard does not apply to insurance coverage that exceeds the mandatory minimum limits. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000).

Unfair Trade Practice to Require Full and Final Release of Liability Before Claim Paid Within Policy Limits — "Settlement" Distinguished From "Release": Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses' in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. The Watterses declined the offer, eventually bringing an unfair trade action against Guaranty for failing to promptly pay damages for which Moore was liable. Guaranty argued that the full release from liability was necessary to effectuate a settlement, citing Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and contended that because no settlement was proffered from the Watterses, Guaranty could not, as a matter of law, have violated 33-18-201. The Supreme Court instead applied Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The court clarified the relevant terms, noting that in accord with the general governing principles of contract law from which the law of settlements is derived, in the context of the Unfair Trade Practices Act, a settlement is synonymous with an enforceable bilateral contract that discharges a future or existing obligation, while a release, as a matter of law, is nothing more than an accord and satisfaction or one of several ways in which an obligation may contractually be discharged or settled for less than or for something different than from what is owed. The court concluded that a settlement between Guaranty and the Watterses was legally possible without the Watterses executing a full and final release of all liability, as evidenced by Guaranty's settlement of the Watterses' property damage claims within the limits of Moore's policy without a release. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to this section, it is an unfair trade practice per se under 33-18-201 for an insurer to condition the payment of the owed mandatory minimum policy limits on the third party's agreement to provide a full and final release of all liability in favor of an insured. An insurer who pays mandatory minimum policy limits under these circumstances does not act in bad faith per se against its insured by not obtaining a full and final liability release on the insured's behalf. Unfortunately for the Watterses, under the case law in effect at the time, Guaranty had a reasonable basis under Juedeman upon which to deny payment of policy limits, so Guaranty's cross-motion for summary judgment was granted. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), overruling Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and overruled in Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003), to the extent that Watters implies that an insurer's obligation under Ridley is limited to the minimum coverage required by the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act.

Underinsured Motor Vehicle Defined — Policy Exclusion of Husband's Vehicle as Vehicle of "Relative" Upheld — Exclusion Not Contrary to Public Policy or Reasonable Expectations of Insured: Stutzman was injured in a one-car accident when her husband, John Turcotte, negligently lost control of his vehicle. Stutzman, who, along with Turcotte, was an insured in a policy written by Safeco, sued Safeco in an attempt to collect the underinsured motorist benefits provided in the policy. In its defense, Safeco raised the policy definition of an "underinsured motor vehicle" that excluded a motor vehicle owned by a "relative" of an insured. Citing decisions from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that because Turcotte was married to Stutzman at the time of the accident, Turcotte was Stutzman's "relative" within the meaning of the exclusion applicable to the underinsured motorist benefits of the policy and that the exclusion applied even though exclusions are generally to be narrowly construed against the insurer. The Supreme Court also held that although a court may invalidate an exclusion that violates Montana's mandatory insurance law, there is no requirement in Montana law for underinsured motorist coverage and, moreover, that public policy should uphold the exclusion because an insured could otherwise substitute less expensive underinsured motorist coverage for more expensive liability coverage. Further, citing Wellcome v. Home Ins. Co., 257 M 354, 849 P2d 190 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the doctrine of reasonable expectations of the insured is inapplicable when the terms of the policy clearly demonstrate an intent to exclude coverage. Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32, 54 St. Rep. 925 (1997), followed in Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. Livengood, 1998 MT 329, 292 M 244, 970 P2d 1054, 55 St. Rep. 1336 (1998).

Required Coverages: Under Montana's statutory scheme, the minimum third-party liability coverages under this section and the minimum first-party uninsured motorist coverage under 33-23-201 are required coverages. Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 278 M 274, 924 P2d 1315, 53 St. Rep. 904 (1996), distinguishing Grier v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 248 M 457, 812 P2d 347 (1991). See also Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114, 55 St. Rep. 601 (1998).

Insurance Company Cannot Be Sued Directly by Third-Party Claimant in Place of Insured Tortfeasor: The plaintiff sued the owner of a vehicle driven by the owner's adult daughter. The District Court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment and granted the plaintiff's motion to add the owner's insurance carrier as a party defendant. The general rule is that a direct action against an insurer does not lie until the liability of the insured has been established. Unless and until the tort claimant establishes the liability of the tortfeasor, there are no injuries or damages "covered by the policy" within the meaning of this section. The District Court erred in allowing the joinder of the insurer as a party defendant. Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937, 52 St. Rep. 1198 (1995).

Umbrella Policy Not Automobile or Motor Vehicle Policy That Must Include Uninsured Motorist Coverage: The statutory definition of motor vehicle liability policy in this section does not include excess insurance, such as an umbrella policy. Therefore, an umbrella policy does not constitute a motor vehicle liability policy as envisioned by 33-23-201, the uninsured motorist statute. Read together, these statutes clearly apply only to primary automobile insurance, not to a commercial umbrella policy issued to protect the insured from liability to third parties. However, this does not mean that an insurer may not offer additional uninsured motorist coverage as part of a primary policy or umbrella policy. Rowe v. The Travelers Indem. Co., 245 M 413, 800 P2d 157, 47 St. Rep. 1946 (1990).

Insurer's Liability Not Subject to Canadian Tort Law: The plaintiff, relying on the policy's underinsurance clause, sought reimbursement from the insurer for injuries suffered in an automobile accident in Canada. The insurer argued that it was only liable for those damages allowed under the restrictive Canadian tort laws. The Supreme Court held that those damages that the plaintiff could not obtain reimbursement for under Canadian law could be recovered under the underinsurance clause because the policy was governed by the contract laws of the place where it was created and not by tort law. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Estate of Braun, 243 M 125, 793 P2d 253, 47 St. Rep. 1043 (1990).

Additional Omnibus Insured — Tort Claims Act Not Shield — Employer's Insurance Secondary: When an employee of Butte-Silver Bow was involved in an auto accident while acting in the course and scope of his employment and driving his own car, Butte-Silver Bow was an additional omnibus insured under the employee's auto policy. The employee's personal insurance carrier was not shielded from liability by the state tort claims act. The employee's insurer was the primary insurer, and Butte-Silver Bow's insurer was the excess insurer. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. State Farm Ins. Co., 238 M 324, 777 P2d 353, 46 St. Rep. 1303 (1989).

Continuation of Liability Coverage if Driver Initially Obtained Control of Automobile With Owner's Permission: If the driver of a motor vehicle initially obtains control and operates a motor vehicle with the permission of the owner, the owner's liability insurance must continue to cover the vehicle even though the permittee may have exceeded the scope of the owner's permission or consent. Enforcement of minimum statutory coverage in this state is mandated. The clear purpose of 61-6-301 is to protect innocent members of the general public injured on the highways through the negligence of financially irresponsible motorists. Horace Mann Ins. v. Hampton, 235 M 354, 767 P2d 343, 46 St. Rep. 49 (1989).

Allowance of Greater Liability Protection for Named Insured Than for Permissive User: Nothing in the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act or in the public policy of Montana prohibits an insurance agreement from affording a named insured greater liability protection than an omnibus insured, such as a renter. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Kemper Financial Serv., 667 F. Supp. 714, 44 St. Rep. 1561 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Failure to State Exact Amount of Liability Coverage in Car Rental Agreement — No Ambiguity Found: A car rental agreement did not state a specific dollar amount of liability insurance provided, but rather provided rentee with a primary automobile liability insurance policy with limits of coverage equal to the minimum statutory requirements of Montana. The fact that rentee may have been unaware of the precise dollar amount of the minimum required by 61-6-103 was of no consequence in determining whether the agreement was ambiguous, and coverage was properly limited to the minimum required by this section. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Kemper Financial Serv., 667 F. Supp. 714, 44 St. Rep. 1561 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Consortium Claim Subject to "Each Person" Limit of Liability Coverage: Under mandatory motor vehicle insurance coverage statutes, husband's cause of action for consortium and wife's cause of action for bodily injuries are subject to the "one person limitation" set forth in 61-6-103 as referred to in 61-6-301. The policy in question does not extend coverage beyond the statutory requirements. Therefore, husband is not entitled to recover from the insurance company an amount over the limit specified for one person for consequential damages to himself resulting from injuries to his wife, such as loss of her services or consortium. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 1153, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986).

No Coverage Under Additional Policies on Automobiles Not Involved in Accident: There is no coverage for injured plaintiffs under father's motor vehicle liability policies on separate vehicles not owned or driven by son involved in collision. Son is not an insured under those policies merely by virtue of being relative of insured father. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 1153, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986).

Family Relationship — Issue of Implied Consent: The son ran away from home in his parents' vehicle and subsequently was involved in a one-car accident. The trial court erred in granting summary judgment, holding that there was no liability coverage for the insureds' minor son under the parents' policy. Because a family relationship exists between the insured and the vehicle's driver, the parents' implied consent to their son's use of the vehicle remains a genuine issue of material fact. If the jury upon remand makes a finding of implied permission, then the trial court must find the respondent insurance company to be the insurer of the son and his parents for payment of any damages. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Janzer, 215 M 260, 697 P2d 460, 42 St. Rep. 337 (1985).

Implied Permission — Question of Fact: The omnibus clause in a vehicle liability policy insured any person driving the vehicle with the permission of the insured provided the use was within the scope of the permission. Under Cascade Ins. Co. v. Glacier Gen. Ins. Co., 156 M 236, 479 P2d 259 (1971), permission may be implied under an omnibus clause. The question of whether permission is implied is one of fact. Under the facts of this case, the court found that the owner of the vehicle, Western Surety, would not reasonably anticipate that its agent would, while drunk at a bar, lend the car to a total stranger for any purpose. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Rankin, 40 St. Rep. 1138 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Recovery Under Uninsured Motorist Clause — Allowed if Liability Insurance Amount Less Than That Required by This Section: An uninsured motorist clause defined an uninsured motor vehicle as a land motor vehicle "of which there is, in at least the amounts specified by the financial responsibility law of the state. . . no bodily injury liability insurance". The minimum amount of insurance specified for a liability insurance policy is set out by this section, and a motorist carrying less than the statutory limits is an uninsured motorist within the meaning of the insurance contract. Oleson v. Farmers Ins. Group, 185 M 164, 605 P2d 166, 37 St. Rep. 8 (1980).

When Omnibus Clause Required: The Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act requires an omnibus clause in an insurance policy only when a policy is issued for certification under the Act. The policy here was not issued for the purpose of certification under the Act, enabling the insurer to insert exclusions in its policy not mentioned in this section. USF&G Co. v. Wilcox, 472 F. Supp. 74, 36 St. Rep. 1178 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Policy Voluntarily Obtained: A liability insurance policy that the automobile owner voluntarily obtains is not subject to the coverage requirements of this chapter. Velte v. Allstate Ins. Co., 181 M 300, 593 P2d 454, 36 St. Rep. 724 (1979).

Primary and Secondary Insurance: The first liability policy provided primary coverage to driver when he was driving other vehicles except when there was "other collectible insurance" in which case it provided excess coverage. The second liability policy owned by auto agency insured driver only if there was "no other valid and collectible automobile liability insurance". The first policy was liable for the cost of defending an action for damages arising out of the accident. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 335 F. Supp. 671 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Permitted User: Driver of insured's automobile was permitted user under this section even though permission came from insured's son and even though son had been told not to lend out the automobile, since the automobile was purchased for son's exclusive use away from home and son had ostensible authority to permit its use by third party. Cascade Ins. Co. v. Glacier Gen. Ins. Co., 156 M 236, 479 P2d 259 (1971).

Proof of Responsibility — Insurance — When Statutory Provisions Attach: Under the Montana Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act proof of financial responsibility is required: (1) if a judgment arising out of liability for damages in an automobile accident is outstanding and unsatisfied; or (2) in case of conviction or forfeiture of bail for driving offenses requiring revocation of a license. Neither of these conditions was present when the policies in question in this case were issued, so that the provisions of this section, relating to policies issued as proof of future financial responsibility and eliminating policy defenses, never attached. The policies in question were voluntarily carried by the motorists. The household exclusion contained in one policy was valid and not contrary to public policy. Lewis v. Mid-Century Ins. Co., 152 M 328, 449 P2d 679 (1968).

Defenses Available to Insurer: Insurance company being sued by injured party for amount of judgment previously secured against insured motorist was entitled to defend on ground that accident was not reported to it until a year later, in breach of the policy provisions requiring prompt notice, despite contention that policy was subject to that portion of insurance laws eliminating policy defenses. Boldt v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 151 M 337, 443 P2d 33 (1968).

Garage Business Exclusion: Garage business exclusion clause of policy was not violative of public policy as expressed in statute in absence of showing that policy was issued to show proof of financial responsibility. N. Assurance Co. of Am. v. Truck Ins. Exch., 151 M 132, 439 P2d 760 (1968).

Part Case Notes

No Direct Action Allowed Against Insurer Until Liability of Insured Established: Montana law does not allow a plaintiff to bring a direct action against an insurer until the liability of the insured has been established, unless such right is expressly sanctioned by the Legislature and not merely inferentially deduced. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000). See also Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937 (1995).

Antistacking Statutes Applicable to Specific Types of Coverage — Section Interpreted: In interpreting 33-23-204, the Supreme Court clarified three points regarding the statute: (1) it is directed at insurance against liability; (2) it is directed at insurance coverage that is required by law; and (3) it is concerned with liability insurance that is not only required but that is required by both parts 1 and 3 of Title 61, ch. 6. There are only three variations of coverage that meet these criteria, and those coverages are the per person, per vehicle, and property damage coverages. Underinsurance coverage and medical payment coverage do not qualify as insurance against liability but rather are excess or additional coverage designed to protect the first party insured; therefore, the prohibition against stacking in 33-23-203 does not apply to underinsurance and medical payment coverage. Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 278 M 274, 924 P2d 1315, 53 St. Rep. 904 (1996), distinguishing Grier v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 248 M 457, 812 P2d 347 (1991). See also Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114, 55 St. Rep. 601 (1998).

Stacking of Optional Motor Vehicle Coverages Not Allowed — Underinsurance and Medical Payment Coverage Not Included: The U.S. District Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the question of whether 33-23-203 prohibits the stacking of underinsured motorist coverage and medical payment coverage available under a policy of motor vehicle liability insurance when a premium is charged for coverage of each motor vehicle listed within the policy. The Supreme Court answered in the negative, noting that 33-23-203 does not allow stacking unless a liability policy provides otherwise. The antistacking provisions apply to any policy of motor vehicle insurance against liability now or hereafter required under 33-23-201 or Title 61, ch. 6, parts 1 and 3. However, the antistacking provision does not apply to underinsurance and medical payment coverage when a premium is charged for coverage of each motor vehicle listed within the policy because those coverages do not qualify as liability insurance. Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 278 M 274, 924 P2d 1315, 53 St. Rep. 904 (1996), distinguishing Grier v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 248 M 457, 812 P2d 347 (1991). See also Farmers Alliance Mut. Ins. Co. v. Holeman, 1998 MT 155, 289 M 312, 961 P2d 114, 55 St. Rep. 601 (1998).

Vehicle Owner Not Liable for Adult Daughter's Accident — Speculative and Conclusory Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact: The plaintiff sued the owner of a vehicle driven by the owner's adult daughter. The District Court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was proper because the plaintiff failed in the burden to raise any genuine issue of material fact that the daughter was the owner's agent at the time of the accident or that the owner negligently entrusted the vehicle to the daughter. As a matter of law, the owner was not liable for the daughter's alleged negligence merely by being the owner of the vehicle. Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937, 52 St. Rep. 1198 (1995).

Award of Attorney Fees in Declaratory Judgment Insurance Action — Distinction Between Third-Party Claimant and Insured: As a general rule, an insured is not entitled to recover attorney fees and expenses incurred in defending a declaratory judgment action brought by an insurer to determine the existence of coverage under a liability insurance policy. However, recovery is appropriate where it is ultimately determined by the court that the insurer was not acting in good faith in contesting coverage and instituting declaratory judgment proceedings. A third-party claimant is not entitled to recover attorney fees incurred in a declaratory judgment proceeding, even if the claimant arguably falls within the policy definition of "insured". Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 689 F. Supp. 1028, 45 St. Rep. 1361 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Exclusion From Coverage Prohibited: The U.S. District Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the question of whether this part prohibits exclusion of a named driver or drivers from coverage under a motor vehicle liability policy. Answering in the affirmative, the Supreme Court found that enforcement of minimum statutory coverage is mandated by law in Montana and is a minor burden on insureds when compared to increased protection of the general traveling public. An insurer's attempt to exclude defendant from coverage was found to be contrary to the requirements of 61-6-301 (prior to 1989 amendment) and repugnant to the state's interest in protecting innocent victims of automobile accidents. Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 231 M 166, 752 P2d 166, 45 St. Rep. 514 (1988). The propriety of awarding attorney fees and expenses relative to this case was discussed in Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 689 F. Supp. 1028, 45 St. Rep. 1361 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Family Exclusion Clause Void: A parent is not immune from a negligence action brought against him by a child under the age of emancipation injured in the operation of a motor vehicle. Therefore, a family exclusion clause in an automobile insurance policy obtained under the mandatory liability insurance law is void and unenforceable because 61-6-301 requires motorists to carry insurance against loss resulting from liability imposed by law for injury suffered by any person. If the policy had been certified under the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act, the exclusion clause would have been invalid because liability under that act is "absolute". Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Royle, 202 M 173, 656 P2d 820, 40 St. Rep. 12 (1983), contrasted in Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32, 54 St. Rep. 925 (1997), and Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co. v. Livengood, 1998 MT 329, 292 M 244, 970 P2d 1054, 55 St. Rep. 1336 (1998).

Insurance Coverage Not Mandated as to Nonowned Automobiles: The mandatory liability protection law does not incorporate the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act except for 61-6-103 and thus the provisions of the latter act do not apply to defendant's policy, and her contention that coverage as to nonowned automobiles is mandated by law is erroneous. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Queen, 38 St. Rep. 608 (1981).

Compiler's Comments

2005 Amendment: Chapter 542 in (1)(a) near end after "motor vehicle" deleted "as defined in 61-1-102"; in (4) near beginning after "ways of this state open to the public" inserted "as defined in 61-8-101"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 393 inserted (4) concerning exceptions to the unlawfulness of operating a motor vehicle without liability insurance; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: At beginning of (1)(a) inserted exception clause; inserted (1)(b) providing for family member exclusion; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 425, L. 1989, provided: "By amending section 61-6-301, MCA, it is the intent of the legislature to expressly permit named driver exclusions in mandatory motor vehicle insurance policies for family members of the policyholder. It is the finding of the legislature that the prohibition against named driver exclusions in the context of the family has the result, in effect, of denying coverage to families who have found their insurance premiums to double or triple due to the Montana supreme court's decision in Iowa Mutual Insurance Company v. Davis, 752 P.2d 166 (1988). In that case, the court held that mandatory liability coverage requirements, as a matter of public policy, prohibited exclusion of a named driver or named drivers from coverage under motor vehicle liability policies."

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 425, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] is effective July 1, 1990, and applies to motor vehicle liability insurance policies issued, renewed, extended, or reinstated after June 30, 1990."

1985 Amendment: In (2) substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles.

Case Notes

Family Member Exclusion Not Unconscionable — Summary Judgment Reversed: A wife was injured in a car accident as a result of her husband's negligent driving. Because the husband's umbrella policy contained an express family member exclusion, the insurer denied coverage for her injuries. The couple sought a declaratory judgment that the wife was entitled to coverage. They argued that the exclusion was unenforceable because it was ambiguous, violated public policy and the reasonable expectations of the insured, and was unconscionable. The District Court granted summary judgment to the plaintiffs based on its conclusion that the exclusion was unconscionable. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, reasoning that the family member exclusion allows broad coverage at an economical cost and therefore did not unreasonably favor the insurer. Fisher v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 208, 371 Mont. 147, 305 P.3d 861.

State Required to Prove Lack of Insurance: After a traffic stop of a vehicle based on an observation that the vehicle did not have taillights, the officer approached the vehicle and requested the driver, who was Farmer's girlfriend, to produce her driver's license and proof of registration. She was unable to produce either document. The officer also requested the driver to produce proof of liability insurance on the vehicle, which she also was unable to produce. The officer then contacted dispatch to run a check on the license plate number of the vehicle, and dispatch informed him that the vehicle was registered to Farmer. At the time of the traffic stop, Farmer was seated in the vehicle's front passenger seat. Farmer also did not produce proof of liability insurance for the vehicle. Farmer received a citation for failure to carry valid liability insurance on his vehicle in violation of 61-6-301. At the trial in the District Court, the officer testified that he requested the driver to provide proof of insurance and she failed to do so. He further testified that Farmer was seated in the passenger seat, observed the interaction, and at no time made an effort to provide proof of insurance for the vehicle. The officer did not state that he directly requested Farmer to provide such proof, but rather testified that he "made a request to the driver and he [Farmer] was sitting right there, so I don't know if I made a direct request to him, but he was sitting right there when I asked for it." The state presented no other evidence, either direct or circumstantial, that Farmer did not have liability insurance for the vehicle at the time of the traffic stop. At the close of the state's case-in-chief, Farmer moved the District Court for a directed verdict, arguing that the state had failed to present evidence that his vehicle was not insured at the time of the traffic stop. The District Court determined that the state had presented sufficient evidence to convict Farmer under 61-6-301 for allowing his vehicle to be operated without valid liability insurance and found Farmer guilty of that offense. The court then sentenced Farmer and entered judgment on the conviction and sentence. Farmer appealed. The state contended that the officer's testimony that Farmer did not produce proof of insurance at the time of the traffic stop was sufficient to establish his failure to insure the vehicle. The state cited 61-6-302 and asserts that the statute imposed upon Farmer a duty to prove, upon demand, that his vehicle was insured. It was undisputed here that Farmer was not the "operator" of the vehicle at the time of the traffic stop. Farmer had no obligation pursuant to 61-6-302 to provide proof of insurance, and Farmer's failure to present proof of insurance did not support a finding that the insurance did not exist at the time of the traffic stop. The state argued 61-6-302 must be viewed as an enforcement mechanism for 61-6-301 because the only effective way to ascertain compliance with 61-6-301 is to place a duty upon the vehicle owner to provide proof of insurance. Interpreting the statutes in the manner advocated by the state would require the Supreme Court to either insert the term "owner" into 61-6-302 or insert language requiring an owner to provide proof of insurance upon request into 61-6-301 and the Court declined to do so. The case was reversed and remanded with instructions to vacate the judgment and dismiss the charge. St. v. Farmer, 2008 MT 354, 346 M 335, 195 P3d 800 (2008). (See 2009 amendment.)

Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Coverage for Transported Property Valid: Plaintiffs were transporting snowmobiles on a trailer when they were involved in a multiple vehicle accident that resulted in damage to their vehicle and the destruction of the trailer and snowmobiles. The insurer covered the loss of the trailer, but declined to compensate for the loss of the snowmobiles on grounds that they were excluded from policy coverage, and plaintiffs filed suit to recover damages. The District Court held that the policy exclusion for damage to property being transported was valid and granted the insurer summary judgment. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the policy provision violated this section, which mandates motor vehicle insurance. The Supreme Court agreed that an exclusion to mandatory coverage is void and unenforceable absent a statutory exclusion, but then noted that the statutory exclusion in 61-6-103 allows a policy exclusion for damage to property transported by the insured. The court held that the exclusion in 61-6-103 is not inconsistent with the purpose and intent of this section and that because the policy provision was not void, there was no genuine issue of material fact and summary judgment was proper. Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005). See also Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153 (1986), and Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32 (1997).

Underinsured Motorist Coverage Not Necessarily Created by Mere Ownership of Insured Vehicle if Owner Not Named Insured on Policy:

Defendant insurer claimed that plaintiffs' claims in a 2002 action were barred by collateral estoppel and res judicata because of the prior holding in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001). Applying the test in Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), for determining whether collateral estoppel barred the present action because it might be a relitigation of the 2001 case, the Supreme Court disagreed with defendant's assertion. Plaintiffs had not previously litigated whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss because that issue did not arise until defendant refused to indemnify Hoss and Hoss confessed judgment. Also, the issue of whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss was different from the issue in the 2001 case, which concerned whether Lee was a named insured under Hoss's policy, thereby entitling Lee to underinsured motorist benefits. Because the present issue was never litigated, there was never a final judgment on the merits, so defendant's collateral estoppel and res judicata arguments were inapplicable. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

Lee's long-term cohabiting companion, Hoss, purchased insurance from USAA Casualty Insurance Co. (USAA) that covered two vehicles owned jointly by Lee and Hoss, but Lee was not a named insured on the USAA policy. As is typical, the policy language extended coverage to the named insured and the insured's spouse or family member by blood, marriage, or adoption, but did not cover a cohabiting partner unless the partner was driving or was a passenger in a covered vehicle. The policy included underinsured motorist (UIM) coverage that did not necessarily require that the covered person be driving or be a passenger in a covered vehicle, thereby potentially extending UIM coverage to Lee. Lee was injured in an accident in Louisiana while in a taxi and filed a UIM claim, contending that she was entitled to stack coverage under both vehicles. Although USAA initially indicated that Lee would be entitled to UIM coverage because she was a co-owner of the vehicles, the insurer later changed its position and denied coverage on grounds that because Lee was not a named insured and as a matter of law not a "covered person" under the relevant policy provisions, USAA had no obligation to treat her as insured. The District Court granted summary judgment for USAA, concluding that Lee was not an insured for purposes of UIM coverage under the express language of Hoss's policy and that Lee could not benefit from a policy to which she was not a party. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. The insurance agreement between USAA and Hoss could not be construed because of a patent ambiguity to confer the status of named insured upon Lee. The court declined to reform the insurance policy to include, as a matter of public policy, all owners of insured vehicles as named insureds under liability policies covering the owners' vehicles. It is the vehicle, not the driver, that is the focal concern of the mandatory liability laws. Those laws do not require that each named insured be the registered vehicle owner or that all registered owners be named insureds. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990), and followed in Hernandez v. Yellowstone County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 251, 345 M 1, 189 P3d 638 (2008), with regard to award of attorney fees only to a prevailing party under the private attorney general theory.

Accident Involving Multiple Liable Insureds — Maximum Insurance Coverage Limited to Policy Amount: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to determine whether persons insured under one policy, who are both found legally liable for causing one accident, must each be covered by the mandatory limits in 61-6-103. The District Court found that Montana's vehicle insurance omnibus statutes do not require separate, full coverage for multiple insureds when each insured is liable for independent acts of negligence arising from one accident. The court reasoned that 61-6-103 refers to each accident, not each separate act of negligence that may have contributed to causing the accident, and held that as a matter of law, once the injured person's damages resulting from the one accident exhaust the $50,000 policy limit, the insurer's obligation to cover any further claims ceases. The Supreme Court noted that if the Legislature ever intended to allow a double recovery system, it never expressly provided the language necessary for such an interpretation, but also noted that the language of 61-6-103 does not expressly prohibit double recovery. Rather, the clear statutory language provides that an owner's policy must provide a base amount of coverage, subject to limits exclusive of interest and costs, with respect to each motor vehicle, not each insured, in the event that the vehicle causes damage to persons or property, regardless of who is behind the wheel. The legislative history provided no evidence that the Legislature ever contemplated or wished to require that the minimum amounts of liability could or should be increased depending on the number of insureds found liable for causing one accident, and the Supreme Court, declining to construe the statute in any way that would insert a particular and precise meaning that had been omitted, affirmed the District Court's conclusion that the insurer was obligated under these circumstances to pay the policy limit on behalf of its insureds, and no more. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

No Liability Per Se for Paying Mandatory Minimum Policy Limits — Avoiding Liability Through Coerced Economic Necessity: Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. Guaranty argued that without a full release, it would be subject to a bad faith claim by Moore for placing the interests of a third-party claimant above those of its insured to whom it owed a fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court noted that under 33-18-242, an insured, but not a third-party claimant, is prohibited from bringing a bad faith action in connection with the handling of a claim. In purchasing the minimum required statutory coverage, Moore could not have reasonably expected that Guaranty would be obligated to provide greater coverage than that purchased by demanding a full liability release as a condition of paying the limits of the minimum coverage. When the monetary consequences of a person's tortious conduct undisputedly exceed policy limits and liability is clear, the only incentive for an injured third-party claimant to settle for policy limits and provide the insured with an absolute release from liability is some form of coerced economic necessity. Compelling an innocent third party to proceed to trial to recoup that which is already owed is inconsistent with public policy to encourage settlement and avoid unnecessary litigation. Guaranty would not have been exposed to per se liability for bad faith from Moore by paying the policy limits. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to 61-6-103, the prompt, fair, and equitable settlement of the claims cannot be forestalled by an insurer based on an illusory bad faith or breach of contract claim that an insured may bring, and to refuse payment based on such an unfounded potential liability is itself a deceptive practice within the meaning of 33-18-201. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Purpose of Mandatory Liability Insurance Law — Absolute Liability of Insurer Not Applicable to Coverage in Excess of Statutory Minimum: The mandatory liability insurance law seeks to protect members of the general public who are innocent victims of automobile accidents and was enacted for the benefit of the public, rather than for the benefit of the insured. The liability of an insurance carrier with respect to motor vehicle mandatory liability insurance becomes absolute whenever injury or damage covered by the policy occurs, but the absolute liability standard does not apply to insurance coverage that exceeds the mandatory minimum limits. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000).

Unfair Trade Practice to Require Full and Final Release of Liability Before Claim Paid Within Policy Limits — "Settlement" Distinguished From "Release": Guaranty National Insurance Co. (Guaranty) provided a minimum motor vehicle liability policy for Moore, who was clearly liable for injuring the Watterses' in a car accident. Guaranty offered to settle the Watterses' claim to the extent of the policy coverage, but not without an absolute release of all liability. The Watterses declined the offer, eventually bringing an unfair trade action against Guaranty for failing to promptly pay damages for which Moore was liable. Guaranty argued that the full release from liability was necessary to effectuate a settlement, citing Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and contended that because no settlement was proffered from the Watterses, Guaranty could not, as a matter of law, have violated 33-18-201. The Supreme Court instead applied Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The court clarified the relevant terms, noting that in accord with the general governing principles of contract law from which the law of settlements is derived, in the context of the Unfair Trade Practices Act, a settlement is synonymous with an enforceable bilateral contract that discharges a future or existing obligation, while a release, as a matter of law, is nothing more than an accord and satisfaction or one of several ways in which an obligation may contractually be discharged or settled for less than or for something different than from what is owed. The court concluded that a settlement between Guaranty and the Watterses was legally possible without the Watterses executing a full and final release of all liability, as evidenced by Guaranty's settlement of the Watterses' property damage claims within the limits of Moore's policy without a release. Thus, when liability resulting from an automobile accident is reasonably clear and a third-party claimant's damages undisputedly exceed mandatory minimum policy limits pursuant to 61-6-103, it is an unfair trade practice per se under 33-18-201 for an insurer to condition the payment of the owed mandatory minimum policy limits on the third party's agreement to provide a full and final release of all liability in favor of an insured. An insurer who pays mandatory minimum policy limits under these circumstances does not act in bad faith per se against its insured by not obtaining a full and final liability release on the insured's behalf. Unfortunately for the Watterses, under the case law in effect at the time, Guaranty had a reasonable basis under Juedeman upon which to deny payment of policy limits, so Guaranty's cross-motion for summary judgment was granted. Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000), overruling Thompson v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 161 M 207, 505 P2d 423 (1973), and Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992).

Insurer Liable for Payment When Liability Clear — Legislative Amendment Poor Evidence — Purpose of Statute — Leveraging Under One Coverage Prohibited — Juedeman Overruled: Guaranty National admitted 90% of the liability for an accident involving Ridley and its insured, Roope, but refused to pay Ridley's medical expenses without settling all of Ridley's claim against Roope. Ridley filed an action for a declaratory judgment against Guaranty National, asking the District Court to find that Guaranty National had a duty to pay medical expenses under 33-18-201. The District Court concluded that Guaranty National had no obligation to pay

Ridley's medical expenses until final settlement of all claims arising from the accident. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that 33-18-201(6) and (13) impose an obligation on an insurer to pay claims when liability is reasonably clear, including claims submitted under the same type of coverage from an insurer. The Supreme Court based its decision on the following: (1) any contrary decisions by the U.S. District Court in Montana are not binding on Montana courts; (2) any construction of the statute based upon action that one Legislature failed to take to amend the statute was a "hazardous basis" for inferring intent of a previous Legislature when it enacted 33-18-201; (3) the purpose of the statute is to encourage prompt settlement of claims and is more consistent with the state's public policy expressed in 61-6-302 through 61-6-304 and this section; and (4) it was the "leveraging" of undisputed claims (using the payment of one claim to settle other claims in a manner to the insurer's advantage) that the Legislature sought to prohibit when it enacted the statute. To the extent that the Supreme Court implied in Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), that the requirements of 33-18-201(6) and (13) apply only to one claim or more than one claim under different types of coverage, that implication was overruled by the Supreme Court. Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997), followed in Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626, 57 St. Rep. 588 (2000).

Limited Corporate Insurance Policy Covering Permissive Use Customers — Void and Unenforceable: Chrysler Insurance Corporation (Chrysler) issued a policy to one of its automobile dealers that extended coverage to permissive use customers only if they were uninsured or underinsured and only up to the statutory minimum mandated in this section. In effect, the policy set a maximum ceiling level of coverage rather than a minimum floor amount of coverage as statutorily required. Because the Chrysler policy excluded or limited mandated coverage for permissive vehicle operators, the exclusion-limitation language in the policy was void as contrary to public policy and unenforceable. Enforcing the policy according to the remainder of its valid terms, the Supreme Court held that an insured must be extended coverage to the full amount provided under the general liability amount contained in the Chrysler policy. Swank v. Chrysler Ins. Corp., 282 M 376, 938 P2d 631, 54 St. Rep. 390 (1997), following Leibrand v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 272 M 1, 898 P2d 1220 (1995).

Ambiguous Family Member Automobile Liability Exclusion Construed Against Insurer: The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana certified a question to the Montana Supreme Court that arose in two consolidated cases. In each case, a family member was injured in an automobile accident as the result of the negligence of another family member, and in each case, the insurer relied upon exclusions that purported to deny liability to an insured, beyond that required by this section, for injuries caused to another family member. The U.S. District Court asked whether the amendatory endorsements relied upon in each case were valid and enforceable. The Supreme Court held that the endorsements were not valid and enforceable because the language relied upon by the insurers was ambiguous. Citing Worldwide Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Brady, 973 F2d 192 (3rd Cir. 1992), the Supreme Court held that the question of ambiguity must be resolved from the standpoint of a consumer of average intelligence not trained in law or the insurance business and that the policies in question were subject to more than one interpretation regarding the extent of the coverage for damage to a household member. The Supreme Court also held that the remainder of the policies should be enforced according to their terms, giving the insureds the benefit of the value of the policies with no applicable exclusion. Leibrand v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 272 M 1, 898 P2d 1220, 52 St. Rep. 557 (1995), followed in Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989, 56 St. Rep. 263 (1999). However, see Fisher v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 208, 371 Mont. 147, 305 P.3d 861, granting summary judgment to insurer when family member exclusion in policy is not ambiguous.

No Implied Permission by Insured for Son to Drive Another's Automobile — Insurer Not Liable: When the insured stated in his affidavit that he did not and would not have given his son permission to drive another's automobile on the day in question and when the son stated in his affidavit that he believed his father would have denied him permission to drive the vehicle on that day, the District Court did not err in determining that there was no express or implied permission by the insured for his son to drive the vehicle. The District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the insurer. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hankinson, 249 M 237, 815 P2d 145, 48 St. Rep. 662 (1991).

Policy Excluding Mandated Coverage Void: An insurance company appealed a decision in a declaratory action it filed to determine its duty to defend and indemnify a driver for claims arising out of an accident in which the driver was at fault but was driving without permission of the owner of the car. The Supreme Court reversed after finding that the policy's nonowned automobile provision's qualifying language "with the owner's permission" was void as contrary to public policy because it excluded coverage statutorily mandated under the mandatory liability protection law. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hankinson, 244 M 1, 795 P2d 480, 47 St. Rep. 1380 (1990).

Continuation of Liability Coverage if Driver Initially Obtained Control of Automobile With Owner's Permission: If the driver of a motor vehicle initially obtains control and operates a motor vehicle with the permission of the owner, the owner's liability insurance must continue to cover the vehicle even though the permittee may have exceeded the scope of the owner's permission or consent. Enforcement of minimum statutory coverage in this state is mandated. The clear purpose of this section is to protect innocent members of the general public injured on the highways through the negligence of financially irresponsible motorists. Horace Mann Ins. v. Hampton, 235 M 354, 767 P2d 343, 46 St. Rep. 49 (1989), distinguished in Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hankinson, 249 M 237, 815 P2d 145, 48 St. Rep. 662 (1991).

Exclusion From Coverage Prohibited: The U.S. District Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the question of whether Title 61, ch. 6, part 3, prohibits exclusion of a named driver or drivers from coverage under a motor vehicle liability policy. Answering in the affirmative, the Supreme Court found that enforcement of minimum statutory coverage is mandated by law in Montana and is a minor burden on insureds when compared to increased protection of the general traveling public. An insurer's attempt to exclude defendant from coverage was found to be contrary to the requirements of this section (prior to 1989 amendment) and repugnant to the state's interest in protecting innocent victims of automobile accidents. Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 231 M 166, 752 P2d 166, 45 St. Rep. 514 (1988). The propriety of awarding attorney fees and expenses relative to this case was discussed in Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 689 F. Supp. 1028, 45 St. Rep. 1361 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Allowance of Greater Liability Protection for Named Insured Than for Permissive User: Nothing in the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act or in the public policy of Montana prohibits an insurance agreement from affording a named insured greater liability protection than an omnibus insured, such as a renter. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Kemper Financial Serv., 667 F. Supp. 714, 44 St. Rep. 1561 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Consortium Claim Subject to "Each Person" Limit of Liability Coverage: Under mandatory motor vehicle insurance coverage statutes, husband's cause of action for consortium and wife's cause of action for bodily injuries are subject to the "one person limitation" set forth in 61-6-103 as referred to in 61-6-301. The policy in question does not extend coverage beyond the statutory requirements. Therefore, husband is not entitled to recover from the insurance company an amount over the limit specified for one person for consequential damages to himself resulting from injuries to his wife, such as loss of her services or consortium. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986), distinguished in Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661, 54 St. Rep. 1 (1997).

No Coverage Under Additional Policies on Automobiles Not Involved in Accident: There is no coverage for injured plaintiffs under father's motor vehicle liability policies on separate vehicles not owned or driven by son involved in collision. Son is not an insured under those policies merely by virtue of being relative of insured father. Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153, 43 St. Rep. 1897 (1986).

Coverage of Auto Dealer's Customer Using Vehicle Loaned by Dealer: Because the exclusions in 61-6-303 do not include an auto dealership, a dealership is an "owner of a motor vehicle" within the meaning of this section and must carry insurance on its vehicles. This insurance covers vehicles operated in the state by the owner or with his permission, including a customer to whom the dealer loans a vehicle, even if the customer has his own insurance. Bill Atkin Volkswagen, Inc. v. McClafferty, 213 M 99, 689 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 1981 (1984).

Pro Rata Coverage When Two Insurers Liable — Excess Coverage Clauses — Effect: Driver left his car at dealer's for repair, and while driving a car dealer had loaned driver, he hit a parked car. Driver admitted fault, tendered defense of a suit by damaged car's owner against driver to dealer's insurer, and coverage was denied. Driver's insurer settled the claim. Dealer's insurer partially reimbursed dealer for damage to the loaned vehicle. Dealer sued driver on its insurer's behalf for damage to the loaned vehicle, and driver sued dealer's insurer as a third-party defendant claiming to be insured under dealer's policy. Driver sought, on behalf of his insurer, recovery of the amount paid by driver's insurer to settle the claim of the owner of the parked car and also sought attorney fees and costs. Both the dealer and the driver had a policy stating that it provided only excess insurance over and above any other valid and collectible insurance applicable to a particular event. Each insurer therefore argued that the other insurer was the primary insurer and must pay until the limits of the primary insurer were reached, at which time the excess policy would operate to pay up to its limits. The court held that in such an instance each insurer is liable for a pro rata share of the loss, calculated on the basis of the ratio of the insurer's policy limit to the total of both insurers' policy limits. Bill Atkin Volkswagen, Inc. v. McClafferty, 213 M 99, 689 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 1981 (1984).

Required Insurance — Necessity of Primary Coverage — Excess Coverage Clause Often Adequate: That a policy is procured to satisfy the requirements of a motor vehicle financial responsibility or mandatory liability protection law does not require that policy to provide primary coverage in all events. Between that policy and another policy applicable to a particular event, an excess coverage provision will be given effect. The excess coverage clause does not defeat the purpose of the law, because it provides coverage unless there is other adequate coverage. The loss is thus covered in any event. Moreover, the Montana law simply does not specify that the vehicle owner's insurer is the primary insurer as a matter of law. Bill Atkin Volkswagen, Inc. v. McClafferty, 213 M 99, 689 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 1981 (1984).

Motor Vehicle Liability Insurance — Implied Consent Construed: Plaintiff owned and insured a fleet of vehicles. One of the vehicles was used primarily by the wife and son of plaintiff's president. The president's son and a school friend, McArthur, had an understanding that allowed McArthur to use the car. In the early morning hours of March 23, 1980, the son and a friend went to a truckstop for breakfast. McArthur and another friend stayed in the car to play the radio. A police officer investigated the youths in the car for a possible curfew violation. McArthur, not wanting to receive a citation, decided to leave in the car. While McArthur was backing out, the officer grabbed the car in an attempt to stop it. The officer became caught on the car, and McArthur unwittingly drove over him while leaving the lot. At trial the jury found that McArthur was using the car with the son's implied permission and that plaintiff's insurance covered the incident. Defendant appealed, contending that implied consent to use the car did not exist as the son had told McArthur not to leave. The court found that a complete and unreasonable departure from intended use or an intentionally dangerous and wrongful operation could support a ruling that the use was outside the scope of permitted use. However, under the facts of this case, there was no absolute revocation of consent. The jury could find that the intervening circumstances required immediate action rendering the temporary prohibition on use inapplicable. Coverage was extended to McArthur. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Farmers Ins. Exch. Co., 209 M 467, 680 P2d 330, 41 St. Rep. 829 (1984).

Family Exclusion Clause Void: A parent is not immune from a negligence action brought against him by a child under the age of emancipation injured in the operation of a motor vehicle. Therefore, a family exclusion clause in an automobile insurance policy obtained under the mandatory liability insurance law is void and unenforceable because 61-6-301 requires motorists to carry insurance against loss resulting from liability imposed by law for injury suffered by any person. If the policy had been certified under the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act, the exclusion clause would have been invalid because liability under that act is "absolute". Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Royle, 202 M 173, 656 P2d 820, 40 St. Rep. 12 (1983). See also Leibrand v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 272 M 1, 898 P2d 1220, 52 St. Rep. 557 (1995), contrasted in Stutzman v. Constitutionality of Mandatory Vehicle Insurance Law: Section 61-3-301 does not violate either due process or equal protection guarantees of the Montana Constitution. St. v. Turk, 197 M 311, 643 P2d 224, 39 St. Rep. 584 (1982).

Attorney General's Opinions

Every Vehicle to Have Its Own Coverage: Every motor vehicle registered and operated in Montana must have liability protection. The certification to the County Treasurer must be that the motor vehicle being registered is covered by a liability policy. The fact that an individual's liability policy may cover another vehicle under certain circumstances does not meet the requirement of continuous coverage. 40 A.G. Op. 5 (1983).

Both Owner and Drivers of Motor Vehicle to Be Insured: When compliance with this section is through the motor vehicle liability insurance option, both the owner and drivers operating the vehicle with the owner's permission must be insured. 38 A.G. Op. 49 (1979).

Carrying Proof of Insurance in Vehicle Not Required — No Probable Cause for Failure to Exhibit Proof After Accident: It is not necessary that proof of compliance with the mandatory motor vehicle insurance law be carried with the operator or exhibited on demand following an accident. A notice to appear on sworn complaint alleging failure to comply with Montana's compulsory insurance law lacks reasonable cause if it is grounded solely on an operator's failure to provide proof of insurance at the scene of an accident. 38 A.G. Op. 49 (1979).

2011 Amendment: Chapter 73 deleted former (3) that read: "(3) Beginning July 1, 2011, a person charged with violating subsection (2) may not be convicted if:

(a) the arresting officer or another person authorized to access information from the online motor vehicle liability insurance verification system under 61-6-309 submits to the system a request that provides proof of insurance valid at the time of arrest; or

(b) if the system under 61-6-157 is not available, the person produces in court or the office of the arresting officer proof of insurance valid at the time of arrest"; inserted (4) prohibiting conviction for violation of (2) under certain circumstances; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 25, 2011.

2009 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 203 in (2) at beginning of first sentence substituted "Each owner or operator of a motor vehicle" for "Each person", after "vehicle" deleted "being operated by the person", and at beginning of third sentence after "vehicle" inserted "owner or"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 15, 2009.

Chapter 413 in (2) inserted second sentence regarding requirements of insurance card for commercial and fleet insurance and at end deleted former language that read: "However, a person charged with violating this subsection may not be convicted if"; inserted introductory clause of (3) and inserted (3)(a) prohibiting conviction beginning July 1, 2011, of a person for whom the system provides proof of insurance at time of arrest; in (3)(b) at beginning inserted initial phrase regarding unavailability of system; and inserted (4) regarding issuance and service of complaint and notice to appear. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

The amendment to this section by sec. 10, Ch. 387, L. 2009, was rendered void by sec. 28, Ch. 413, L. 2009, a coordination section.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 393 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) An owner of a motor vehicle who ceases to maintain the insurance or bond required or whose certificate of self-insurance is canceled or whose vehicle ceases to be exempt shall immediately surrender the registration and license plates for the vehicle to the county treasurer for delivery to the department and may not operate or permit operation of the vehicle in Montana until insurance has again been furnished as required and the vehicle is again registered and licensed"; in (2) inserted third sentence concerning the failure to carry an insurance card in a motor vehicle or to provide the card upon demand; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendments: Chapters 278 and 365 substituted (1) providing that the registration receipt must contain a statement that unless the vehicle is eligible for exemption, it is unlawful to operate it without liability insurance, self-insurance, or an indemnity bond for former text requiring that a person certify that he had liability insurance, was self-insured, had an indemnity bond, or was eligible for exemption, providing that the registration and plates could be canceled if the certification was not represented, and providing that intentionally giving false information was a criminal offense; deleted former (2) that provided that an applicant wishing to register a vehicle by mail was required to sign a statement that the applicant was in compliance with the financial liability requirements; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: In (4) changed "patrolman" to "patrol officer".

1987 Amendment: In (2), after "registration of", substituted "a motor vehicle" for "an automobile or a truck having a rated capacity of three-quarters of a ton or less".

1985 Amendments: Chapter 348 in (4) inserted "a city or municipal judge".

Chapter 503 in (1) in two places, in (3), and in (4) in two places substituted references to department of justice for references to division of motor vehicles.

1981 Amendments: Chapter 409 changed "certify and display to the county treasurer" to "certify to the county treasurer that he possesses" in (1); added last sentence of (1) relating to false information; added subsection (4) relating to insurance cards.

Chapter 614 added "Except as provided in subsection (2)" to the beginning of (1); and added subsection (2) requiring that an applicant sign a statement of compliance with financial liability requirements if he registers by mail an automobile or a truck having a rated capacity of a ton or less.

Case Notes

State Required to Prove Lack of Insurance: After a traffic stop of a vehicle based on an observation that the vehicle did not have taillights, the officer approached the vehicle and requested the driver, who was Farmer's girlfriend, to produce her driver's license and proof of registration. She was unable to produce either document. The officer also requested the driver to produce proof of liability insurance on the vehicle, which she also was unable to produce. The officer then contacted dispatch to run a check on the license plate number of the vehicle, and dispatch informed him that the vehicle was registered to Farmer. At the time of the traffic stop, Farmer was seated in the vehicle's front passenger seat. Farmer also did not produce proof of liability insurance for the vehicle. Farmer received a citation for failure to carry valid liability insurance on his vehicle in violation of 61-6-301. At the trial in the District Court, the officer testified that he requested the driver to provide proof of insurance and she failed to do so. He further testified that Farmer was seated in the passenger seat, observed the interaction, and at no time made an effort to provide proof of insurance for the vehicle. The officer did not state that he directly requested Farmer to provide such proof, but rather testified that he "made a request to the driver and he [Farmer] was sitting right there, so I don't know if I made a direct request to him, but he was sitting right there when I asked for it." The state presented no other evidence, either direct or circumstantial, that Farmer did not have liability insurance for the vehicle at the time of the traffic stop. At the close of the state's case-in-chief, Farmer moved the District Court for a directed verdict, arguing that the state had failed to present evidence that his vehicle was not insured at the time of the traffic stop. The District Court determined that the state had presented sufficient evidence to convict Farmer under 61-6-301 for allowing his vehicle to be operated without valid liability insurance and found Farmer guilty of that offense. The court then sentenced Farmer and entered judgment on the conviction and sentence. Farmer appealed. The state contended that the officer's testimony that Farmer did not produce proof of insurance at the time of the traffic stop was sufficient to establish his failure to insure the vehicle. The state cited 61-6-302 and asserts that the statute imposed upon Farmer a duty to prove, upon demand, that his vehicle was insured. It was undisputed here that Farmer was not the "operator" of the vehicle at the time of the traffic stop. Farmer had no obligation pursuant to 61-6-302 to provide proof of insurance, and Farmer's failure to present proof of insurance did not support a finding that the insurance did not exist at the time of the traffic stop. The state argued 61-6-302 must be viewed as an enforcement mechanism for 61-6-301 because the only effective way to ascertain compliance with 61-6-301 is to place a duty upon the vehicle owner to provide proof of insurance. Interpreting the statutes in the manner advocated by the state would require the Supreme Court to either insert the term "owner" into 61-6-302 or insert language requiring an owner to provide proof of insurance upon request into 61-6-301 and the Court declined to do so. The case was reversed and remanded with instructions to vacate the judgment and dismiss the charge. St. v. Farmer, 2008 MT 354, 346 M 335, 195 P3d 800 (2008). (See 2009 amendment.)

Constitutionality: Enforcement of the provisions of this section requiring a person to carry proof of compliance with the required motor vehicle insurance law is not a violation of constitutional rights. Billings v. Skurdal, 224 M 84, 730 P2d 371, 43 St. Rep. 2036 (1986).

Minor's Driver's License Application — Time for Deposit of Proof of Financial Responsibility: Under 61-5-108, a parent, parents, guardian, or other responsible person may sign a minor's driver's license application and deposit proof of financial responsibility "in form and in amounts as required under the motor vehicle financial responsibility laws" and thereby escape imputation to them of the minor's negligence. This does not require the proof to be deposited when the minor's application is filed. From the time proof is deposited there is no imputed negligence, whether the deposit is before, in conjunction with, or after the filing of the minor's application, so long as insurance is in effect at the time of a given accident. Gaub v. Milbank Ins. Co., 220 M 424, 715 P2d 443, 43 St. Rep. 497 (1986).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1985 Amendments: Chapter 212 inserted (9) exempting from required motor vehicle insurance a vehicle owned by a nonresident if it is registered in the owner's jurisdiction and if he is in compliance with motor vehicle insurance requirements of that jurisdiction.

Chapter 503 in (2) substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles.

Chapter 516 in (7) after "motorcycle", inserted "or quadricycle" (effective January 1, 1986).

Coverage of Auto Dealer's Customer Using Vehicle Loaned by Dealer: Because the exclusions in 61-6-303 do not include an auto dealership, a dealership is an "owner of a motor vehicle" within the meaning of this section and must carry insurance on its vehicles. This insurance covers vehicles operated in the state by the owner or with his permission, including a customer to whom the dealer loans a vehicle, even if the customer has his own insurance. 2007 Amendment: Chapter 329 in (2) substituted second sentence concerning surrender of registration receipt and plates for former text that read: "The court shall send the receipt and plates, along with a copy of the complaint and dispositional order, to the department, which shall immediately suspend the receipt and plates", in third sentence at beginning substituted "vehicle's registration status" for "receipt and plates", inserted fourth sentence concerning recycling or destroying surrendered plates, in fifth sentence near beginning after "61-6-301" inserted "and payment of fees required under 61-3-333 for replacement license plates and registration decal and under 61-3-341 for a replacement registration receipt" and near end after "receipt" deleted "and return the license plates", in sixth sentence at end inserted "until the date indicated on the restricted registration receipt", and deleted former sixth and seventh sentences that read: "Upon the expiration of the appropriate time period, the department shall issue a regular registration receipt to the owner of the vehicle. The department may establish fees for the restricted registration receipts issued pursuant to this subsection." Amendment effective January 1, 2008.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 394 in (2) at end of second sentence after "plates" deleted "for a period of 90 days from the date of a second conviction or 180 days from the date of a third or subsequent conviction", in third sentence after "until" deleted "the expiration date of that period and until", inserted fourth sentence requiring the department to issue a restricted registration receipt and return the license plates to the offender upon proof of compliance with 61-6-301 during the 90-day period from the date of the second conviction or 180 days from the date of a third or subsequent conviction, inserted fifth sentence providing that a restricted registration receipt limits the use of a motor vehicle operated at the time of the offense to employment purposes only, inserted sixth sentence regarding issuance of regular registration receipt, and inserted seventh sentence authorizing department to establish fees for the restricted registration receipts issued under subsection; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2005.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 452 in (2), in third sentence after "period", inserted "and until proof of compliance with 61-6-301 is furnished to the department"; inserted (3) concerning fourth and subsequent convictions; inserted (6) concerning previous convictions for purposes of sentencing; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 393 deleted former (1) that read: "(1) It is unlawful for any person to operate a motor vehicle upon ways of this state open to the public without a valid policy of liability insurance in effect in an amount not less than that provided in 61-6-301 or unless the person has been issued a certificate of self-insurance pursuant to 61-6-143 or has previously posted an indemnity bond with the department as provided by 61-6-301 or is operating a vehicle exempt under 61-6-303"; in (1), near beginning, substituted "61-6-301 or 61-6-302" for "61-6-301 through 61-6-304"; in (2), near beginning, inserted "under 61-6-301 or 61-6-302"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 534 in (1), at end of third sentence, substituted "6 months" for "10 days"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 365 at beginning of first sentence of (2) substituted "Conviction of a first offense under 61-6-301 through 61-6-304 is punishable" for "A violation of 61-6-301 through 61-6-304 is a misdemeanor punishable" and inserted second and third sentences establishing fine of $350 and jail term of up to 10 days for second conviction and fine of $500 and jail term of up to 10 days, or both, for third or subsequent conviction; inserted (3) requiring court upon second or subsequent conviction to order surrender of the vehicle registration receipt and plates and to forward receipt, plates, and copy of complaint and dispositional order to Department, requiring Department to suspend receipt and plates for 90 days from date of second conviction and for 180 days from date of third or subsequent conviction, and allowing for reinstatement if vehicle is transferred to a new owner; inserted (4) allowing court to suspend fine only if it determines offender is unable to pay fine; inserted (5) prohibiting deferred imposition of penalties; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendment: Near end of section substituted "fine of not less than $250 and not to exceed $500" for "fine not to exceed $250".

1985 Amendments: Chapter 212 near beginning of first sentence substituted "ways of this state open to the public" for "highways, streets, or roadways of this state".

Chapter 440 at end of section inserted "or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than 10 days, or both".

Chapter 503 substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles.

1981 Amendments: Chapter 409 changed "punishable as provided in 61-3-601" to "punishable by a fine not to exceed $250" near end of section.

Chapter 575 substituted "61-6-143" for "[61-6-302]" and "division of motor vehicles" for "[commissioner of insurance]".

Incorrect Sentences for Operating Vehicle Without Insurance and Accident Involving Damage to Vehicle Reversed: Clark was charged on two occasions with multiple misdemeanor traffic offenses. The District Court properly based its sentencing on the factors in 46-18-101, but incorrectly applied the 1995 version of this section in sentencing Clark to 6 months in the county jail for operating a vehicle without valid liability insurance when the 1993 version of the statute in effect at the time that the crime was committed allowed a maximum sentence of 10 days. The court also sentenced Clark to 10 days' imprisonment and fined him $100 for a conviction under the 1995 version of 61-7-118 related to an accident involving damage to a vehicle, but the 1993 version in effect at the time that the crime was committed allowed for the imposition of imprisonment or a fine, but not both, upon a first conviction. These sentencing errors constituted reversible error as a matter of law, and the Supreme Court remanded for resentencing consistent with the applicable statutes. St. v. Clark, 2000 MT 40, 298 M 300, 997 P2d 107, 57 St. Rep. 185 (2000).

Insurer Liable for Payment When Liability Clear — Legislative Amendment Poor Evidence — Purpose of Statute — Leveraging Under One Coverage Prohibited — Juedeman Overruled: Guaranty National admitted 90% of the liability for an accident involving Ridley and its insured, Roope, but refused to pay Ridley's medical expenses without settling all of Ridley's claim against Roope. Ridley filed an action for a declaratory judgment against Guaranty National, asking the District Court to find that Guaranty National had a duty to pay medical expenses under 33-18-201. The District Court concluded that Guaranty National had no obligation to pay Ridley's medical expenses until final settlement of all claims arising from the accident. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that 33-18-201(6) and (13) impose an obligation on an insurer to pay claims when liability is reasonably clear, including claims submitted under the same type of coverage from an insurer. The Supreme Court based its decision on the following: (1) any contrary decisions by the U.S. District Court in Montana are not binding on Montana courts; (2) any construction of the statute based upon action that one Legislature failed to take to amend the statute was a "hazardous basis" for inferring intent of a previous Legislature when it enacted 33-18-201; (3) the purpose of the statute is to encourage prompt settlement of claims and is more consistent with the state's public policy expressed in 61-6-301 through 61-6-303 and this section; and (4) it was the "leveraging" of undisputed claims (using the payment of one claim to settle other claims in a manner to the insurer's advantage) that the Legislature sought to prohibit when it enacted the statute. To the extent that the Supreme Court implied in Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), that the requirements of 33-18-201(6) and (13) apply only to one claim or more than one claim under different types of coverage, that implication was overruled by the Supreme Court. "Free Men" Not Free to Ignore State Motor Vehicle Laws: Operation of a motor vehicle on public roads is a privilege and is subject to reasonable regulation by the state in the valid exercise of the state's police power. Reasonable regulations include mandatory vehicle registration, insurance, and seatbelt usage. The privilege may be revoked for failure to comply with regulations. No one in the state is exempt from the regulations, including appellant, who claims to be a "free man" who is not a 14th amendment citizen and who therefore does not need to obey state or federal law. Power of State to Enact and Courts to Enforce Laws Regulating Motor Vehicles: Appellant, appearing pro se, challenged as unconstitutional laws requiring driver's license, mandatory insurance, and vehicle registration. The Supreme Court held that the issues raised by the appellant were frivolous, unreasonable, and groundless in that the court had previously recognized the state's power to regulate motor vehicles in the interests of public safety at the expense of individual rights. Whitefish v. Hansen, 237 M 105, 771 P2d 976, 46 St. Rep. 657 (1989).

Peace Officers' Authority to Enforce Provisions of Mandatory Insurance Law: Peace officers who have reasonable grounds to believe that an individual is in violation of the mandatory motor vehicle insurance law may either effect the person's immediate arrest or issue a notice to appear. 38 A.G. Op. 49 (1979).

Power of "Accident Investigator" to Enforce Provisions of Mandatory Insurance Law: The role of an "accident investigator", who is not a peace officer, in enforcing the provisions of the mandatory insurance law is the same as that of a private person. If the accident investigator has reasonable cause to believe an offense has been committed, he must execute a sworn complaint pursuant to 46-6-201. 38 A.G. Op. 49 (1979).

Prosecutorial Responsibility — Dismissal by Prosecutor if Proof of Compliance Produced: Subsequent to the execution of a notice to appear on sworn complaint alleging failure to maintain motor vehicle liability protection, prosecution is the responsibility of the City or County Attorney. The prosecuting attorney may cause the dismissal of the charge upon proof that the defendant was, in fact, maintaining the required liability protection. 38 A.G. Op. 49 (1979).

CHAPTER 7
ACCIDENTS AND ACCIDENT REPORTS

Part 1
Uniform Accident Reporting Act

Part Case Notes

Weight and Admissibility of Evidence — Blood Tests: The suggestion that a change in the blood of accident victims between the time of their death in an accident and the time the blood was drawn 9 to 12 hours later might have caused clotting of the blood and a resultant higher blood alcohol reading went to the weight of the test results and not their admissibility. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Application of Uniform Accident Reporting Act: The provisions of the Uniform Accident Reporting Act, Title 61, ch. 7, part 1, apply on highways and elsewhere throughout the state, as specified in 61-7-102. The application of the Act is unaffected by the definition of "ways of this state open to the public" in 61-8-101, which applies only to Title 61, ch. 8, regarding traffic regulation. 41 A.G. Op. 54 (1986).

Attorney General's Opinions

Application of Uniform Accident Reporting Act: The provisions of the Uniform Accident Reporting Act, Title 61, ch. 7, part 1, apply on highways and elsewhere throughout the state, as specified in 61-7-102. The application of the Act is unaffected by the definition of "ways of this state open to the public" in 61-8-101, which applies only to Title 61, ch. 8, regarding traffic regulation. 41 A.G. Op. 54 (1986).

Application to Private Property: A statute regulating operation of motor vehicles which, by its terms, applies to conduct "upon the highways and elsewhere throughout the state", may be applied to conduct occurring on private property. 39 A.G. Op. 30 (1981).

61-7-103. Accidents involving another person or deceased person.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 235 in first sentence near beginning substituted "vehicle who knows or reasonably should have known that the driver has been in an accident with another person or a deceased person" for "vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to or death of any person"; deleted former (2) and (3) that read: "(2) (a) Except as provided in subsection (2)(b), a driver failing to stop or to comply with the requirements of subsection (1) shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment for a term of not less than 30 days or more than 1 year, by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $5,000, or by both fine and imprisonment.

(b) If the accident resulted in serious bodily injury or death of any person, a driver failing to stop or to comply with the requirements of subsection (1) shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for a term of not less than 1 year or more than 10 years, by a fine in an amount not to exceed $50,000, or by both fine and imprisonment.

(3) The department shall revoke the license or permit to drive of any resident and any nonresident operating privilege of a person convicted of violating this section for the period prescribed in 61-5-205"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2011.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 145 in (2)(a) at beginning inserted exception clause; inserted (2)(b) providing a felony penalty for failure to stop at an accident or to stop without obstructing traffic if the accident resulted in serious bodily injury or death; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 556 in (2) at beginning substituted "driver" for "person"; in (3) at end substituted "61-5-205" for "61-5-208"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 5, 2003.

1985 Amendment: In (3) substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles.

Case Notes

Statute Not Unconstitutionally Vague: Steglich was charged with failure to remain at the scene of a fatal accident pursuant to 61-7-103. Steglich moved to dismiss on grounds that the statute was unconstitutionally vague. The District Court held that the statute was vague both facially and as applied to Steglich and granted the dismissal motion. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court reasoned that the statute was vague on its face because the criminal intent element was based on a reasonableness determination made by a factfinder, so the statute lacked a specified standard of conduct required by law. The court also found that the statute was vague as applied to Steglich because Steglich could not have reasonably understood that leaving the accident scene to obtain help for the victim was prohibited and because the statute fails to provide sufficient guidelines to prevent arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement with regard to Steglich's conduct. The state argued that the statute was not void on its face because it was not void in all applications, noting that a person could be charged with failure to remain at an accident if the person offered no assistance. The state also argued that the statute was not vague as applied to Steglich because an ordinary person would have fair notice that the law applied to a person who leaves an accident victim alive but unconscious, walks home past several residences where help could be called, and then gives keys to friends to go back to the accident scene while the person launders his clothes and takes a shower. The Supreme Court found that the statute was not vague on its face because it provides persons of ordinary intelligence fair notice of the conduct that is prohibited. A criminal statute is not rendered unconstitutionally vague solely because a factfinder determines the reasonableness of a defendant's actions. Additionally, the District Court applied the wrong standard in determining constitutionality. Rather than indulging every possible presumption in an effort to uphold constitutionality, the District Court speculated about hypothetical situations that could render the statute unconstitutional. The proper inquiry is whether the statute is impermissibly vague in every application, not whether the statute is vague as applied to some but not all hypothetical scenarios. Steglich did not meet the burden of demonstrating that no standard of conduct was specified at all. The court also held that the statute was not vague as applied specifically to Steglich, because 61-7-103 provides actual notice to citizens of what conduct is prohibited and provides minimal guidelines to ensure that law enforcement officers will not arbitrarily and discriminatorily charge citizens with failing to remain at the scene of an accident that involves injury or death. The case was remanded for further proceedings. St. v. District Court, 2009 MT 163, 350 M 465, 208 P3d 408 (2009), following St. v. Dixon, 2000 MT 82, 299 M 165, 998 P2d 544 (2000).

Supervisory Control Appropriate to Address Constitutionality of Statute Requiring Person to Remain at Site of Fatal Accident: Steglich was charged with failure to remain at the scene of a fatal accident pursuant to 61-7-103. Steglich moved to dismiss on grounds that the statute was unconstitutionally vague. The District Court held that the statute was vague both facially and as applied to Steglich and granted the dismissal motion. The state filed a petition for supervisory control. The Supreme Court held that urgency or emergency factors existed that made the normal appeal process inadequate and that because the case involved purely legal questions as well as constitutional issues of statewide importance and because the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law causing a gross injustice, supervisory control was appropriate. St. v. District Court, 2009 MT 163, 350 M 465, 208 P3d 408 (2009).

Motion to Dismiss Based on Insufficient Evidence of Negligent Homicide Properly Denied — Deviation From Reasonableness Standard Sufficient to Support Finding of Negligent Conduct: After consuming at least five shots of brandy and four beers at a tavern, Davis hit and killed a pedestrian on the way home, then left the accident scene. Upon arriving home, he told his girlfriend that he had hit a deer, ate dinner, and went to bed. Davis was later charged with negligent homicide and failure to remain at the scene of an accident that resulted in death or personal injuries. Following presentation of the state's case, Davis moved for dismissal based on insufficient evidence, which was denied. Davis was convicted and appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that a rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of negligent homicide beyond a reasonable doubt based on evidence that Davis consciously disregarded the risk posed by his driving under the influence of alcohol (even though blood alcohol content could not be tested because he left the scene) and that Davis's conduct immediately before, during, and after the accident revealed a gross deviation from the standard of conduct that a reasonable person not under the influence of alcohol would have observed. St. v.

Davis, 2000 MT 199, 300 M 458, 5 P3d 547, 57 St. Rep. 773 (2000), followed in St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Knowledge of Personal Injury or Death Held Element of Crime: Defendant was convicted of leaving the scene of an accident involving personal injuries in violation of 61-7-103. In instructing the jury on the elements of the crime, the trial judge failed to include as an element that defendant knew that the accident had resulted in personal injuries. On appeal, the State argued that to require that such knowledge is an element of the crime would not be reasonable because it would encourage people to leave the scene of an accident to foreclose the opportunity of acquiring this knowledge. The Supreme Court ruled that knowledge of injury was an element of the crime but that knowledge of personal injury or death may be inferred from the seriousness of the accident. St. v. Stafford, 208 M 324, 678 P2d 644, 41 St. Rep. 377 (1984), followed in St. v. Zeltner, 2000 MT 319, 302 M 504, 15 P3d 384, 57 St. Rep. 1346 (2000).

Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence to Support Particularized Suspicion to Justify Investigatory Stop — Petition for Reinstatement of Driver's License Properly Denied: A highway patrol officer observed a vehicle swerve and hit the guardrail. The vehicle did not stop, so the officer followed the vehicle as it exited the freeway. The officer believed, in part, that the driver violated this section, failing to report an accident causing damage of $500 or more, so the officer stopped the vehicle and subsequently arrested Moore for DUI. When Moore refused a breath test, the officer seized Moore's driver's license. Moore petitioned for reinstatement of the license, arguing that the officer could formulate no suspicion that Moore was involved in wrongdoing that would warrant an investigative stop because the officer could not have known whether Moore was going to report the accident by the quickest means, which was for Moore to drive home and call. The District Court denied the petition, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The officer testified that the damage to the guardrail alone exceeded $500 and that Moore passed up at least two opportunities to stop and use a pay telephone to report the accident before the investigatory stop. Although the evidence conflicted, it was within the province of the District Court to determine the weight of the evidence and credibility of the witnesses. The officer testified credibly, and there was sufficient evidence in the record to indicate that the officer had the requisite particularized suspicion to justify the investigatory stop. Therefore, Moore's petition to reinstate the driver's license was properly denied. Moore v. St., 2002 MT 315, 313 M 126, 61 P3d 746

(2002), followed in St. v. Schulke, 2005 MT 77, 326 M 390, 109 P3d 744 (2005). See also Weer v. St., 2010 MT 232, 358 Mont. 130, 244 P.3d 311.

Jurisdiction of Victimless Crime by Non-Indian on Reservation: The District Court held that state courts do not have jurisdiction over the crime of failing to report an accident when the incident occurred within the reservation, the driver was a non-Indian, and the property belonged to an Indian. The Supreme Court found that the offense should be analyzed as a victimless crime for purposes of determining jurisdiction because the alleged criminal act was failure to discharge a reporting duty, not infliction of damage upon property belonging to an Indian. Under the authority of U.S. v. Wheeler, 435 US 313, 55 L Ed 2d 303, 98 S Ct 1079 (1978), Draper v. U.S., 164 US 240, 41 L Ed 419, 17 S Ct 107 (1896), and 18 U.S.C. 1152, federal and tribal interests in providing a federal forum failed to outweigh the state's strong interest in public safety. The policy of providing a federal forum when criminal prosecutions pit the interests of non-Indian offenders against Indian victims was not furthered where, as here, the connection to destruction of Indian property was only tangential to the crime charged; therefore, the state's interests controlled. St. v. Thomas, 233 M 451, 760 P2d 96, 45 St. Rep. 1627 (1988), followed in St. v. Haskins, 269 M 202, 887 P2d 1189, 51 St. Rep. 1474 (1994).

Habitual Offender — Complaint Invalid for Lack of Substantiation of Prior Charge: The complaint to have defendant declared to be a habitual offender was invalid on its face since one of the offenses claimed against defendant, the point value of which was necessary to meet the 30-point requirement of 61-11-203, was a conviction under this section for failure to report an accident by the quickest means, but no summons or other information was appended sufficient to substantiate the conviction. With respect to that charge the complaint should have stated the date of the alleged charge, the place it occurred, the arresting officer, but most importantly, that there was bodily injury or death involved or that apparent property damage in the amount of $100 or more was incurred. State ex rel. Sol v. Orcutt, 180 M 15, 588 P2d 996 (1979).

1989 Amendment: In (2), at beginning, inserted exception clause, in second sentence, after "examined", inserted "and copied, without obtaining a court order", and near end inserted "or by a party to a civil action arising from the accident"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) No such report shall be used as evidence in any trial, civil or criminal, arising out of an accident, except that the department shall furnish upon demand of any person who has or claims to have made such a report or upon the demand of any court a certificate showing that a specified accident report has or has not been made to the department solely to prove a compliance or a failure to comply with the requirement that such a report be made to the department"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1985 Amendment: In (1) in two places and in (3) in three places substituted references to department of justice for references to division of motor vehicles.

Case Notes

Admissibility of Blood Test Results: In a suit arising from a motor vehicle collision, laboratory test results of blood alcohol analyses of two victims of the accident were not inadmissible under this section and were not required or supplemental reports within the meaning of this section's prohibition against the admission of such reports in evidence. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Admissibility of Copies: Where a technician who performed blood alcohol tests, ascertained readings on a graph made by gas chromatograph, and completed test result forms testified at trial and the result forms were introduced in evidence, it was not error to admit the forms without producing the graphs. The forms were admissible as copies in lieu of the graphs under the rule providing that a copy made in the regular course of business is admissible to the same extent as the original. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Compliance With Administrative Rules: Although a criminal defendant is entitled to the safeguards of an administrative rule setting out blood testing procedures and implementing the statute providing for blood alcohol tests of drivers arrested for driving while under the influence before the presumption of being under the influence can arise from a certain blood alcohol level, it does not follow that the same procedural safeguards must be applied when blood test results are used in a civil proceeding, especially when the statutory presumption used in criminal cases is not relied upon. Therefore, where testimony in civil action established that witnesses for parties introducing test results followed good practice in the testing field, it was not error to fail, on a foundation for admitting test results, to prove compliance with the administrative rule. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Plain Error in Admitting Evidence: Whenever the introduction in evidence of blood test results of a driver or passenger, in a suit arising from a motor vehicle collision, is prohibited by this section, it is plain error to allow the tests in evidence, even though an objection to their admission does not specifically refer to this section. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Proof of Source of Blood Used for Blood Tests: There was no merit to the argument that defendants, sued for wrongful death, failed to prove that blood used for blood alcohol tests admitted in evidence came from motor vehicle accident victims where plaintiff did little more than selectively present testimony at trial and the persons who took the blood samples had no doubt that they were taken from victims. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Inadmissibility in Evidence: In negligence action by driver of automobile against city and driver of city road grader with whom he collided, accident report filed by city driver with Butte City Police Department was privileged, confidential, and inadmissible, and its admission into evidence over objection of city driver was prejudicial error even though case was heard by court without jury. Morrison v. Butte, 150 M 106, 431 P2d 79 (1967).

Attorney General's Opinions

Insurance Carrier Entitled to Copy of Accident Report and Supplemental Information: A traffic accident report is confidential and may be disseminated only to those authorized by law to receive it. Under this section, the insurance carrier of a person involved in a traffic accident is entitled to copies of the accident report and supplemental information, including witness statements, whether or not the insurance carrier is referred to or named in the accident report. 51 A.G. Op. 8 (2005). See also 37 A.G. Op. 112 (1978).

Disclosure of Investigation Reports: County Attorneys, law enforcement personnel, and Coroners must release reports of accident investigations, autopsies, and related tests to persons specifically listed in statutes. Public access to the results of investigations not covered by statute is left to the discretion of the public official following the guidelines set forth in this opinion and 37 A.G. Op. 107 (1978). Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Case Notes

Incorrect Sentences for Operating Vehicle Without Insurance and Accident Involving Damage to Vehicle Reversed: Clark was charged on two occasions with multiple misdemeanor traffic offenses. The District Court properly based its sentencing on the factors in 46-18-101, but incorrectly applied the 1995 version of 61-6-304 in sentencing Clark to 6 months in the county jail for operating a vehicle without valid liability insurance when the 1993 version of the statute in effect at the time that the crime was committed allowed a maximum sentence of 10 days. The court also sentenced Clark to 10 days' imprisonment and fined him $100 for a conviction under the 1995 version of this section related to an accident involving damage to a vehicle, but the 1993 version in effect at the time that the crime was committed allowed for the imposition of imprisonment or a fine, but not both, upon a first conviction. These sentencing errors constituted reversible error as a matter of law, and the Supreme Court remanded for resentencing consistent with the applicable statutes. St. v. Clark, 2000 MT 40, 298 M 300, 997 P2d 107, 57 St. Rep. 185 (2000).

TRAFFIC REGULATION

Chapter Case Notes

Juvenile — Traffic Violation — Guilty Plea — Ability to Waive Rights: The provisions of the Youth Court Act do not apply to traffic violations. The youth who was accused of failure to drive in a careful and prudent manner was not subject to a jail sentence if found guilty. He therefore did not have the right to counsel and could knowledgeably waive his rights without the presence of counsel or his parents. State ex rel. Maier v. Application of Uniform Accident Reporting Act: The provisions of the Uniform Accident Reporting Act, Title 61, ch. 7, part 1, apply on highways and elsewhere throughout the state, as specified in 61-7-102. Parochial School Vehicles and Head Start Vehicles as School Buses: Parochial school vehicles and Head Start vehicles used to transport children to and from school are school buses within the meaning of 61-1-116 (now repealed—see 61-8-102 for definitions), and as such they must comply with the provisions of Title 61 relative to school bus equipment, operation, and inspection. 39 A.G. 2011 Amendment: Chapter 282 in (2)(c) inserted reference to 61-8-465; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 28, 2011.

Applicability — Retroactive Applicability: Section 13, Ch. 282, L. 2011, provided: "(1) [This act] applies to offenses committed on or after [the effective date of this act] [April 28, 2011].

(2) For the purpose of determining the number of prior refusals to submit to testing under 61-8-402 and of convictions for prior offenses referred to in [section 1] [61-8-465], [this act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to refusals made and to violations of 45-5-106, 45-5-205, 61-8-401, or 61-8-406 committed prior to [the effective date of this act] [April 28, 2011]."

1983 Amendments — Composite: Chapter 659 made the following changes: in (2)(b), after "61-8-301" substituted "61-8-401(1)(b), (1)(c), and (2) apply upon" for "61-8-401, with regard to operating a vehicle while under the influence of drugs, shall apply upon"; inserted (2)(c) which read: "(c) the provisions of 61-8-401, except subsections (1)(b), (1)(c), and (2) thereof, and 61-8-402 through 61-8-405 apply upon all ways of this state open to the public. For the purposes of this section and 61-8-401 through 61-8-404, "ways of this state open to the public" means any highway, road, alley, lane, parking area, or other public or private place adapted and fitted for public travel that is in common use by the public."; and in (3) near middle, before "provided" inserted "or on ways of this state open to the public".

Chapter 698 made the following changes: inserted (1) defining "ways of the state open to the public"; in (2)(b) after "apply" substituted "anywhere within this state" for "upon highways and elsewhere throughout the state"; and inserted (2)(c) which read: "The provisions of 61-8-301 and 61-8-401, with regard to operating a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, apply upon all ways of this state open to the public."

The definitions of "ways of this state open to the public" in Ch. 659 and Ch. 698 are identical, except that the definition in Ch. 698 applies to all of Title 61, ch. 8, while the definition in Ch. 659 applies only to 61-8-101 and 61-8-401 through 61-8-404, and Ch. 659 uses "this state" in the definition while Ch. 698 uses "the state" in the definition. The Code Commissioner has codified the version having wider applicability and has used "this state" throughout the text for consistency.

Both Ch. 659 and Ch. 698 provided in (2)(b) for the application of the provisions of operating a vehicle under the influence of drugs anywhere within the state. The Code Commissioner has included portions of both amendments for clarity.

Both Ch. 659 and Ch. 698 provided in (2)(c) for the application of 61-8-401 with regard to operating a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol on all ways of the state open to the public. Chapter 698 included 61-8-301 in this subsection, and Ch. 659 included 61-8-402 through 61-8-405 in this subsection. The Code Commissioner has included all sections in the codified version.

Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence That Defendant Owned Vehicle and Drove on Public Way: At a DUI trial, Mooney contended that the state failed to prove that the vehicle that crashed into Ruff's fence belonged to Mooney and that the vehicle was ever driven on ways of the state open to the public. Mooney's arguments failed. It was Mooney who repeatedly appeared at Ruff's door and communicated that his vehicle had crashed into Ruff's fence, claiming that it was his car and apologizing for damaging the fence. Neither Ruff nor the investigating officer observed anyone else in the vicinity when Mooney came to the door. Based on this circumstantial evidence, a rational trier of fact could have concluded that Mooney was the driver of the vehicle. Additionally, a rational trier of fact could have concluded that the lane upon which Ruff's property sat qualified as a public or private place adapted for public travel in common use by the public, which constituted proof beyond a reasonable doubt that Mooney's car was driven on ways of the state open to the public. Mooney's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Mooney, 2006 MT 121, 332 M 249, 137 P3d 532 (2006).

DUI Arrest in Restaurant Parking Area — Parking Lot Considered Way of State Open to Public: Hayes was arrested for DUI in the parking area of a restaurant. Following conviction, Hayes appealed on grounds that because the parking lot was privately owned, the implied consent law did not apply and the officer had no right to request a breath sample because Hayes' vehicle was not located on a way of the state open to the public pursuant to this section. The Supreme Court disagreed. The fact that the lot was unpaved and had potholes was inconsequential. Despite its poor condition, the lot was adapted and fitted for public travel and was in common use by the public. The public was encouraged to use the lot, including parking by restaurant patrons and selling by vendors in the lot. Therefore, the trial court did not err in concluding that the parking lot was within the definition of ways of this state open to the public, and Hayes' conviction was affirmed. Hayes v. St., 2005 MT 148, 327 M 346, 114 P3d 261 (2005).

Failure of Counsel to File Motion to Dismiss Not Considered Ineffective Assistance When Element of Offense Before Jury: Maki was arrested for DUI after being discovered slumped into the passenger seat of a running vehicle that was parked off the highway near a missile silo access site. Maki claimed ineffective assistance of counsel because his attorney did not file a motion to dismiss based on the fact that Maki was not on a way of the state open to the public. However, Maki's location on a way open to the public was an element of a DUI offense, so the issue was before the jury and Maki had an opportunity to contest the point. Counsel did not need to offer a motion to dismiss in order to raise the issue, and failure to do so neither prejudiced nor deprived Maki of a fair trial, so the ineffective assistance claim failed, and the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Maki, 2004 MT 226, 322 M 420, 97 P3d 556 (2004).

Carport Not Considered Part of Home — Privacy Standard Inapplicable to DUI Search of Condominium Carport: Large was arrested for misdemeanor DUI while seated in her running car that was parked in the carport outside her condominium. Large moved to suppress the evidence because she was arrested at night at her home for a misdemeanor committed elsewhere, in violation of 46-6-105. She also contended that the arrest was in violation of her right to privacy. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a carport may be structurally contiguous with the rest of a private house or dwelling, presence in a carport does not equate to presence in the home, and although lot lines do convey certain concrete ownership rights, the right to be free from misdemeanor arrest at night is reserved for the home, not coterminous property appurtenant to the home. Further, under this section, ways of the state open to the public include parking areas and other public or private places adapted for public travel that are in common use by the public. Large could not be considered to be in her home while sitting in a car parked in the common-area parking lot in her condominium complex where officers could see what was readily visible to any visitor without being overly intrusive. Thus, Large had no reasonable expectation of privacy that prohibited her arrest in her own carport, nor did a violation of 46-6-105 occur. Whitefish v. Large, 2003 MT 322, 318 M 310, 80 P3d 427 (2003). See also St. v. Hubbel, 286 M 200, 951 P2d 971 (1997).

Privately Owned and Maintained Road as Way of This State Open to Public: As defined in this section, "ways of this state open to the public" does not include only those ways or places for travel that are legally dedicated to the public use. The term includes a privately owned and maintained unposted roadway adapted for public travel and commonly used by members of the public who are lost, curious, or use the road to access residences served by the road. St. v. Weis, 285 M 41, 945 P2d 900, 54 St. Rep. 1034 (1997), followed in St. v. Schwein, 2000 MT 371, 303 M 450, 16 P3d 373, 57 St. Rep. 1587 (2000).

Private Parking Lot Within Definition: A private bank parking lot commonly used by members of the public who are patrons of nearby taverns rather than bank customers is a parking area fitted for public travel and in common use by the public and is therefore within the definition of "ways open to the public". A person arrested for driving under the influence in the parking lot was subject to the provisions of the implied consent law, and the District Court did not err in suspending the driver's license for 90 days. Santee v. St., 267 M 304, 883 P2d 829, 51 St. Rep. 1034 (1994).

Driving Under Influence in Privately Owned Parking Garage — Definition Applicable: A privately owned parking facility fit the definition of "ways of this state open to the public"; therefore, defendant was properly charged under 61-8-401 when arrested for DUI in a hotel parking garage. Billings v. Peete, 224 M 158, 729 P2d 1268, 43 St. Rep. 2097 (1986), followed in Santee v. St., 267 M 304, 883 P2d 829, 51 St. Rep. 1034 (1994), and St. v. Schwein, 2000 MT 371, 303 M 450, 16 P3d 373, 57 St. Rep. 1587 (2000).

Parking Lot — Traffic Laws Inapplicable: The duties of drivers on a parking lot are governed by general rules of negligence and not by traffic laws. Ashton v. Harris, 161 M 108, 505 P2d 413 (1973).

Attorney General's Opinions

Application of Uniform Accident Reporting Act: The provisions of the Uniform Accident Reporting Act, Title 61, ch. 7, part 1, apply on highways and elsewhere throughout the state, as specified in 61-7-102. The application of the Act is unaffected by the definition of "ways of this state open to the public" in 61-8-101, which applies only to Title 61, ch. 8, regarding traffic regulation. 41 A.G. Op. 54 (1986).

City Council — Lack of Authority to Regulate Crosswalk on Federal-Aid Highway in Manner Inconsistent With State Law: A city council may not enact an ordinance requiring a driver of a motor vehicle on a federal-aid or state highway to stop for a pedestrian within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is not on the half of the roadway on which the vehicle is traveling and when the pedestrian is not close enough to be in danger. 41 A.G. Op. 10 (1985).

Application to Private Property: A statute regulating operation of motor vehicles which, by its terms, applies to conduct "upon the highways and elsewhere throughout the state", may be applied to conduct occurring on private property. 39 A.G. Op. 30 (1981).

2011 Amendment: Chapter 296 in (2) in definition of noncommercial motor vehicle at end substituted "61-1-101(9)(b)" for "61-1-101(8)(b)". Amendment effective January 30, 2012.

2007 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 329 in definition of noncommercial motor vehicle at end substituted "61-8-101(8)(b)" for "61-8-101(7)(b)". Amendment effective January 1, 2008.

Chapter 449 in definition of authorized emergency vehicle near beginning after "vehicle of" substituted "a governmental fire agency organized under Title 7, chapter 33" for "the fire department or fire patrol"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective June 1, 2007.

2005 Amendment — Coordination: Chapter 542 inserted (2) defining authorized emergency vehicle, bicycle, business district, controlled-access highway, crosswalk, flag person, highway, ignition interlock device, intersection, local authorities, noncommercial motor vehicle, official traffic control devices, pedestrian, police vehicle, private road or driveway, residence district, right-of-way, school bus, sidewalk, traffic control signal, and urban district; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

Pursuant to sec. 7, Ch. 233, L. 2005, a coordination section, in definition of pedestrian at end inserted "or any person in a manually or mechanically propelled wheelchair or other low-powered, mechanically propelled vehicle designed specifically for use by a physically disabled person".

2003 Amendment: Chapter 20 substituted present language regarding interpretation of the chapter for former language that read: "This chapter shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the law of those states which enact it." Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Case Notes

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Two Roads Not Highways — No Intersection: In a negligence action following a vehicular accident, the record showed that the road on which plaintiff was traveling was a paved through road; the short segment on which the defendant approached was not a through road and therefore could not form an intersection within the meaning of 61-1-212 (now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions) The evidence does not establish that the two roads joined were highways. To establish an "intersection", the two roads must be "highways" as defined in 61-1-201 (now repealed — see 61-1-101 for definitions). Kimes v. Herrin, 217 M 330, 705 P2d 108, 42 St. Rep. 1231 (1985).

Detour Signs and Barricades: Detour signs and "zebra board" barricades are official traffic-control devices when erected by public authority in conformity with provisions of the highway code. Their use to block off an unopened section of highway under construction negates any implied consent to use of the section. Gilleard v. Draine, 159 M 167, 496 P2d 83 (1972).

Nature of Roads Forming Intersection: An intersection is formed when two publicly maintained ways join at any angle. Rader v. Nicholls, 140 M 459, 373 P2d 312 (1962).

When Junction Is an Intersection: In order to show that a junction of two roads constitutes an "intersection", it must be shown that both roads are "highways" within the meaning of 61-1-201 (now repealed — see 61-1-101 for definitions). Leach v. Great N. Ry., 139 M 84, 360 P2d 94 (1961), followed in Kimes v. Herrin, 217 M 330, 705 P2d 108, 42 St. Rep. 1231 (1985).

Parochial School Vehicles and Head Start Vehicles as School Buses: Parochial school vehicles and Head Start vehicles used to transport children to and from school are school buses within the meaning of 61-1-116 (now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions), and as such they must comply with the provisions of Title 61 relative to school bus equipment, operation, and inspection. 39 A.G. Op. 63 (1982).

Attorney General's Opinions

City Council — Lack of Authority to Regulate Crosswalk on Federal-Aid Highway in Manner Inconsistent With State Law: A city council may not enact an ordinance requiring a driver of a motor vehicle on a federal-aid or state highway to stop for a pedestrian within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is not on the half of the roadway on which the vehicle is traveling and when the pedestrian is not close enough to be in danger. 41 A.G. Op. 10 (1985).

Board of County Commissioners — Right to Set Speed Limits: A Board of County Commissioners, constituted in a commission form of government, may alter otherwise statutorily established speed limits by compliance with 61-8-310. It may further adopt traffic ordinances to the extent permitted under 61-12-101(14), and any such ordinances may include penalty provisions. 40 A.G. Op. 51 (1984).

Authority to Regulate Parking on Private Lots: The uniform act regulating traffic on highways as adopted by the state precludes a municipal corporation from enacting an ordinance to regulate parking upon privately owned lots. 37 A.G. Op. 53 (1977).

Case Notes

Public Duty Doctrine Inapplicable Based on Special Relationship Between Pursuing Officers and Pedestrian: Plaintiff was injured when defendant, a runaway juvenile probationer, hit plaintiff with a stolen vehicle while being pursued by law enforcement officers during a high-speed chase through Harlowton. Plaintiff sued the county and the County Sheriff for damages related to the crash. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county and the County Sheriff, holding that the public duty doctrine applied and that neither plaintiff's nor the juvenile's actions were foreseeable. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The public duty doctrine generally shields law enforcement officers from negligence claims, but an exception arises when there is a special relationship between an officer and an individual that gives rise to a special duty that is more particular than the duty owed to the public at large. Applying the circumstances set out in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), the court noted that the first exception to the public trust doctrine is whether a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which plaintiff is a member, creates a special relationship. Under this section, a duty of care is created on the part of the drivers of emergency vehicles to drive with due regard for the safety of all persons. Based on this special relationship, the court held that the public duty doctrine did not apply. As a bystander on a public road, plaintiff was within the scope of risk and was thus a foreseeable plaintiff. Last, the court considered the issue of causation. Plaintiff claimed negligence on the part of the county and the officers, but plaintiff was actually injured by the actions of the juvenile, so the question was whether the juvenile's actions were intervening superseding acts that broke the chain of causation as a matter of law. Whether plaintiff's injuries were caused primarily by the juvenile or by the officers was an issue that reasonable minds might disagree upon and therefore appropriately adjudicated by a jury, so the Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment and remanded for trial on the issues of breach of duty, causation, including intervening superseding cause, and damages. Eklund v. Trost, 2006 MT 333, 335 M 112, 151 P3d 870 (2006), applying Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980), and Day v. St., 980 P2d 1171 (Utah 1999). See also Whitefish v. Jentile, 2012 MT 185, 366 Mont. 94, 285 P.3d 515.

Duty to Drive With "Due Regard": In interpreting this section, the test for "due regard" is whether, with the privileges and immunities provided by that statute, the driver of an emergency vehicle acted in a reasonably careful manner. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007, 37 St. Rep. 1170 (1980).

Yield of Right-of-Way Required Upon Approach of Emergency Vehicle Using Only Visual Signals: Upon the immediate approach of an authorized emergency vehicle making use of only visual signals pursuant to 61-9-402, other drivers shall yield the right-of-way or stop. Traffic Control Devices 61-8-201. Obedience to traffic control devices — exception for certain vehicles and funeral processions.

Compiler's Comments

2005 Amendment: Chapter 542 in five places after reference to traffic control device inserted reference to flag person; in (2) near end of first sentence after "legible" inserted "or visible"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 53 in (1) at beginning of first sentence inserted "Unless otherwise directed by a peace officer, flag person, crossing guard, or public safety worker" and at end deleted "unless otherwise directed by a highway patrol officer or police officer, subject to the exceptions granted in this chapter" and in second sentence after "emergency vehicle" inserted "a police vehicle, or a highway patrol vehicle" and at end after "procession" inserted "are exempt from obedience to official traffic control devices as provided in this chapter"; in (2) in four places substituted reference to traffic control device for reference to sign and near middle of second sentence after "particular section" inserted "of this chapter"; inserted (3) providing that conforming traffic control devices are presumed to have been placed by an official act or at the discretion of a lawful authority; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1991 Amendment: At the end of (1) inserted exception concerning driver of a motor vehicle in funeral procession; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: In (1) changed "patrolman" to "patrol officer".

Case Notes

Through-Road Intersections: Montana law does not contemplate that if a road is designated as "through" it becomes the duty of persons approaching intersections with such through road to stop in the absence of stop signs. When two vehicles in this case collided in such an intersection, having entered at about the same time, the court assessed the negligence of each driver at 50%. Andrews v. U.S., 447 F. Supp. 434, 35 St. Rep. 350 (D.C. Mont. 1978).

61-8-202. Department of transportation to adopt manual.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 53 at beginning of second sentence substituted "The manual adopted by the department of transportation must" for "This uniform system shall" and at end inserted "published by the United States federal highway administration"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1991 Amendment: Substituted references to Department of Transportation for references to Department of Highways. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1981 Amendment: Deleted "and specifications" following "manual" in the first sentence; substituted "manual on uniform traffic control devices, as amended" for language relating to a system and sign manual adopted by the American association of state highway officials.

Case Notes

Violation of Manual Not Negligence Per Se — Compliance Not Necessarily Evidence of Due Care: The District Court did not err in refusing a proposed instruction that a violation of the Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices is negligence per se. If the Legislature mandates a department to adopt rules but does not act further to adopt the rules, the rules do not become part of a statute by reference. The manual was not a statute but rather an administrative regulation and as such was not incorporated into this section by reference. A violation of the manual is evidence of negligence but not negligence per se. It was not error to refuse an instruction that mere compliance with the traffic control regulations did not necessarily constitute due care. Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 255 M 495, 844 P2d 61, 49 St. Rep. 1092 (1992).

State Law Governs: In a case involving a collision at a railroad crossing, the locality in charge of crossing had not made a determination as to the type of warning device to be installed at the crossing as permitted under the federal manual on uniform traffic control devices. Where the locality had not made this determination there was no federal regulation of the subject matter and the railroads duty of care was determinable under state law. Marshall v. Burlington N., Inc., 720 F2d 1149 (9th Cir. 1983).

Uniform Manual Improperly Excluded in Wrongful Death Action: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the state and the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, the court committed reversible error in refusing to admit into evidence a copy of the Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices for Streets and Highways. While the manual does not have the force and effect of law, it may be considered to be a norm to be used for traffic-control devices and its contents may be considered by the jury in determining whether the defendants were negligent. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Nonprejudicial Cumulative Error on Hazardousness of Crossing: The District Court admitted part and refused part of the State of Montana's Railroad Crossing Protection Policy on the ground that the hazard rating for the railroad crossing in question was not necessarily connected to its hazard rating at the time of the accident. The District Court also admitted some and refused other evidence relating to traffic counts and hazard indexes. The District Court by instruction defined ordinary care and by further instructions told the jury that public authorities have the duty to exercise ordinary or reasonable care to plan and design the highways to make them reasonably safe for the traveling public. The District Court also instructed that the duty of the county in maintaining the crossing was commensurate with the increased hazard occasioned by any obstructions, so that it was the duty of the county to exercise ordinary care under the circumstances shown. Evidence was presented for the jury to consider in determining whether or not the county exercised ordinary care in failing to provide additional signal devices at the crossing. The claimed errors were therefore not prejudicial to plaintiff, since they were only cumulative on one side or the other of the issue of how hazardous the crossing was. Wollaston v. Burlington N., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277, 37 St. Rep. 1015 (1980).

Jury Instruction on Negligence as Matter of Law — Effect of Department Manual: Plaintiff contended that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury that the state and Burlington Northern were negligent as a matter of law in failing to place signals on the railroad crossing where the accident occurred in conformity with the Department of Highway's (now Department of Transportation's) Manual on Traffic Control Devices. The manual, however, does not have equal dignity with statutory law. Before the defendants can be charged with negligence in violating the manual, it must first be determined: (1) that the crossing was extra hazardous, and (2) that failure to install additional warning signals was the proximate cause of defendant's injuries. These were questions of fact for the jury since conflicting evidence was offered at trial, so no error was committed by failing to give the requested instructions. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600, 37 St. Rep. 93 (1980).

Manual as Evidence: In action for wrongful death of driver of state highway truck killed while sanding road in snowstorm, it was error to admit into evidence Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices adopted by Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) where manual required that appropriate signs be erected warning public of road work but did not specifically designate who was to erect them. Williams v. Maley, 150 M 261, 434 P2d 398 (1967).

Lack of Uniformity: Where plaintiff attempted to pass defendant's truck 250 feet from unmarked intersection and was struck by defendant's truck as it started to make a left-hand turn, in reconciling this section with 61-8-325, which prohibits driving to the left of the center line 100 feet from intersection, it was not error on the judge's part to refuse to instruct jury on the latter section. Graveley v. Springer, 145 M 486, 402 P2d 41 (1965).

No Statutory or Legal Duty When State Not Maintaining Highway: When the state is not maintaining a highway, its duty is limited to approving traffic control devices on highways under its jurisdiction. In this case, no additional plan was submitted by the subcontractor showing the locations of construction candles or flagging stations; therefore, the state could not be held negligent for not reviewing what was not submitted. Dick Irvin, Inc. v. St., 2013 MT 272, 372 Mont. 58, 310 P.3d 524.

Uniform Manual Improperly Excluded in Wrongful Death Action: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the state and the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, the court committed reversible error in refusing to admit into evidence a copy of the Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices for Streets and Highways. While the manual does not have the force and effect of law, it may be considered to be a norm to be used for traffic-control devices and its contents may be considered by the jury in determining whether the defendants were negligent. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Wrongful Death Action — Highway Patrolman as Expert in Traffic-Control Devices: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the state and the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, a Highway Patrol officer was properly qualified as an expert in highway-control devices and could offer his opinion as to whether a highway was adequately signed. An expert witness may be qualified by reason of practical experience in an area of special knowledge not shared by mankind in general. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Duty to Maintain Safe Crossings: The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1973 represents an effort by the federal government to improve the safety of grade crossings and to provide funding for the same. That Act does not lessen in any degree the duty, statutory or common-law, of a railroad to maintain a good and safe crossing. The Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices promulgated by the Montana Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) may be considered as a standard or norm to be used for traffic-control devices. It does not have the force and effect of law in determining the duties and responsibilities of a railroad with respect to the safety of grade crossings. The railroad is not absolved of its common-law duty to provide a good and safe crossing. It was a jury question whether, under the circumstances known to the railroad at and before this accident, the railroad itself should have reduced the speed of its trains at this crossing. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

City Council — Lack of Authority to Regulate Crosswalk on Federal-Aid Highway in Manner Inconsistent With State Law: A city council may not enact an ordinance requiring a driver of a motor vehicle on a federal-aid or state highway to stop for a pedestrian within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is not on the half of the roadway on which the vehicle is traveling and when the pedestrian is not close enough to be in danger. 41 A.G. Through-Road Intersections: Montana law does not contemplate that if a road is designated as "through" it becomes the duty of persons approaching intersections with such through road to stop in the absence of stop signs. When two vehicles in this case collided in such an intersection, having entered at about the same time, the court assessed the negligence of each driver at 50%. Andrews v. U.S., 447 F. Authority to Close Road or Highway: Authority to temporarily close a state highway or county road due to hazardous conditions belongs to the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) and each Board of County Commissioners, respectively. Designation of a particular individual having this authority is left to the discretion of the Department and each Board. The latter may appoint a county road supervisor or superintendent

Failure to Keep Lookout at Light-Controlled Intersection — Liability as Matter of Law: With a green light, Vender pulled into an intersection to make a left-hand turn but had to wait for oncoming traffic before turning. While in the intersection, he was struck by Stone, who testified that he did not see a light and could not avoid colliding with the Vender car. The jury found 50% negligence with each driver. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that as a matter of law, Stone was solely liable for the collision by failing to exercise reasonable care. A motorist's failure when approaching a controlled intersection to keep a lookout to see what is plainly visible or obviously apparent makes him chargeable for failure to see what he should have seen with the exercise of reasonable care. Vender v. Stone, 245 M 428, 802 P2d 606, 47 St. Rep. 2121 (1990).

Part Case Notes

Questions of Duty of Care and Proximate Cause Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Remand: Highway patrol officer Fisher was investigating a traffic accident when he was struck by a semitruck owned by Swift Transportation Company (Swift) that was being removed from the accident scene. Fisher sued Swift for negligence, alleging that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care. The District Court found that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff as a matter of law, but granted partial summary judgment for Swift on the issue of causation, and held that Fisher's injuries were unforeseeable as a matter of law. Fisher appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care based on the driver's legal duty to drive in a careful and prudent manner and at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent under the conditions existing at the point of operation when approaching a stationary, authorized emergency vehicle. Citing Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), the court also agreed that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff because Fisher was within the foreseeable zone of risk and that the Swift driver could reasonably have foreseen that his negligent conduct could have resulted in injury to Fisher. Additionally, no policy considerations barred the imposition of statutory duties on the Swift driver. The court also disagreed with the District Court's conclusion that Fisher's injury was unforeseeable as a matter of law, concluding that reasonable minds could differ as to whether the injury was a foreseeable result of the Swift driver's negligence and that the issue of proximate cause was best left to the factfinder for resolution. Thus, the question of whether the Swift driver's conduct, in a natural and continuous sequence, helped produce Fisher's injury constituted a genuine issue of material fact that was inappropriate for resolution by summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 M 335, 181 P3d 601 (2008). See also Prindel v. Comparative Negligence — Application to Cases of Negligence Per Se: In an action for negligence involving a rear-end collision between the plaintiff's and defendant's automobiles in which the evidence showed that both parties could have been guilty of negligence per se by the violation of motor vehicle traffic laws, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in holding that the doctrine of comparative negligence did not apply. Comparative negligence has been mandated by the Legislature to apply in every case in which negligence is an issue, even in those cases in which statutory violations provide the necessary evidence of negligence, and it is for the finder of fact to determine the degree of negligence on the part of each party. Case Notes

Pursuit of Traffic Offender Onto Reservation Allowed — Good Faith Exception to Exclusionary Rule Applicable to Evidence Seized During Arrest of Tribal Member by Nontribal Officers on Reservation: Bird was observed by city police officer Olson driving recklessly in Cut Bank, but when Olson attempted to stop Bird, a chase ensued onto the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, where Bird was eventually stopped and held by the city police officer and an assisting county officer. When the officers were informed that Bird was an enrolled tribal member, they notified a tribal police officer, who arrested Bird and a passenger, and transported them off the reservation and back into Cut Bank in violation of the extradition provision of the Blackfeet Tribal Code. Bird was subsequently charged in City Court with reckless driving and was convicted. Bird appealed to District Court, moving to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction and to suppress evidence of activities and statements after the vehicle crossed onto the reservation. The District Court found that the city officer did not have jurisdiction to arrest Bird on the reservation and granted Bird's motion to suppress. The state appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Pursuant to U.S. v. Patch, 114 F3d 131 (9th Cir. 1997), under the doctrine of hot pursuit, once the officer observed an offense occur within his jurisdiction, he had authority to pursue the violator onto the reservation in order to make an arrest. Further, the evidence was erroneously suppressed because the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule, discussed in St. v. Nahee, 745 P2d 172 (Ariz. App. 1987), applied. The city and county officers acted in good faith reliance that the tribal officer would carry out the arrest and extradition in a manner conforming to tribal code procedures, and it was the tribal officer who neglected to follow the tribal code. The primary purpose of the exclusionary rule—to ensure that law enforcement is not rewarded by violating a defendant's constitutional rights and to deter such conduct in the future—would not be served by sanctioning the city and county officers for a mistake in which they had no part. Failure to follow tribal extradition procedures did not warrant exclusion of the evidence in this case. Cut Bank v. Bird, 2001 MT 296, 307 M 460, 38 P3d 804 (2001). See also State ex rel. Old Elk v. District Court, 170 M 208, 552 P2d 1394 (1976).

No District Court Jurisdiction of Appeal From Municipal Court When Defendant Not Incarcerated and Fine Less Than $300: Koestner was convicted in Municipal Court of reckless driving and was fined $175, court costs of $20, and a witness fee of $10, and no jail time was ordered. Koestner appealed the conviction and the denial of a request for a jury trial to District Court, but that court concluded that it did not have jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Koestner appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that under the Montana Uniform Municipal Court Rules of Appeal to District Court (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2100), a city must have an ordinance in place to trigger the statutory amount necessary to bring an appeal and that because the city never presented evidence that such an ordinance existed, the District Court had jurisdiction under 3-6-110 to review the Municipal Court decision. The Supreme Court agreed that because Koestner was not incarcerated and the fine imposed was less than $300, the District Court properly concluded that it was bound by Rule 1(b)(2), U.M.C.R.App. (Title 25, ch. 30, part 2100), which limits appeals in criminal cases to those in which the minimum amount in controversy is greater than $300, unless jail time is ordered. Although Koestner, under Rule 3, U.M.C.R.App., could have petitioned the District Court to hear the appeal in the interests of justice, no petition was filed. Koestner's arguments regarding lack of a city ordinance were not raised before the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to address the issue for the first time on appeal. Kalispell v. Koestner, 2001 MT 53, 304 M 315, 21 P3d 622 (2001).

Reckless Driving Not Lesser Included Offense of Criminal Endangerment: Reckless driving is a distinct offense and not an included offense of criminal endangerment. St. v. Beavers, 1999 MT 260, 296 M 340, 987 P2d 371, 56 St. Rep. 1035 (1999), following Blockburger v. U.S., 284 US 299, 76 L Ed 306, 52 S Ct 180 (1932).

Charge Not Based Upon Speed Alone — Injury Not Required for Conviction: Stanko was cited by the Montana Highway Patrol for two separate acts of reckless driving. One citation read "Reckless Driving! 117 mph over Crest of Hill on Narrow Road Moderate Traffic". The other read "operate a vehicle in a reckless manner 121 mph coming over crest of hill". The Supreme Court held that Stanko's argument that speed alone may not serve as the basis for a reckless driving charge was beside the point because the citations themselves showed that Stanko was not cited because of his speed alone. The testimony of the officers also showed that they based their citations on speed in combination with other factors. However, the Supreme Court did cite cases from other jurisdictions indicating that under some conditions, speed alone might serve as the basis for conviction of reckless driving. As to Stanko's argument that no one was injured, the Supreme Court pointed out that under this section, there is no requirement that anyone be injured in order for there to be a violation of that statute. The Supreme Court also noted that although Stanko's driving abilities may be "legend in his own mind", the court was "not impressed" and pointed out that racing conditions are not the same as highway conditions. St. v. Stanko, 1998 MT 323, 292 M 214, 974 P2d 1139, 55 St. Rep. 1313 (1998).

Reckless Driving — No Requirement for Evidence of Serious Injury — Jury Instruction Properly Refused: Stanko was charged with two counts of reckless driving, one for driving 117 miles an hour on U.S. 87 and the other for driving 121 miles an hour on the same highway, over the crest of a hill. At the conclusion of his trial, Stanko submitted a jury instruction that read: ""Willful or Wanton Disregard" means that the defendant had an intentional lack of regard concerning the safety of others, or that he intentionally did something with knowledge that serious injury is a probable result." The District Court refused Stanko's instruction in favor of the state's instruction, which did not mention serious injury. The Supreme Court noted that it reviews jury instructions to see whether the instructions, as a whole, fully and fairly instruct the jury on the law applicable to the case and also pointed out that the District Court has broad discretion when it instructs the jury. Using these standards, the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly refused Stanko's instruction. St. v. Stanko, 1998 MT 323, 292 M 214, 974 P2d 1139, 55 St. Rep. 1313 (1998).

Statute Not Void for Vagueness — Failure to Satisfy Burden of Proof: Stanko was charged with two counts of reckless driving, one for driving 117 miles an hour on U.S. 87 and the other for driving 121 miles an hour on the same highway, over the crest of a hill. Stanko claimed that the statute failed to give him fair notice of what type of driving was prohibited by the statute, that the lack of specificity in the statute leads to selective enforcement of its provisions, and that the statute should therefore be held void for vagueness as applied to the facts of his case. The Supreme Court, citing several cases for the proposition that statutes are not automatically invalidated as vague simply because difficulty is found in determining whether certain marginal offenses fall within their language, disagreed with Stanko's proposition that the two Montana Highway Patrol officers who cited him disagreed between themselves as to what speed would warrant a reckless driving citation; both officers who cited Stanko had no difficulty in concluding that the speeds at which Stanko was driving warranted the citation. The Supreme Court therefore held that Stanko had not satisfied his burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that this section is, as applied to the facts of his case, so vague that he could not have reasonably understood what conduct is prohibited. St. v. Stanko, 1998 MT 323, 292 M 214, 974 P2d 1139, 55 St. Rep. 1313 (1998).

Reasonable Time for Preliminary Examination or Leave to File Information — Time for Commencement of "Reasonable Time" — Higley Clarified: McElderry was arrested on October 14 for DUI, fifth offense; reckless driving; and driving while her license was revoked. On October 16, she made her initial appearance in Lake County Justice's Court and was charged by complaint with the offenses for which she was arrested. On October 25, the state filed a motion in District Court for leave to file an information. The motion was granted on October 28, and an information was filed the same day. On October 29, McElderry filed a motion in District Court to dismiss the charges, arguing that 46-10-105, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in St. v. Higley, 190 M 412, 621 P2d 1043 (1980), required that a determination of probable cause be made within 10 days after a defendant's initial appearance. The District Court dismissed the information, reasoning that the state failed to hold a preliminary examination in Justice's Court or to obtain leave from the District Court to file the information within the reasonable time required by 46-10-105. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in calculating the reasonable time as beginning with the time of McElderry's arrest because the plain language of 46-10-105 requires that the period be calculated from the date of initial appearance of the defendant. The Supreme Court therefore recalculated the total delay at 12 days, rather than 14 days. The Supreme Court further explained that its use of the 10-day time period in Higley was intended to mean that the 10-day period at issue in that case was not unreasonable but was not intended to limit the period of reasonable time to 10 days in all cases. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in interpreting Higley to apply a 10-day limitation in every case. Because the District Court erred in determining the start of the reasonable time and in applying Higley, the Supreme Court held that a new time must be calculated. However, the Supreme Court was unable to tell how the District Court would properly apply its discretion in redetermining a reasonable time and therefore vacated the judgment of the District Court and remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's opinion. St. v. McElderry, 284 M 365, 944 P2d 230, 54 St. Rep. 922 (1997), followed in St. v. Robison, 2003 MT 198, 317 M 19, 75 P3d 301 (2003).

Dismissal for Failure to Charge Offense of Which Convicted — Reckless Driving Not Lesser Included Offense of DUI: Barker was charged with DUI but was convicted of reckless driving by the Ravalli County Justice of the Peace. Barker appealed to the District Court and filed a motion to dismiss, which the District Court granted. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the reckless driving charge and the DUI charge were inapposite charges and that reckless driving was not a lesser included offense of DUI. The Supreme Court also held that the conviction should be set aside because Barker did not have notice that he was charged with reckless driving, which violated Barker's constitutional right to due process. St. v. Barker, 260 M 85, 858 P2d 360, 50 St. Rep. 970 (1993).

Sufficient Evidence to Affirm Conviction of Recklessly Eluding a Police Officer: Testimony of three law enforcement officers that Palmer's car was the one being pursued in a 14-mile, late night car chase in rain and snow at speeds averaging 94 miles an hour, including evidence that the car was within sight of one or more of the officers at nearly all times, was sufficient to find Palmer guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of recklessly eluding a police officer, despite a clever but unconfirmed argument by Palmer's counsel that in order to cover the distance involved, a car would have had to travel at speeds approaching 160 miles an hour. St. v. Palmer, 247 M 210, 805 P2d 580, 48 St. Rep. 166 (1991).

Failure to Use Siren — Reckless Driving Conviction Affirmed: Appellant contended he was not guilty of reckless driving because the officer who pursued him at speeds of up to 110 miles an hour did not use his siren. The argument was without merit. Section 61-9-402 simply requires that a police car be equipped with a siren. The mere presence of the siren on the car does not mandate its use; therefore, use of a siren is not an essential element of the offense of reckless driving. St. v. Keil, 231 M 187, 751 P2d 680, 45 St. Rep. 532 (1988).

Reckless Driving and Criminal Mischief From Same Transaction: The State of Montana is barred from prosecuting a criminal mischief charge under 46-11-504 where the defendant was previously convicted of reckless driving. The acts that are concerned with reckless driving are also those necessary to establish the felony crime of criminal mischief; the "same transaction" test as required in 46-11-501 (now repealed) is met. St. v. Houser, 192 M 164, 626 P2d 256, 38 St. Rep. 538 (1981).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 561 in (1) near beginning after "vehicle" deleted "of any character" and after "public highway" deleted "of this state"; inserted (2) providing that a person who is convicted of the offense of careless driving is subject to the penalties provided in 61-8-711 or 61-8-716; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Case Notes

30-Day Incarceration for Careless Driving Unlawful: Since the penalty for careless driving is a fine between $10 and $100, the District Court erred when it imposed a 30-day jail sentence for the offense. The defendant did not attack the validity of the sentence; therefore, the sentence could be corrected by the District Court by striking the illegal jail time imposed for the careless driving sentence. St. v. Kime, 2013 MT 14, 368 Mont. 261, 295 P.3d 580.

Questions of Duty of Care and Proximate Cause Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Remand: Highway patrol officer Fisher was investigating a traffic accident when he was struck by a semitruck owned by Swift Transportation Company (Swift) that was being removed from the accident scene. Fisher sued Swift for negligence, alleging that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care. The District Court found that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff as a matter of law, but granted partial summary judgment for Swift on the issue of causation, and held that Fisher's injuries were unforeseeable as a matter of law. Fisher appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care based on the driver's legal duty to drive in a careful and prudent manner and at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent under the conditions existing at the point of operation when approaching a stationary, authorized emergency vehicle. Citing Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), the court also agreed that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff because Fisher was within the foreseeable zone of risk and that the Swift driver could reasonably have foreseen that his negligent conduct could have resulted in injury to Fisher. Additionally, no policy considerations barred the imposition of statutory duties on the Swift driver. The court also disagreed with the District Court's conclusion that Fisher's injury was unforeseeable as a matter of law, concluding that reasonable minds could differ as to whether the injury was a foreseeable result of the Swift driver's negligence and that the issue of proximate cause was best left to the factfinder for resolution. Thus, the question of whether the Swift driver's conduct, in a natural and continuous sequence, helped produce Fisher's injury constituted a genuine issue of material fact that was inappropriate for resolution by summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 M 335, 181 P3d 601 (2008). See also Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

No Evidence of Endangerment to Other Vehicle or Pedestrian Required to Prove Careless Driving: Morris asserted that evidence at trial failed to prove careless driving absent a showing of endangerment because Morris did not come into close proximity to any other vehicle, driver, or pedestrian. The District Court disagreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. This section requires careful and prudent driving at all times, and the statutory concern with endangerment does not require that the driver come into close proximity to any other vehicle, driver, or pedestrian to prove carelessness. Great Falls v. Morris, 2006 MT 93, 332 M 85, 134 P3d 692 (2006).

Motorist's Duty to See: A motorist is negligent in either not looking or looking and not seeing if the object is so visible that all reasonable minds would agree that a person must see the object if he were to look with reasonable diligence. In this case, all reasonable minds could not agree that Payne was visible. He was wearing dark clothing on a coal black, rainy night and was walking in the travel portion of a wet highway with his back to the oncoming traffic. This court will not disturb the jury's determination if the evidence in the record furnishes reasonable grounds for different conclusions. Payne v. Sorenson, 183 M 323, 599 P2d 362, 36 St. Rep. 1610 (1979), followed in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

61-8-303. Speed restrictions.

Compiler's Comments

2013 Amendment: Chapter 393 in (4) substituted "in this section" for "in 61-8-312 and in this section or established as authorized in 61-8-309 through 61-8-311 and 61-8-313". Amendment effective May 6, 2013.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 349 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The speed limit for vehicles traveling on U.S. highway 93 between reference marker 133 northwest of Whitefish and the Idaho border is 65 miles an hour at all times. The speed limit imposed by this subsection ceases to be effective if U.S. highway 93 is upgraded to a continuous four-lane highway"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2003 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 352 inserted (1)(c) establishing a speed limit of 25 miles an hour in an urban district; in (5) near beginning after "compliance with" substituted "subsection (4)" for "subsections (1) and (2), the speed of a vehicle not in excess of", after "section" inserted "and in 61-8-312", and at end after "61-8-313" substituted "are the maximum lawful speeds allowed" for "is lawful, but a speed in excess of 25 miles an hour in an urban district is unlawful"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Chapter 540 in (2) in first sentence after "between" substituted "reference marker 133 northwest of Whitefish and the Idaho border" for "the Canadian and Idaho borders". Amendment effective May 23, 2003.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 43 inserted (1) through (3) establishing speed limits; in (4) at beginning of first sentence inserted "Subject to the maximum speed limits set forth in subsections (1) and (2)", near middle before "rate" inserted "reduced", after "reasonable and" substituted "prudent" for "proper", at end substituted "visibility, weather, and roadway conditions" for "condition of brakes, weight of vehicle, grade and width of highway, condition of surface, and freedom of obstruction to the view ahead", and deleted former second sentence that read: "The person operating or driving the vehicle shall drive the vehicle so as not to unduly or unreasonably endanger the life, limb, property, or other rights of a person entitled to the use of the street or highway"; in (5) near beginning inserted reference to subsection (2), near end substituted "25 miles an hour in an urban district" for "the following limits", and deleted former subsections (2)(a) and (2)(b) that read: "(a) 25 miles per hour in an urban district;

(b) 55 miles per hour in other locations during the nighttime, except that the nighttime speed limit on completed sections of interstate highways is 65 miles per hour"; deleted former (5) that read: "(5) The driver of a vehicle shall, consistent with subsection (1), drive at an appropriate reduced speed when approaching and crossing an intersection or railway grade crossing, when approaching and going around a curve, when approaching a hill crest, when traveling upon a narrow or winding roadway, and when a special hazard exists with respect to pedestrians or other traffic or by reason of weather or highway condition"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 28, 1999.

Severability: Section 8, Ch. 43, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 473 deleted former (2)(b) establishing as unlawful speeds in excess of "35 miles per hour on a highway under construction or repair or on a highway being surveyed, unless the department establishes and posts a different limit due to traffic conditions or the condition of the construction, repair, or survey project"; at end of (4) inserted "and 61-8-314"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 1, 1997.

1995 Amendments — Phrase Change — Composite Section: Section 6, Ch. 75, L. 1995, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in the MCA to Highway Commission to Transportation Commission. In this section, the Code Commissioner has made the change in (4). Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 78 in (2), before "limits", substituted "the following" for "those"; at end of (2)(b) inserted "unless the department establishes and posts a different limit due to traffic conditions or the condition of the construction, repair, or survey project"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 287 in (4), after "commission", inserted "or a local authority"; and made minor changes in style.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1989 Amendment: In (2)(b), after "repair", inserted "or on a highway being surveyed".

Case Notes

No Error in Refusal to Instruct Jury in UTPA Claim — Proposed Instructions Properly Denied: In a bad faith insurance claim filed pursuant to the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), the plaintiff sought a jury instruction stating in part that a person shall operate a vehicle at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent. The plaintiff also sought an instruction stating that "the lack of any traffic citations does not equate to the lack of civil negligence." The District Court did not err in refusing the instructions since the ultimate issue in the bad faith insurance case was the reasonableness of the insured's conduct. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Evidence of Malfunctioning Speedometer Not Admissible in DUI Case: Spencer was stopped for speeding and subsequently cited for DUI. Spencer sought to call an expert to testify that the speedometer in Spencer's vehicle had not been functioning properly, but the trial court excluded the expert testimony as irrelevant. On appeal, Spencer asserted that the speed of a vehicle is relevant in determining whether a driver's ability to safely operate a vehicle has been diminished. However, the state did not attempt to prove that Spencer was intoxicated because he was speeding, and whether Spencer justifiably thought that he was going slower than he was was not relevant to whether he was driving under the influence. The Supreme Court affirmed. St. v. Spencer, 2005 MT 338, 330 M 80, 125 P3d 1151 (2005), distinguishing St. v. Palmer, 247 M 210, 805 P2d 580 (1991), and Bauer v. St., 275 M 119, 910 P2d 886 (1996).

Smell of Alcohol and Driver's Admission of Minority Age — Sufficient Probable Cause for Search of Vehicle: When Shaw was stopped for speeding, she told the officer that she was 18 years old, could not produce proof of insurance, and had a suspended driver's license. During the conversation, the officer smelled alcohol on Shaw and in the vehicle. Shaw consented to a search of the car, and the officer discovered an open container of alcohol and drug paraphernalia. Following conviction, Shaw appealed on grounds that the officer threatened to impound the car and illegally obtained the evidence underlying the charges. The Supreme Court affirmed. The smell of alcohol, coupled with Shaw's admission that she was a minor, provided sufficient probable cause for a search of the vehicle, and Shaw knowingly and voluntarily consented to the search. Despite conflicting evidence, the trial court assessed the credibility and demeanor of the witnesses, and the Supreme Court declined to impose its own resolution of the conflicts on appeal. St. v. Shaw, 2005 MT 141, 327 M 281, 114 P3d 198 (2005), overruled, to the extent that a finding of probable cause is required in conjunction with the consent exception to the search warrant requirement, in St. v. Copelton, 2006 MT 182, 333 M 91, 140 P3d 1074 (2006).

Sufficient but Conflicting Evidence of Speeding — Conviction Affirmed: The nighttime speed limit on noninterstate highways is 65 mph. Larson testified that he was driving 60 to 65 mph at the time of an accident. Larson's expert witness estimated the speed at 63 to 71 mph. A passenger in the vehicle initially agreed with Larson's estimate, but later contradicted that rate and estimated the speed at 80 to 85 mph. Investigating officers estimated Larson's speed at 84 to 89 mph. Despite the conflicting testimony, the jury convicted Larson of speeding, but on appeal, Larson contended that the state failed to present sufficient evidence to support the conviction. The Supreme Court affirmed. Based on the evidence, a rational trier of fact could have found that Larson was driving in excess of the posted speed limit. St. v. Larson, 2004 MT 345, 324 M 310, 103 P3d 524 (2004).

Improper Jury Instruction Regarding Speed of Train — Applicable Law of Case: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. MRL moved for summary judgment, arguing that the subject of train speed was preempted by CSX Transp., Inc. v. Easterwood, 507 US 658, 123 L Ed 2d 387, 113 S Ct 1732 (1993). The District Court denied MRL's motion, ruling that a negligence action based on a state law duty to slow or stop a train to avoid a specific individual hazard was not preempted under CSX. Nevertheless, the court's instructions to the jury stated that "Under the laws governing the speed of trains, a train crew has no duty to slow a train until a reasonable and prudent train operator has reason to believe, based upon the circumstances present, that the operator of a motor vehicle will not yield to the train and there is a substantial risk of a collision" and that "Montana law does not provide the driver of an emergency vehicle any special privilege in relation to railroad crossings. Emergency vehicle drivers must follow the requirements when approaching and crossing railroad crossings as any other vehicle driver". Following jury deliberations, MRL was found not liable. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in instructing the jury on the speed of trains because the instructions did not state the applicable law of the case. As set out in Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), whether a railroad is negligent in a particular manner, such as failing to reduce train speed, is a question of fact for the jury. Here, the jury instructions improperly removed the question of train speed from jury consideration, compelling the jury to conclude that the train crew did not have a duty to do anything more than they did, rather than deciding whether the facts and circumstances of this case constituted a specific individual hazard. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000).

Limited Applicability of Involuntary Action Rule to Negligence Per Se in Driving Accidents When Driver Violates Traffic Law While Reacting to Highway Obstacle or Hazard: Seeking to reconcile past disparate holdings regarding liability of a motor vehicle driver who violates a traffic law while reacting to a highway obstacle or hazard and injures another party who has complied with traffic laws, the Supreme Court held that drivers must anticipate certain obstacles and adverse driving conditions that are common to Montana roads, such as small furry animals, deer, chuckholes, and swirling snow. Only under extremely limited circumstances, such as sudden brake failure, will a violation of a motor vehicle statute not constitute negligence per se. In this case, Craig was involved in an auto accident when the other vehicle swerved to avoid a deer and the driver and passenger in the other vehicle died. Injuries resulting from swerving to miss the deer arose from negligence per se, and Craig's motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability should have been granted. Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999), following Duchesneau v. Silver Bow County, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971), overruling Lyndes v. Scofield, 180 M 177, 589 P2d 1000 (1979), and clarifying Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967), Farris v. Clark, 158 M 33, 487 P2d 1307 (1971), Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977), Eslinger v. Ringsby Truck Lines, Inc., 195 M 292, 636 P2d 254, 38 St. Rep. 1863 (1981), Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988), and Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998).

Vagueness of Statute — Standing to Challenge Vagueness — "Reasonable and Prudent" Speed Limit Held Void: Stanko was arrested by Officer Breidenbach of the Montana Highway Patrol for driving 85 miles an hour on a stretch of Highway 200 that was narrow, that had no shoulders, that had occasional frost heaves in the surface of the highway, and where Stanko's view of the road was occasionally obstructed by hills and curves in the highway. Relying on Parker v. Levy, 417 US 733 (1974), the Supreme Court held that Stanko's conduct was, under the circumstances, not so clearly prohibited that Stanko lacked standing to challenge the speed limit on the basis of facial vagueness. The Supreme Court held, citing Grayned v. Rockford, 408 US 104 (1972), Kolender v. Lawson, 461 US 352 (1983), Whitefish v. O'Shaughnessy, 216 M 433, 704 P2d 1021 (1985), and St. v. Crisp, 249 M 199, 814 P2d 981 (1991), that subsection (1) of this section (but see 1999 amendments) was void for vagueness because there was no numerical speed limit in the statute and because it was dependent upon each driver of a motor vehicle or each law enforcement officer to determine what the speed limit was under any given set of circumstances. St. v. Stanko, 1998 MT 321, 292 M 192, 974 P2d 1132, 55 St. Rep. 1302 (1998).

Instruction on Duty to Reduce Speed Improperly Denied — Important Theory of Case: The District Court improperly denied defendant's proposed instruction on relative duties between a pedestrian on a highway and a driver approaching the pedestrian, citing as grounds for denial: (1) this section does not apply to pedestrians not in a crosswalk; and (2) under evidence in the case, the driver, prior to the accident, did not perceive any special hazard with respect to the pedestrian. The Supreme Court remanded because this section applied to all pedestrians whether or not in a crosswalk and because the second reason was an issue for determination by the jury. The duty of the driver to reduce speed was an important part of the theory of plaintiff's case. Refusal to instruct constituted reversible error. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Proof of Exact Speed Not Necessary: Defendant in a speeding case was cited for "driving 50 miles per hour in a 25 mile per hour zone". He alleged that jury instructions and the verdict form prejudiced him by allowing the jury to find him guilty of speeding without finding him guilty of driving the exact speed alleged in the complaint. The Supreme Court found that the jury was not misled or the law misstated by an instruction generally charging the defendant with speeding, when coupled with an instruction properly apprising the jury of the prosecution's burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the prosecution need not prove the exact speed of the defendant. Billings v. Briner, 228 M 518, 744 P2d 877, 44 St. Rep. 1728 (1987).

Failure to Prevent Rear-End Collision — Negligence as Matter of Law: Appellant was stopped at a traffic light. The road conditions were icy. Respondent approached the intersection in the same lane and direction of travel as the appellant. Respondent braked and slowed his vehicle but failed to reach a complete stop and collided with appellant's vehicle. Respondent's exercise of care was not sufficient to avoid the collision, and under the facts of this case he was negligent as a matter of law. Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925, 42 St. Rep. 420 (1985), distinguished in Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64, 48 St. Rep. 418 (1991), in which it was held that simply because there is an accident does not mean someone must be negligent.

Violation in Another State Included in Habitual Offender Calculation: Defendant was declared a habitual traffic offender. In order to reach the point designation, a speeding violation from the state of Washington was included. Defendant contended that because violations of Montana speed limits mandated by federal fuel conservation conditions may not be included in the calculation, the Washington violation should not be included. The court found that the Washington violation would not be a mere conservation violation in Montana but a violation of the interstate nighttime speed limit. Under 61-5-401, Montana has adopted a Driver License Compact giving effect to violations committed in other jurisdictions. The Washington violation was correctly treated as a speeding violation in the habitual traffic offender calculation. State ex rel. Landon v. Macek, 208 M 172, 676 P2d 228, 41 St. Rep. 247 (1984).

Collision of Left-Turning and Approaching Vehicles: Where the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for damages sustained in a collision after the defendant stopped on a two-lane highway to turn left in front of a stopped truck and did not see the plaintiff's car approaching at approximately 50 mph toward her from behind the truck, the District Court did not err in denying the plaintiff's motion to set aside the jury's verdict finding the plaintiff 50% negligent for the resulting accident. The speed at which plaintiff entered the intersection and the fact that her view was obstructed at the time constituted sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding. Lackey v. Wilson, 205 M 476, 668 P2d 1051, 40 St. Rep. 1439 (1983).

Validity as Police Power Regulation: A driver was convicted of violating the provision of 61-8-304 (now repealed) that the Attorney General must set a conservation speed limit in conformance with limits imposed by federal law as a prerequisite to the state's receipt of federal highway money. The driver claimed the provision violated due process in that he had a right to use the highway in his vehicle and with his gasoline and that his use could not be regulated in an attempt to provide for the general welfare and safety of the people of the state. The court found that the driver did not meet his burden of clearly showing that this provision was unreasonable. St. v. Deitchler, 201 M 70, 651 P2d 1020, 39 St. Rep. 1959 (1982).

Speed Limit to Ensure Federal Funds as Exception to This Section: Defendant was adjudged a habitual traffic offender by the District Court upon presentation of evidence that he had accumulated 30 habitual offender points by violating 61-8-312 on 10 occasions in less than 3 years. Defendant appealed, claiming that 61-8-312 had been preempted by 61-8-304 (now repealed). No habitual offender points are assessed for violation of 61-8-304 (now repealed). The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that 61-8-304 (now repealed) itself clearly indicated the Legislature's intention that 61-8-312 and this section remain in effect; that 61-8-304 (now repealed) is an exception to this section; that the purpose of 61-8-304 (now repealed) was not to revise the statutory scheme regarding speed limits but rather to ensure continued receipt of federal highway funds; and that there had been no implied repeal of 61-8-312 or this section. State ex rel. Sol v. Bakker, 199 M 385, 649 P2d 456, 39 St. Rep. 1471 (1982).

Constitutionality — 55-Mile-Per-Hour Case: Section 61-8-304 (now repealed), by delegating a mandatory duty upon the Attorney General to issue a proclamation setting the Montana highway speed limit in conformance with federal law, was an unconstitutional delegation of state sovereign power to the federal government. To prevent loss of federal highway funds to the state, the effective date of this decision was prospective, to take effect October 1, 1981, or such earlier date as corrective legislation became effective. Lee v. St., 195 M 1, 635 P2d 1282, 38 St. Rep. 1729 (1981), rehearing denied, 195 M 1, 635 P2d 1282, 38 St. Rep. 1931 (1981).

Statutory Violations a Jury Question: The plaintiff sued the defendants for injuries he suffered when he drove his truck into the rear of their car. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants violated various motor vehicle statutes and the duty of care owed to the plaintiff, but the Supreme Court found that these were questions of fact for the jury and substantial evidence supported the findings for the defendants. Substantial and sufficient evidence also was found to support the jury's determination that the defendants' actions did not proximately cause the plaintiff's injury. Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 1492 (1981).

Admissibility Dependent on Nature of Treatise: Learned treatises are permissible for use in cross-examination of an expert if the treatise is "established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice". Here, a treatise on design of grade railway-highway crossings was properly used to test the knowledge of an expert witness in cross-examination. Another treatise concerning the visibility and audibility of trains approaching crossings was properly held to be inadmissible, as it was merely advisory in nature. Treatises may be admitted upon the foundation that they (1) show what is feasible to the jury, or (2) show what the defendant knew or should have known about safety precautions. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

Reasonable and Proper — Jury Question: Defendant, driving on a snowy, slippery road, hit a large chuckhole causing the car to skid across the center line and collide with plaintiff's car. It is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, whether the defendant was operating her car at a reasonable and proper speed under the conditions. Lyndes v. Scofield, 180 M 177, 589 P2d 1000 (1979), explained in Hall v. Big Sky Lumber & Supply, Inc., 261 M 328, 863 P2d 389, 50 St. Rep. 1345 (1993), and overruled, to the extent that a driver who violates a traffic law while reacting to a highway obstacle or hazard and injures another party who has complied with traffic laws should be found negligent per se, in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Negligence Per Se: Violation of this statute is negligence per se. Roberts v. Burlington N. R.R., 171 M 143, 556 P2d 1243, 33 St. Rep. 1144 (1976).

Assured Clear Distance: Operator of disabled vehicle stalled on the highway was not bound to foresee or anticipate that other vehicles approaching the scene would come over the crest of a hill too fast to stop within their assured clear distance ahead. In an action by persons injured in a resulting collision, trial court should have directed verdict for defendant owner of the disabled vehicle on the ground of independent intervening cause. Halsey v. Uithof, 166 M 319, 532 P2d 686 (1975), followed in O'Connor v. Nigg, 254 M 416, 838 P2d 422, 49 St. Rep. 817 (1992).

Icy Road: Mere showing of a collision killing a horse in open range country, an icy road condition, and existence of uninterpreted skid marks failed to show violation of subsection (1) of this section. Fries v. Shaughnessy, 159 M 307, 496 P2d 1159 (1972).

Ordinary Negligence: This section refers to ordinary, prudent driving standards, and therefore is a standard for ordinary negligence and not gross negligence required for recovery by guest in action against driver. Hoffman v. Herzog, 158 M 296, 491 P2d 713 (1971).

Speed as Factor in Determining Negligence: The actual speed in miles per hour a person is driving does not determine whether the motorist is negligent, but the question is one of fact as to whether he was driving as a reasonable and prudent person would under the conditions existing. Nissen v. Johnson, 135 M 329, 339 P2d 651 (1959).

Snow Conditions: When traveling under snow conditions a driver should be alert for approaching vehicles and should take steps to keep his vehicle under control while passing through a snow cloud. Similarly, a driver following such a cloud should remain a safe distance behind, taking into consideration the probability that other vehicles will be coming through the cloud under conditions of reduced visibility. Merithew v. Hill, 167 F. Supp. 320 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Passenger Carriers: Although carrier of persons for hire must exercise the highest degree of care, it is not an insurer of passenger's safety. Wilson v. Northland Greyhound Lines, Inc., 166 F. Supp. 667 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Negligence in Civil Actions: Where the rate of speed was alleged as an element of negligence, the pertinent question was whether the rate of speed was so excessive as to affect defendant's control over the car under the conditions which actually existed at the time and place or as they reasonably appeared to him to exist, this being the import of section 32-1101, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), relating to the matter of speed regulations on public highways. The mere happening of an accident is not proof of negligence. Baatz v. Noble, 105 M 59, 69 P2d 579 (1937).

Danger Signs: Evidence was presented that there were danger signs which the defendant did not see but could have seen. Defendant saw many smaller holes and tried to avoid them but did not slow down when approaching them and continued at a rate of speed not substantially less than his usual speed on good roads. This was sufficient to take the question of his gross negligence to the jury. Baatz v. Noble, 105 M 59, 69 P2d 579 (1937).

Statutory Limit of Speed: The only restriction or limit placed on the rate of speed at which automobiles shall travel on state highways was that prescribed by section 32-1101, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), the import of which is that the speed, whatever it may have been, should not have been so excessive as to have affected the driver's control over his car under the conditions which existed at the particular time and place or as they reasonably appeared to him to have existed. Cowden v. Crippen, 101 M 187, 53 P2d 98 (1936).

Curves: The contention was made that there was error in giving an instruction that the law is that the driver of an automobile must slow down at curves and have his car under complete control. There was no evidence that defendant knew or should have known there was a curve at the point of collision. It was held, that a person is presumed to see, and therefore know, that which he could see by keeping a lookout. McNair v. Berger, 92 M 441, 15 P2d 834 (1932).

Reduction of Speed for Hazards: Section 32-1102, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), imposing the duty upon drivers of motor vehicles of slowing down at curves and having their cars under complete control was not invalid as imposing an unreasonable obligation upon drivers, and therefore unenforceable. McNair v. Berger, 92 M 441, 15 P2d 834 (1932).

Drag Racing — Injury to Person — Liability: Two automobiles were drag racing on a public highway. An oncoming car was struck and the driver killed. Motorists using the highways must exercise ordinary care to avoid inflicting injury to others. Those who use the highways for racing do so at their own peril. All those engaged in the racing are liable for injuries caused even though only one of the participant's cars comes in contact with the injured person. Jones v. NW. Instructions to Jury: In an action for damages arising out of an automobile accident which is based on a violation of a city ordinance relating to the speed at which vehicles may be driven on its streets, the court should not instruct the jury on the law of the state on the same subject. Marinkovich v. Tierney, 93 M 72, 17 P2d 93 (1932).

Conflict Between Statutes and Ordinances: A city or town had, pursuant to section 32-1101, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which delegated the power to cities and towns by ordinance to regulate the speed of automobiles upon the streets within corporate limits, enacted an ordinance on the subject. The ordinance had the force of statute, and in case of conflict with the state statute the ordinance controlled so long as the legislative delegation of authority remained unrepealed; otherwise the statute would control. Slow Operation of Vehicle and Buildup of Traffic Behind Vehicle Establishing Particularized Suspicion That Driver Impeding Traffic — Stop Warranted: Benders was driving between 25 and 40 miles an hour in a 50-mile-an-hour zone and continued to drive at the reduced speed when the speed limit increased to 70 miles an hour. No vehicles were in front of Benders, but at least four vehicles were following, and additional vehicles were quickly approaching. An officer was concerned that Benders' slow driving was creating a dangerous situation even though there was nothing to indicate a need to drive at a reduced speed. The officer stopped Benders for impeding traffic pursuant to this section, and Benders was subsequently arrested for DUI. Benders moved to suppress all evidence relating to the initial stop, but the motion was denied. On appeal, Benders asserted that the motion should have been granted because the officer did not have a particularized suspicion to justify the stop. The Supreme Court affirmed. The combination of slow speed and the buildup of vehicles provided the officer with sufficient information that Bender was impeding traffic, justifying the stop. Benders also argued that the state failed to establish the minimum speed required under this section and thus failed to show that his speed was slow enough to violate the law. However, the relevant determination under this section is not the speed of the vehicle, but the effect of the slow speed on the flow of traffic. Benders also claimed that a violation of this section requires a showing that a defendant has created unsafe driving conditions and an increased risk of an accident. However, such a showing is not required under the statute, and it would be inappropriate to conclude that an officer must wait for an unsafe driving condition to arise before concluding that traffic was being impeded. St. v. Benders, 2006 MT 275, 334 M 231, 146 P3d 751 (2006).

Statute Prohibiting Impeding Traffic Not Vague or Fundamentally Unfair: Benders argued that this section, which prohibits driving in a manner that impedes traffic, is unconstitutionally vague and fundamentally unfair. The Supreme Court held that none of the circumstances of Benders' case were applicable to the constitutional claim, but considered whether the claim warranted review under the plain error doctrine on the issue of unfairness. The fairness issue was based on the assertion that it was unfair to convict Benders of impeding traffic when there was no finding that Benders had violated a minimum speed limit. However, the relevant determination under this section is not the speed of the vehicle, but the effect of the slow speed on the flow of traffic. Therefore, Benders failed to demonstrate that the statutory language was vague, much less that it amounted to a fundamental unfairness resulting in plain error. The challenge to the constitutionality of this section failed. St. v. Benders, 2006 MT 275, 334 M 231, 146 P3d 751 (2006).

Instructions: Plaintiff's son was killed when car in which he was riding struck rear of defendant's truck which had just turned onto highway. It was reversible error for court to instruct jury on slow speed statute (this section) without requiring that plaintiff show truck had been on road sufficient time to attain a normal speed. Hageman v. Townsend, 144 M 510, 398 P2d 612 (1965).

Purpose: The purpose of this section is rooted in the recognition that the slow driver may be the cause of fatal highway accidents as well as the fast driver. Hageman v. Townsend, 144 M 510, 398 P2d 612 (1965).

Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 43 substituted (1) establishing speed limits for a truck or tractor of more than 1 ton for former text that read: "A person may not operate a truck or truck tractor, the gross weight of which exceeds 8,000 pounds, at a speed greater than 65 miles an hour on those completed sections of interstate and four-lane divided highways and 60 miles an hour on those completed sections of primary and secondary highways. However, the truck nighttime speed limit may not exceed that of automobiles, as stated in 61-8-303"; in (2) at beginning substituted "Except as provided in 61-8-303, 61-8-309, and 61-8-310, the speed limit for" for "A person may not operate" and at end inserted "unless otherwise stated in the permit"; deleted former (4) that read: "(4) A person may not operate a vehicle that is towing a housetrailer at a 1989 Amendment: In (2) inserted reference to a vehicle subject to a term permit. Amendment effective April 4, 1989.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (2) prohibiting operation faster than 55 miles per hour of truck-trailer-trailer or truck tractor-semitrailer-trailer-trailer combination of vehicles subject to special permits.

Case Notes

This Section Not Repealed by Implication: Defendant was adjudged a habitual traffic offender by the District Court upon presentation of evidence that he had accumulated 30 habitual offender points by violating this section 10 times in less than 3 years. Defendant appealed, claiming that this section had been preempted by 61-8-304 (now repealed). No habitual offender points are assessed for violation of 61-8-304 (now repealed). The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that 61-8-304 (now repealed) itself clearly indicated the Legislature's intention that this section remain in effect; that the purpose of 61-8-304 (now repealed) was not to revise the statutory scheme regarding speed limits but rather to ensure continued receipt of federal highway funds; and that there had been no implied repeal of this section. Case Notes

Establishment of Work and Construction Zone Speed Limits by Appropriate Entities Not Unconstitutional Delegation of Legislative Authority: Mathis was cited for speeding in a construction zone in violation of this section. Mathis challenged the constitutionality of the statute on grounds that the Legislature improperly delegated its authority to the Executive Branch by allowing speed limits in particular work and construction zones to be set by the Department of Transportation, local authorities, or private entities, such as utility companies and private contractors, rather than setting the speed limit by law. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although the authority to establish speed limits is legislative in nature, the delegation of authority in this case did not grant an unfettered discretion to other entities to establish traffic regulations in work and construction zones. The statute provided limitations on that discretion with reasonable clarity and provided policy guidelines to the entities. The rationale behind the statute is to protect drivers and workers in work and construction zones, as evidenced by the enhanced penalties applicable to the crime. Because of the diverse nature of work and construction zones, establishing a speed limit for every construction project would be an impractical if not impossible task for the Legislature, so it was rational for the Legislature to delegate that duty to the entities most familiar with the nuances of each project. Unable to overcome the implied constitutionality of this section, Mathis's assertion of improper delegation of legislative authority was properly rejected. St. v. Mathis, 2003 MT 112, 315 M 378, 68 P3d 756 (2003), following Duck Inn, Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ.-N., 285 M 519, 949 P2d 1179 (1997).

Substantial Evidence of Proof of Speeding in Construction Zone — Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Mathis was charged with speeding in a construction zone and, following submission of the state's case, moved for a directed verdict on grounds that the state failed to provide sufficient proof of the crime. The motion was denied, and Mathis appealed. The Supreme Court found sufficient proof that the elements of the crime had been proved. Administrative authority was properly granted to appropriate entities to set the applicable speed limit, and the proper requisite action was taken by the entities to establish a speed limit in accordance with state uniform traffic control guidelines and to adequately post the construction zone. A reasonable person could conclude that the state proved the elements of the offense; thus, Mathis's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied. St. v. Mathis, 2003 MT 112, 315 M 378, 68 P3d 756 (2003).

Erratic U-Turn Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: After an officer observed Trombley make an erratic U-turn, drift over the fog line, fail to signal when switching lanes, and straddle the center line, Trombley was stopped and cited for DUI. Trombley contended, and the District Court agreed, that state law did not prohibit the U-turn, but under the totality of the circumstances, Trombley's actions rose to the level of particularized suspicion sufficient to warrant the investigative stop. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Trombley's erratic driving was enough for the officer to suspect that Trombley was engaged in wrongdoing and gave the officer a particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop under the totality of the circumstances. Trombley's motion to dismiss was properly denied. St. v. Trombley, 2005 MT 174, 327 M 507, 116 P3d 771 (2005), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004).

Officer's Testimony and Videotape Sufficient Evidence of Reasonable Grounds for DUI Stop: Clark's driver's license was suspended after he refused to take a breath test when arrested for DUI. In petitioning for reinstatement of the license, Clark contended that the arresting officer lacked a particularized suspicion to make a stop and failed to articulate a reason for the stop at the hearing on the license suspension. The Supreme Court applied the reasonable grounds test in St. v. Brander, 2004 MT 150, 321 M 484, 92 P3d 1173 (2004), and held that the trial court properly concluded, on the basis of the officer's testimony that Clark hit a curb and swerved across lanes, coupled with a videotape of the stop, that the officer had reasonable grounds to investigate Clark for DUI. The trial court properly analyzed the factors in 61-8-403, and the analysis was not clearly erroneous. Denial of the petition to reinstate Clark's license was affirmed. Clark v. State ex rel. Driver Improvement Bureau, 2005 MT 65, 326 M 278, 109 P3d 244 (2005), followed in St. v. Rodriguez, 2011 MT 36, 359 Mont. 281, 248 P.3d 850.

Crossing Centerline Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: An officer observed Loney crossing the centerline several times, and Loney was stopped for a traffic violation and subsequently charged with DUI. The District Court granted Loney's motion to dismiss for lack of particularized suspicion, citing Morris v. St., 2001 MT 13, 304 M 114, 18 P3d 1003 (2001). The state appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Morris was distinguishable because in that case, defendant was stopped only for DUI and not for driving in a manner justifying a traffic stop, while Loney violated this section. Crossing the centerline constituted a sufficient particularized suspicion to justify the stop, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. St. v. Loney, 2004 MT 204, 322 M 305, 95 P3d 691 (2004), following Widdicombe v. State ex rel. LaFond, 2004 MT 49, 320 M 133, 85 P3d 1271 (2004), and followed in St. v. Otto, 2004 MT 338, 324 M 217, 102 P3d 522 (2004), and St. v. Murray, 2011 MT 10, 359 Mont. 123, 247 P.3d 721.

Issues for Consideration in Petition for Review of Seizure of Driver's License: As established in Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716 (1998), the three issues to be determined by a District Court in a petition for review of a seizure of a driver's license are whether: (1) the arresting officer had a particularized suspicion that a person was driving or in actual control of a vehicle on the ways of this state while under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (2) the petitioner was lawfully under arrest, including the existence of probable cause; and (3) the petitioner in fact declined to submit to a breath test. In this case, Widdicombe contested the first two determinations, but the Supreme Court affirmed. While leaving town on a two-lane highway, the arresting officer and another officer in the patrol car observed Widdicombe crossing the center lane three times, in violation of this section, and this fact was corroborated by videotape evidence. Thus, Widdicombe failed to meet the burden of proving a lack of particularized suspicion for the initial stop. Further, it was not necessary for the arresting officer to testify to probable cause when another officer witnessed the event and testified. Thus, Widdicombe failed to prove that the officers did not have probable cause for the arrest. Widdicombe v. State ex rel. LaFond, 2004 MT 49, 320 M 133, 85 P3d 1271 (2004), distinguishing St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998).

Limited Applicability of Involuntary Action Rule to Negligence Per Se in Driving Accidents When Driver Violates Traffic Law While Reacting to Highway Obstacle or Hazard: Seeking to reconcile past disparate holdings regarding liability of a motor vehicle driver who violates a traffic law while reacting to a highway obstacle or hazard and injures another party who has complied with traffic laws, the Supreme Court held that drivers must anticipate certain obstacles and adverse driving conditions that are common to Montana roads, such as small furry animals, deer, chuckholes, and swirling snow. Only under extremely limited circumstances, such as sudden brake failure, will a violation of a motor vehicle statute not constitute negligence per se. In this case, Craig was involved in an auto accident when the other vehicle swerved to avoid a deer and the driver and passenger in the other vehicle died. Injuries resulting from swerving to miss the deer arose from negligence per se, and Craig's motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability should have been granted. Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999), following Duchesneau v. Silver Bow County, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971), overruling Lyndes v. Scofield, 180 M 177, 589 P2d 1000 (1979), and clarifying Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967), Farris v. Clark, 158 M 33, 487 P2d 1307 (1971), Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977), Eslinger v. Ringsby Truck Lines, Inc., 195 M 292, 636 P2d 254, 38 St. Rep. 1863 (1981), Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988), and Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998).

Crossing Fog Line Not Illegal Driving: The fact that a motorist was observed to have crossed the fog line on the far right side of the traffic lane did not rise to the particularized suspicion necessary to justify an investigative stop by the officer because crossing over the fog line is not illegal driving under Montana law. St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363, 55 St. Rep. 1019 (1998), distinguished in Weer v. St., 2010 MT 232, 358 Mont. 130, 244 P.3d 311. See also St. v. Cameron, 2011 MT 276, 362 Mont. 411, 264 P.3d 1136, and St. v. LeMay, 2011 MT 323, 363 Mont. 172, 266 P.3d 1278, which, following Weer, held that the defendant's illegal U-turn constituted an unusual turn or movement sufficient to establish particularized suspicion.

Driving on Wrong Side — Summary Judgment Proper: Summary judgment for the defendant was proper in a personal injury case where it was shown by survey of the accident scene, by examination of the vehicles and their positions following the accident, and by the conclusions of investigating officers and accident investigation experts that the plaintiff was driving on the wrong side of the road at the time of a head-on collision. Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988).

Violation of Statute — Not Negligence Per Se: Defendant, driving on a snowy, slippery road, hit a large chuckhole causing the car to skid across the center line and collide with plaintiff's car. It is not negligent as a matter of law to cross the center line; it is prima facie evidence of negligence which may be rebutted. It is a question of fact to be determined by the jury whether it was negligent to cross the center line. Lyndes v. Scofield, 180 M 177, 589 P2d 1000 (1979), explained in Hall v. Big Sky Lumber & Supply, Inc., 261 M 328, 863 P2d 389, 50 St. Rep. 1345 (1993), followed in Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998), and overruled, to the extent that a driver who violates a traffic law while reacting to a highway obstacle or hazard and injures another party who has complied with traffic laws should be found negligent per se, in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Application: Defendant proposed an instruction in an automobile accident case placing a duty upon plaintiff to drive on right side of roadway at all times and under all conditions, and which made plaintiff absolutely negligent as matter of law if she failed to do so. This was not an entirely correct statement of law and therefore was properly refused since this section and 61-8-323 provide exceptions to the rule that one must drive upon right side of roadway. Lamb v. Page, 153 M 171, 455 P2d 337 (1969).

Backing Over Centerline: Where the evidence conclusively established that defendant's tractor-trailer was backed over the highway centerline into decedent's traffic lane, defendant's driver was negligent as a matter of law. Hurly v. Star Transfer Co., 141 M 176, 376 P2d 504 (1962).

No Traffic on Road: The fact that a motorist was driving on the left side of the road was not alone sufficient to show negligence on his part, since where the road is open and free from traffic, the entire road is free for his use. Harrington v. H. D. Lee Mercantile Co., 97 M 40, 33 P2d 553 (1934).

Collision — Complaint Allegation: In an action for damages for injuries sustained in a collision between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant's automobile, the allegation in the complaint that defendant was on the left side of the road at the time of the accident, in disregard of the provision of the statute that vehicles must keep to the right, made out a prima facie charge of negligence. McGinnis v. Phillips, 62 M 223, 205 P 215 (1922).

Prima Facie Negligence: A person driving an automobile on the wrong side of the road was prima facie guilty of a violation of section 32-1101, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), failing to exercise the precaution necessary to avoid frightening animals being driven on the road, and thus imperiling the safety of the drivers of such animals. Savage v. Boyce, 53 M 470, 164 P 887 (1917).

61-8-322. Passing vehicles proceeding in opposite directions.

Case Notes

Jury Instructions — Refusal to Instruct as to Statute: Where there was no evidence that an accident occurred while vehicles were passing but that the vehicles collided when one vehicle slid and struck the other, there was no error in refusing to instruct regarding this section. Allen v. Moore, 167 M 330, 538 P2d 1352, 32 St. Rep. 478 (1975).

Assumption of Risk: Plaintiff who was legally attempting to pass a logging truck in a clear passing lane with no oncoming traffic and who could not anticipate that the truck would turn left, did not assume any risk. Beebe v. Johnson, 165 M 96, 526 P2d 128 (1974).

Civil Liability: The driver of an automobile, who failed to turn to the right of the way sufficiently to permit a vehicle coming from the opposite direction to pass in safety, was at fault and liable for damages for injury resulting therefrom. Savage v. Boyce, 53 M 470, 164 P 887 (1917).

61-8-323. Overtaking vehicle on left.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 at end of introductory clause substituted "chapter" for "part"; and near beginning of (1) and in (2) in two places substituted "operator" for "driver". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 119 in (2), in first sentence after "audible signal", inserted "or the use of signal lamps as provided in 61-9-218"; and made minor changes in style.

1983 Amendment: In (2), inserted last sentence allowing driver, when giving way to the right on a two-lane highway, to travel upon the shoulder at a safe speed until passed.

Case Notes

Audible Signal: Finding of contributory negligence was proper under the "but for" test since driver making left turn might have been warned in time "but for" the failure of the plaintiff to sound his horn sufficiently in advance of passing. Sedlacek v. Ahrens, 165 M 479, 530 P2d 424 (1974).

Duty of Overtaking Vehicle: Undisputed evidence that defendant waited until he was 20 to 25 feet behind plaintiff's vehicle, which was traveling at 55 m.p.h., before moving to the left to pass on an interstate with divided lanes and a clear passing lane, showed that defendant was negligent in following too closely under the conditions. Summary judgment for plaintiff on issue of liability was proper even though there was evidence that defendant's power steering failed when he tried to move to left. Farris v. Clark, 158 M 33, 487 P2d 1307 (1971).

Duty of Overtaken Vehicle: There is no duty resting upon a motorist to slow down his speed when he becomes aware of the fact that another car desires to pass him from the rear, the only requirement being the provisions of this section declaring that he must without unnecessary delay make every reasonable effort to permit him to do so. Cowden v. Crippen, 101 M 187, 53 P2d 98 (1936).

Permissible Assumption: The driver of an automobile proceeding in a lawful manner on the proper side of the highway has the right to assume that one attempting to pass him from the rear will proceed in a lawful manner and on his own side of the road, as required by this section. Cowden v. Crippen, 101 M 187, 53 P2d 98 (1936).

Passing With Approaching Traffic: Under this section, automobile traffic must at all times keep to the right. Where two vehicles are moving in the same direction, the one passing must turn to the left and the one being passed must turn to the right. The one passing is negligent if he so carelessly manages his automobile that a collision results, or attempts to pass at a time or under conditions which are not reasonably safe, as where he attempts to pass when another vehicle is approaching. McDonough v. Smith, 86 M 545, 284 P 542 (1930).

Returning to Lane — Duty to Clear Car: Ordinarily, the driver of a car overtaking and passing another must keep to the left and not turn to the right until entirely clear of the other car and is in duty bound to look out for the car ahead. McDonough v. Smith, 86 M 545, 284 P 542 (1930).

City Street: Plaintiff riding a motorcycle in a city street was endeavoring to pass a truck going in the same direction to the left and sounded the horn. The driver of the truck suddenly turned to the left without giving the warning required by this section, causing a collision. There was no evidence that plaintiff had time to stop or change his course. Plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Haney v. Mut. Creamery Co., 67 M 278, 215 P 656 (1923).

61-8-324. Overtaking vehicle on right.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) near beginning substituted "operator" for "driver"; in (1)(b) at beginning after "upon a" substituted "roadway" for "street or highway", after "pavement" deleted "not occupied by parked vehicles", and after "two or more" substituted "lanes of vehicles moving lawfully in the direction being traveled by the overtaking vehicle" for "lines of moving vehicles in each direction"; deleted former (1)(c) that read: "(c) upon a one-way street, or upon any roadway on which traffic is restricted to one direction of movement, where the roadway is free from obstructions and of sufficient width for two or more lines of moving vehicles"; in (2) at beginning of first sentence substituted "operator" for "driver"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Case Notes

Particularized Suspicion That Driver Violated Traffic Code Based on Observation Not Clearly Erroneous: Two men encountered a vehicle on Rogers Pass that was weaving between lanes and at one point appeared to nearly roll over. They followed the vehicle to Great Falls and then contacted local police by cellular telephone to report their observations and provide updates on the vehicle's location. Great Falls police responded and observed the driver, later found to be Herbenson, pull into the right-hand emergency lane of 10th Avenue South, pass two vehicles, and turn onto 13th Street. The officers stopped the vehicle, and Herbenson exhibited signs of intoxication. He was given field sobriety tests, which he failed. He also failed two breath tests. A review of Herbenson's driving record revealed four previous DUI convictions. Herbenson contended that the officers did not have a particularized suspicion that he was engaging in criminal activity necessary to justify the stop. The District Court found two factual bases in support of the particularized suspicion. The first was a suspicion that Herbenson was driving under the influence based on the citizens' reports of Herbenson's driving patterns, along with the officers' corroboration of that information. However, the Supreme Court found that particularized suspicion to be clearly erroneous because it was not based on record evidence. The state failed to introduce any evidence of the citizen reports, and the arresting officer did not testify that he personally observed any objective facts prior to stopping Herbenson from which to reasonably infer that Herbenson was driving under the influence. The second basis was that Herbenson had violated the traffic code by making an unsafe pass in violation of this section, and that finding was not clearly erroneous. Passing two vehicles that are stopped at an intersection and in the outermost lane of traffic by driving between those vehicles and the curb could certainly be characterized as unsafe and illegal, and a law enforcement officer's personal observation of illegal activity is a sufficient justification for stopping a vehicle. Because the second particularized suspicion was sufficient, the erroneous reliance on nonrecord evidence in the first particularized suspicion was irrelevant, and the denial of Herbenson's motion to suppress was affirmed. St. v. Herbenson, 2001 MT 75, 305 M 68, 22 P3d 1128 (2001).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) deleted former second sentence that read: "In every event the overtaking vehicle must return to the right-hand side of the roadway before coming within 100 feet of any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction"; in (2)(b) at end after "crossing" inserted "unless otherwise indicated by an official traffic control device"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Case Notes

Signs or Road Markings Designate No-Passing Zone: A stretch of highway was marked with a sign designating a no-passing zone, and the highway was marked with double yellow lines also indicating a no-passing zone, but the highway was snow-covered and the double lines were not visible. Fitzgerald attempted to pass, but collided head-on with another vehicle. The District Court concluded that Fitzgerald passed in a no-passing zone, but Fitzgerald appealed on grounds that road markings must be visible in addition to posted signs for a portion of a roadway to be designated as a no-passing zone. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Use of the disjunctive particle "or" in 61-8-326 means that only one of the stated factors must exist, so either signs or markings may designate a no-passing zone. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002).

Negligence of Driver Compared to State's Duty to Sign Highways — Proximate Cause Not Shown: A driver breached a duty by exceeding limitations on overtaking on the left, thus causing an accident. The driver failed to produce evidence from which it could be inferred that the state's negligent conduct in failing to sign a no-passing zone (in addition to the existing striped markings on the road) was the proximate cause of the driver's injuries. Summary judgment on negligence as a matter of law was proper. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence.

Negligence Per Se — Directed Verdict: The court should have granted a directed verdict against defendant truckdriver who carelessly placed himself in a position of not being able to stop behind codefendant's truck and negligently passed to avoid collision but collided instead with an oncoming vehicle in which plaintiff's husband was a passenger. The court was in error to instruct the jury on sudden emergency when the driver's negligence created his own emergency. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Contributory Negligence: Plaintiff driving to the left side of the roadway while within 100 feet of or traversing an intersection in attempting to pass truck was guilty of contributory negligence in collision with truck attempting to make a left turn. Dzikowski v. Jacobs, 170 M 302, 552 P2d 1102 (1976); Rader v. Nicholls, 140 M 459, 373 P2d 312 (1962), distinguished in Faucette v. Christensen, 145 M 28, 400 P2d 883 (1965).

Highway Intersecting Gravel Road: Where highway intersects with gravel road, no Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) markings or signs indicate an intersection, and a broken line indicates a passing zone, passing is not prohibited. Dzikowski v. Jacobs, 170 M 302, 552 P2d 1102, 33 St. Rep. 753 (1976).

"Intersection" Defined:

An intersection is formed when two publicly maintained ways join at any angle. Dzikowski v. Jacobs, 170 M 302, 552 P2d 1102 (1976); Rader v. Nicholls, 140 M 459, 373 P2d 312 (1962), distinguished in Faucette v. Christensen, 145 M 28, 400 P2d 883 (1965).

Reading 61-1-211 and 61-1-212 (both now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions of intersection and controlled-access highway) together, an intersection within the meaning of this section is formed by the joining of two ways publicly maintained which are open to the public for vehicular travel. Leach v. Great N. Ry., 139 M 84, 360 P2d 94 (1961), overruled on other grounds in Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967).

Left Turn: Prohibition of driving on left side of highway does not apply to vehicle making left turn, and where the issue before the jury was negligence in turning, jury instructions setting forth the requirements of this statute were prejudicial. Rude v. Neal, 165 M 520, 530 P2d 428 (1974).

Turning Vehicle: Plaintiff traveling at slow rate of speed on highway and indicating left turn with automatic signal, then turning left onto country road, was exercising proper care in turning. The driver who struck plaintiff while attempting to pass while plaintiff was turning was negligent and proximate cause of accident, even though area may not have been an intersection within the meaning of this section and even though highway markings did not prohibit passing. Gammel v. Dees, 159 M 461, 498 P2d 1204 (1972), distinguished in Dzikowski v. Jacobs, 170 M 302, 552 P2d 1102 (1976).

Passing at Intersection: Plaintiff attempted to pass defendant's truck 250 feet from unmarked intersection and was struck by defendant's truck as it started to make a left-hand turn. In reconciling this section with 61-8-202, which provides for a uniform system of traffic control devices, it was not error on the judge's part to refuse to instruct the jury on the provisions of this section. Graveley v. Springer, 145 M 486, 402 P2d 41 (1965).

Reliance on Markings: Defendant, who attempted to pass plaintiff's truck within 100 feet of intersection, in violation of this section, was not negligent per se, since defendant was entitled to rely on the broken white center line which indicated that passing could be done lawfully at the point where the accident occurred. Faucette v. Christensen, 145 M 28, 400 P2d 883 (1965), distinguished in Gammel v. Dees, 159 M 461, 498 P2d 1204 (1972).

1991 Amendment: Substituted references to Department of Transportation for references to Department of Highways. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67 (1988).

Passing — Statutory Violation as Negligence: A motorist was attempting to pass defendant's preceding pickup truck at a speed of 65 to 70 miles an hour in a clearly marked no-passing zone in violation of statute and struck the rear of the truck. He was guilty of contributory negligence, even though the truck failed to signal a left turn. Sumner v. Amacher, 150 M 544, 437 P2d 630 (1968).

Duty of Other Driver: This section does not absolve a driver intending to turn left from the obligation under 61-8-336 of making certain that the turn can be made with reasonable safety. Plaintiff was contributorily negligent in failing to look to the rear before turning even though defendant was passing him in a no-passing zone. Bellon v. Heinzig, 347 F2d 4 (9th Cir. 1965).

Erratic Driving and Occupants Switching Drivers — Sufficient Particularized Suspicion to Justify Investigative Stop: The fact that an officer observed that the occupants had switched drivers during the time that the officer lost sight of a vehicle and that the vehicle was driving in the center of a gravel road constituted a sufficient particularized suspicion under the totality of the circumstances, including the officer's 27 years of experience, to warrant an investigative stop. St. v. Britt, 2005 MT 101, 327 M 1, 111 P3d 217 (2005).

Driver on Four-Lane Highway Not Required to Use Only Right-Hand Lane: Cady, while driving in the left-hand lane of a four-lane highway, struck and killed Hislop. The authorities determined that no action or inaction on Cady's part was responsible for the accident. The personal representative for Hislop's estate initiated a civil action and argued that Cady was liable as a matter of law because the provisions of 61-8-361 require a driver to stay to the right when traveling through a mountainous region. The Supreme Court held that the statute only applies to two-lane roads where head-on collisions are a danger. Hislop v. Cady, 261 M 243, 862 P2d 388, 50 St. Rep. 1304 (1993).

Backing Over Centerline: Where the evidence conclusively established that defendant's tractor-trailer was backed over the highway centerline into decedent's traffic lane, defendant's driver was negligent as a matter of law. Hurly v. Star Transfer Co., 141 M 176, 376 P2d 504 (1962).

Case Notes

Rear-End Collision — Liability of Following Driver Who Must Make Sudden Stop: Although the court has held that a following driver has the primary duty of avoiding a collision with a driver in front of him, the court has never addressed a situation where the following defendant must make an emergency stop when the plaintiff in front unexpectedly collides with a third vehicle that suddenly pulls in front of the plaintiff. Summary judgment for the following defendant was proper where he was not speeding and all the evidence showed the driver who pulled in front of the plaintiff was at fault and not the defendant. The mere fact that defendant was behind plaintiff and hit her vehicle was not prima facie evidence of negligence. Birky v. Johnson, 220 M 413, 716 P2d 198, 43 St. Rep. 488 (1986).

Negligence Per Se — Directed Verdict: The court should have granted a directed verdict against defendant truckdriver who carelessly placed himself in a position of not being able to stop behind codefendant's truck and negligently passed to avoid collision but collided instead with an oncoming vehicle in which plaintiff's husband was a passenger. The court was in error to instruct the jury on sudden emergency when the driver's negligence created his own emergency. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Primary Duty to Avoid Collision — Following Driver: Defendant was following the car owned by plaintiff, which was following a semitrailer. The semitrailer was kicking up a skiff of snow making visibility difficult. A vehicle passed the cars going in the opposite direction making visibility even more difficult. Defendant lost sight of plaintiff's car until he hit the rear end of it. The Supreme Court held that the primary duty of avoiding a collision rests upon the following driver. Defendant was guilty of negligence, and plaintiff was entitled to a directed verdict. Custer Broadcasting Corp. v. Brewer, 163 M 519, 518 P2d 257 (1974).

Preparing to Overtake: Undisputed evidence that defendant, rapidly approaching from behind, waited until he was 20 to 25 feet from plaintiff's vehicle, which was traveling at 55 m.p.h., before moving to the left to pass on an interstate with divided lanes and a clear passing lane, showed that defendant was negligent in following too closely under the conditions. Summary judgment for plaintiff on issue of liability was proper even though there was evidence that defendant's power steering failed when he tried to move to left. Farris v. Clark, 158 M 33, 487 P2d 1307 (1971).

Following Closely as Negligence: Driving an automobile at a rapid rate of speed so close to a car ahead that, if the driver of the latter slows down, it becomes necessary for the driver of the first to turn to the left to avoid striking it, is negligence, particularly when in doing so he must turn in front of a car coming from the opposite direction. McDonough v. Smith, 86 M 545, 284 P 542 (1930).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) near beginning after "two" inserted "or more", after "leaving" substituted "a space delineated by two double yellow lines or two yellow lines with a crosshatch pattern" for "an intervening space", and at end inserted "unless directed or permitted by official traffic control devices or police officers to use another roadway"; in (2) near beginning after "or section" inserted "described in subsection (1)", near middle after "space or at" inserted "an established", and after "intersection" substituted "unless specifically prohibited by a" for "established by"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) and (2)(a) at beginning substituted "operate" for "drive"; in (2)(b) at end after "line" inserted "if travel through the opening is not prohibited by an official traffic control device"; in (2)(c) and (2)(d) at beginning substituted "operate a" for "drive any"; in (2)(e) near middle after "from the" substituted "public" for "highway" and at end after "jurisdiction" deleted "and, with the exception of an interstate highway, from the local governing body"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Inapplicable to Driving in Emergency Lanes: The purpose of this section is to forbid crossing over by vehicles into the driving lanes reserved for opposite-direction traffic. This section does not apply to vehicles that may occasionally be driven over or into the emergency lane of an interstate highway. Damjanovich v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 204 M 455, 665 P2d 1128, 40 St. Rep. 999 (1983).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) near middle after "ordinance" inserted "regulate or" and at end after "jurisdictions by" substituted "any class or kind of traffic that is found to be incompatible with the normal and safe movement of traffic or by any vehicle" for "pedestrians, bicycles, or other nonmotorized traffic or by a person operating a motor-driven cycle"; in (2) near middle of first sentence after "official" substituted "traffic control devices" for "signs" and after "controlled-access" substituted "highway" for "roadway" and at end of second sentence substituted "the official traffic control devices" for "those signs"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1991 Amendment: Substituted references to Department of Transportation for references to Department of Highways. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) at beginning of introductory clause, in (1)(c) in first sentence, and in (3) in second sentence substituted "operator" for "driver"; in (3) in three places substituted "official traffic control devices" for "markers, buttons, or signs"; inserted (4) concerning special lanes allowing vehicle operators proceeding in opposite directions to make left turns; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

The amendments to this section made by sec. 17, Ch. 352, L. 2003, were rendered void by sec. 51(2)(a), Ch. 352, L. 2003, a coordination section.

1983 Amendment: Inserted (1)(d) authorizing full use of turning lane at intersections; and inserted (2) requiring bicyclist to follow turning procedures established for drivers of motor vehicles and describing procedures for left-hand turns.

Case Notes

Observation of Traffic Violation Constituting Objective Data of Wrongdoing — Investigative Stop Justified: Thompson contended that because an officer did not observe Thompson speeding, driving erratically, or causing an accident or near accident and because the officer did not charge Thompson with any driving offense other than DUI, the officer did not have reasonable cause to justify an investigative stop. The Supreme Court disagreed. The officer testified that Thompson's vehicle made a wide turn and crossed over the centerline into the oncoming lane of traffic and that after Thompson overcorrected, Thompson continued to swerve in his own driving lane, rode the centerline, and swerved off the right side of the road, which led the officer to believe that Thompson might be intoxicated. The officer's observations constituted objective data from which an experienced officer could infer that the occupant of the vehicle was engaged in wrongdoing that was sufficient to justify the investigative stop. St. v. Thompson, 2006 MT 274, 334 M 226, 146 P3d 756 (2006), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004), and distinguishing St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998), and Morris v. St., 2001 MT 13, 304 M 114, 18 P3d 1003 (2001).

Improper Left Turn Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: At about 1:10 a.m., an officer observed Steen make a wide left-hand turn at an intersection and swerve to straddle the center of two eastbound lanes. The officer stopped Steen for violating this section and subsequently arrested Steen for DUI. Steen contended that the officer lacked a particularized suspicion to make an investigative stop and moved to suppress the evidence. The motion was denied, and Steen was convicted. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Steen's erratic driving was enough for the officer to suspect that Steen was engaged in wrongdoing and gave the officer a particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop under the totality of the circumstances. Steen's motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004). See also Moore v. St., 2002 MT 315, 313 M 126, 61 P3d 746 (2002).

Cutting Corners: The driver of a motor vehicle who, in violation of statute and city ordinance, cuts a corner at a street intersection and enters the wrong side of the street, whereby a traveler is injured, is guilty of negligence per se. March v. Ayers, 80 M 401, 260 P 702 (1927).

Strict Compliance Impracticable: A pedestrian brought an action against the driver of an automobile for personal injuries sustained at a street crossing. An instruction based upon subsections (1) and (2), section 32-1102, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), requiring the driver in turning corners to keep close to the curb, was prejudicially erroneous where the presence of a telephone pole in the highway about 6 feet from the curb near the point of the accident rendered it impossible for the driver to obey the mandate of the statute. The statutory provisions were elastic, not rigid, and were to be applied in the light of physical conditions existing in the avenues of traffic. McGregor v. Weinstein, 70 M 340, 225 P 615 (1924).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 inserted (1) prohibiting the turning of a vehicle to proceed in the opposite direction unless the movement can be made safely and without interfering with other traffic; in (2) near middle substituted "operator" for "driver"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Erratic U-Turn Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: After an officer observed Trombley make an erratic U-turn, drift over the fog line, fail to signal when switching lanes, and straddle the center line, Trombley was stopped and cited for DUI. Trombley contended, and the District Court agreed, that state law did not prohibit the U-turn, but under the totality of the circumstances, Trombley's actions rose to the level of particularized suspicion sufficient to warrant the investigative stop. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Trombley's erratic driving was enough for the officer to suspect that Trombley was engaged in wrongdoing and gave the officer a particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop under the totality of the circumstances. Trombley's motion to dismiss was properly denied. St. v. Trombley, 2005 MT 174, 327 M 507, 116 P3d 771 (2005), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004).

Case Notes

Four-Way Stops: The vehicle approaching from the right that would otherwise have the right-of-way loses the preference on approaching a four-way stop because it is required to stop. Where two drivers approached a four-way stop, neither had a statutory right-of-way or "preferred" or "favored" driver status and both were required to exercise ordinary care as they proceeded into or through the intersection. Elliott v. Hansen, 164 M 107, 519 P2d 411 (1974).

2005 Amendment: Chapter 542 in (2) after "business" and "residence" inserted "district" and after "urban district" deleted "as defined in 61-1-408 through 61-1-410". Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 in (1) at end of first sentence after "safety" inserted "and until an appropriate signal has been given" and at end of second sentence after "provided in" substituted "this section" for "the event any other traffic may be affected by such movement"; deleted former (4) that read: "(4) A signal by hand and arm need not be given continuously by the person operating a bicycle if the hand is needed in the control or operation of the bicycle"; in (4) near middle substituted "operator" for "driver"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1983 Amendment: Inserted (4) excusing bicyclist from using continuous hand signals if hand is needed to control bicycle.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "other than when passing" and added the last phrase beginning "in any business . . ." in (2); inserted subsection (3) requiring continuous turning signal at least 300 feet before turning.

Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence of Violation of Turn Signal Law to Justify Plaintiff's Comparative Negligence: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway, and the jury found that Hoffman was 50% negligent in the collision. Hoffman appealed on grounds that insubstantial evidence supported the jury's verdict. Although the evidence was conflicting regarding Hoffman's use of turn signals prior to the accident, Hoffman himself testified that he began signaling as much as 225 feet before stopping. However, this section requires use of a turn signal not less than 300 feet before making a turn in a nonurban area. A jury is not free to disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion testimony, and Hoffman's admission that he failed to signal for the full 300 feet was substantial credible evidence to support the jury's finding that Hoffman contributed to the crash and to his own injuries. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict, and denial of Hoffman's motion for a new trial was affirmed. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), following Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997).

Turn Signal Required Regardless of Any Effect on Other Traffic: The defendant convicted in a drug-related case argued that the officer had no grounds for originally stopping him for a traffic violation because he was not required to use his turn signal unless not doing so would affect other traffic. The Supreme Court pointed out that the statute had been changed in 2003 by the Legislature and that it now required the use of a turn signal regardless of whether or not other traffic would be affected by the lack of using the turn signal when turning. St. v. Meza, 2006 MT 210, 333 M 305, 143 P3d 422 (2006).

Erratic U-Turn Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: After an officer observed Trombley make an erratic U-turn, drift over the fog line, fail to signal when switching lanes, and straddle the center line, Trombley was stopped and cited for DUI. Trombley contended, and the District Court agreed, that state law did not prohibit the U-turn, but under the totality of the circumstances, Trombley's actions rose to the level of particularized suspicion sufficient to warrant the investigative stop. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Trombley's erratic driving was enough for the officer to suspect that Trombley was engaged in wrongdoing and gave the officer a particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop under the totality of the circumstances. Trombley's motion to dismiss was properly denied. St. v. Trombley, 2005 MT 174, 327 M 507, 116 P3d 771 (2005), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004).

Failure to Use Turn Signal Not Grounds for Traffic Stop: An officer responded to an anonymous complaint reporting a careless driver and observed a vehicle matching the description in a restaurant parking lot, but observed no activity that would justify a stop. The officer followed the vehicle when it departed and stopped it after the driver failed to signal a right-hand turn at an intersection, in violation of this section. Grindeland was subsequently arrested for DUI, but petitioned for reinstatement of his driving privileges on grounds that his failure to use turn signals did not violate the law and that the stop was thus not supported by a particularized suspicion of a criminal offense. The District Court agreed and reinstated Grindeland's driving privileges. The state appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under subsection (1) of this section, a driver is required to use a turn signal only when there is other traffic that might be affected by the turn. Although there were other vehicles in the area, there was insufficient objective data by which the officer could infer that the other vehicles may have been affected by Grindeland's turn, so the turn could not be considered illegal. Absent that objective data, the officer lacked a particularized suspicion upon which to make the stop, so the stop was illegal, and reinstatement of Grindeland's driving privileges was affirmed. (See 2003 amendment.) Grindeland v. St., 2001 MT 196, 306 M 262, 32 P3d 767 (2001).

Erratic Driving at Night in Proximity to Bars — Totality of Circumstances Justifying Traffic Stop: Shortly after midnight, an officer observed Loiselle's vehicle drifting across the right traffic lane, crossing the white fog line, making several turns without signaling, and weaving. The officer pulled Loiselle over for an investigative stop, which resulted in a DUI charge. At trial, Loiselle moved to suppress evidence obtained during the stop, but the motion was denied, and Loiselle appealed. To make an investigatory stop, an officer must have a particularized and objective basis for suspecting criminal activity, and whether particularized suspicion exists is a question of fact determined by considering the totality of the circumstances. In this case, the totality of the circumstances justified the stop. Loiselle did not merely touch the fog line, but actually drove over it and proceeded on the shoulder of the road for at least 3 seconds. The behavior was preceded by erratic driving that caught the officer's attention and that occurred late at night in the proximity of several nearby bars. Irrespective of Loiselle's failure to use turn signals, to a 5-year veteran of the Sheriff's office, there was sufficient objective data from which the officer could suspect that the occupant of the vehicle had engaged in wrongdoing and commence an investigatory stop. St. v. Loiselle, 2001 MT 174, 306 M 166, 30 P3d 1097 (2001).

Jury Instruction — Contributory Negligence: When evidence was such that a jury could conclude that turn signal was not functioning until after accident, it was proper to instruct jury as to contributory negligence. Dzikowski v. Jacobs, 170 M 302, 552 P2d 1102, 33 St. Rep. 753 (1976).

Passing Laws Not Applicable: In action for negligence in making left turn near the crest of a hill, it was error to instruct jury on inapplicable laws prohibiting anyone from driving on left side of road, especially when the instruction was combined with an instruction that statutory violations are negligence as a matter of law. Rude v. Neal, 165 M 520, 530 P2d 428 (1974).

Jury Decision: Conflicting testimony as to whether or not the driver of a truck looked to the rear before making a left turn and as to whether or not his turn-signal lights were operating was a question for the jury to decide. They could have properly concluded from the evidence that the plaintiff's car was in the passing lane prior to the time the defendant's truck turned left across the centerline. Beebe v. Johnson, 165 M 96, 526 P2d 128 (1974).

Duty to Signal — Safety Requirement: Defendant was driving a pickup truck which was struck from the rear by plaintiff's automobile. The accident occurred when plaintiff attempted to pass defendant's truck. Defendant was guilty of negligence, which proximately caused the accident in that he failed to signal for a left turn off the highway into a private driveway sufficiently in advance, and cut off plaintiff who was passing him. Sumner v. Amacher, 150 M 544, 437 P2d 630 (1968).

Duty to Look to Rear: Since there is no exception to this section for unlawful passing, plaintiff had the affirmative duty to look to the rear, as well as forward, and was contributorily negligent in not looking to the rear before making a left-hand turn. He could not rely on the presumption that he would not be passed in a no-passing zone. Bellon v. Heinzig, 347 F2d 4 (9th Cir. 1965).

Knowledge of Safety Not Required: This section requires that a person making a turning movement take reasonable precautions under the circumstances, but it does not require that such person know with absolute certainty that the turning movement can be made with safety. Holland v. Konda, 142 M 536, 385 P2d 272, 6 ALR 3d 824 (1963).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 106 in (1), near beginning after "two", inserted "or more", after "highways" deleted "at approximately the same time", and at end substituted "all vehicles approaching from the right that are close enough to constitute an immediate hazard" for "the vehicle on the right".

Case Notes

Two Roads Not Forming Intersection: In a negligence action based upon a vehicular accident, the record showed that the road on which plaintiff was traveling was a paved through road; the short segment on which the defendant approached was not a through road and therefore could not form an "intersection" within the meaning of 61-1-212 (now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions). The evidence did not show that the two roads joined were highways. The trial court therefore erred in establishing that the collision took place at an "intersection", which would have required the plaintiff's driver to yield the right-of-way. Kimes v. Herrin, 217 M 330, 705 P2d 108, 42 St. Rep. 1231 (1985).

Error to Direct Verdict — Factual Dispute on Entering Intersection at Same Time: It was error to grant a directed verdict on the issue of liability under this section when there was a factual issue on whether the vehicles entered the intersection at the same time. Thibaudeau v. Uglum, 201 M 260, 653 P2d 855, 39 St. Rep. 2096 (1982).

Driver on Left Must Yield: The Supreme Court rejected the lower court's finding that since respondent's vehicle had entered the intersection first and that appellant was guilty of negligence for having entered the intersection while looking to her right, away from the direction respondent came into the intersection, that this section was inapplicable. The driver on the left coming into an uncontrolled intersection must yield to the driver on the right. Marcoff v. Buck, 179 M 295, 587 P2d 1305, 35 St. Rep. 1953 (1978).

Accelerating to "Beat" Vehicle With Right-of-Way: The plaintiff proximately caused the collision with the defendant's vehicle by accelerating to "beat" the defendant's vehicle through the intersection, since the defendant's vehicle had the right-of-way under this section. Yates v. Hedges, 178 M 488, 585 P2d 1290, 35 St. Rep. 1488 (1978).

Through-Road Intersections: Montana law does not contemplate that if a road is designated as "through" it becomes the duty of persons approaching intersections with such through road to stop in the absence of stop signs. When two vehicles in this case collided in such an intersection, having entered at about the same time, the court assessed the negligence of each driver at 50%. Andrews v. U.S., 447 F. Supp. 434, 35 St. Rep. 350 (D.C. Mont. 1978).

Improper Signaling: Improper signal between drivers creates no legal duty to look out for maneuver which is a failure to yield right-of-way. Slagsvold v. Johnson, 168 M 490, 544 P2d 442, 32 St. Rep. 1273 (1975).

"Preferred" Driver Status: Where two vehicles collided at four-way stop, one vehicle traveling south to north and other vehicle traveling east to west, both drivers had duty to make full stop before entering intersection and to exercise ordinary care to determine whether it was safe to proceed through intersection, but neither driver had "preferred" driver status. Elliott v. Hansen, 164 M 107, 519 P2d 411 (1974).

Failure to Anticipate Failure to Yield — Not Negligence: There was no indication to plaintiffs that defendant, driving northbound, would not yield the right-of-way to them while they were traveling westbound, when both approached an uncontrolled intersection. Plaintiffs' failure to anticipate that defendant would accelerate to pass in front of them was not negligence on their part. Defendant's failure to yield the right-of-way at an uncontrolled intersection was a breach of this section. DeVerniero v. Eby, 159 M 146, 496 P2d 290 (1972).

Vehicles Meeting at Crossing: Plaintiff's automobile which he had driven from the west and which he was attempting to turn south on an intersecting road collided with defendant's truck which was being driven from the north over a slight hill. The accident occurred at an uncontrolled intersection just inside Jordan, Montana. Testimony showed that defendant's speed was approximately 60 miles per hour. Plaintiff was not required to look for miles up a road in order to ascertain that there were no vehicles approaching. All that was required of him was that he look sufficiently far to be sure there were no approaching vehicles which, in the mind of a reasonably prudent person, would be likely to cause an accident if he proceeded into the intersection. Jessen v. O'Daniel, 136 M 513, 349 P2d 107 (1960).

Collision at Intersection — Presumption of Proper Control: An automobile driver approaching an intersection observed a taxicab 150 feet away coming on the right at an excessive speed but continued on its course. The automobile driver was justified in assuming that the driver of the taxicab would keep a proper lookout, observe the law, slow down, and have his car under complete control. If he had done so, he could have avoided plaintiff's car which had proceeded too far into the intersection to stop in a zone of safety. The taxidriver was relying blindly on his right to the right-of-way under a city ordinance. Flynn v. Helena Cab & Bus Co., 94 M 204, 21 P2d 1105 (1933).

Case Notes

Failure to Keep Lookout at Light-Controlled Intersection — Liability as Matter of Law: With a green light, Vender pulled into an intersection to make a left-hand turn but had to wait for oncoming traffic before turning. While in the intersection, he was struck by Stone, who testified that he did not see a light and could not avoid colliding with the Vender car. The jury found 50% negligence with each driver. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that as a matter of law, Stone was solely liable for the collision by failing to exercise reasonable care. A motorist's failure when approaching a controlled intersection to keep a lookout to see what is plainly visible or obviously apparent makes him chargeable for failure to see what he should have seen with the exercise of reasonable care. Vender v. Stone, 245 M 428, 802 P2d 606, 47 St. Rep. 2121 (1990).

Collision of Left-Turning and Approaching Vehicles: Where the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for damages sustained in a collision after the defendant stopped on a two-lane highway to turn left in front of a stopped truck and did not see the plaintiff's car approaching at approximately 50 mph toward her from behind the truck, the District Court did not err in denying the plaintiff's motion to set aside the jury's verdict finding the plaintiff 50% negligent for the resulting accident. The speed at which plaintiff entered the intersection and the fact that her view was obstructed at the time constituted sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding. Lackey v. Wilson, 205 M 476, 668 P2d 1051, 40 St. Rep. 1439 (1983).

Additional Duties: This section does not purport to catalogue all the rights and duties of a driver intending to turn left and does not negate the existence of an additional duty to maintain a proper lookout for vehicles approaching from the rear, even where plaintiff was making a left turn in a no-passing zone. Bellon v. Heinzig, 347 F2d 4 (9th Cir. 1965).

Case Notes

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67 (1988).

Material Fact Remaining Regarding Circumstances of Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment Improper: Contreras entered a highway from a side road and collided with Fitzgerald, who was passing a truck in the same lane that Contreras entered. Fitzgerald requested summary judgment regarding Contreras's negligence as a matter of law for failure to yield the right-of-way. The District Court found that whether Contreras was negligent was a question best left to the jury and denied the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although violation of a motor vehicle statute will not constitute negligence as a matter of law only under extremely limited circumstances, in this case, it was uncertain from the record about what occurred immediately preceding the accident. Evidence conflicted concerning when Contreras entered the highway, whether Contreras and Fitzgerald entered the same lane simultaneously, and how much time Contreras had to react and prevent the accident. These material questions of fact were for the trier of fact to decide, and summary judgment was not proper when these material fact questions remained. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002).

Forfeiture of Bond in Payment of Fine Not Evidence of Guilty Plea for Failure to Yield Right-of-Way: Allen sought to exclude evidence that she had received a citation for failure to yield the right-of-way after an accident with Spinler. Spinler asserted that Allen had pleaded guilty to the cited offense and urged that a guilty plea to a traffic offense was admissible in the civil proceeding to determine liability for the accident. The District Court correctly determined that Allen had merely appeared in City Court and essentially forfeited bond in payment of the fine without contesting the merits of the citation. Nothing in the docket affirmatively indicated that Allen entered a guilty plea to the cited offense, so evidence of the citation was properly disallowed. Spinler v. Allen, 1999 MT 160, 295 M 139, 983 P2d 348, 56 St. Rep. 632 (1999).

Failure to Yield Versus Failure to Maintain Lookout — Favored Driver Versus Disfavored Driver — Speed Not Material Factual Issue in Failure to Yield: Roe contended that material issues of fact precluded summary judgment against her for failure to yield at an intersection, arguing that Kornder-Owen's negligent failure to maintain an adequate lookout was a genuine issue that was not addressed. In Montana, automobiles approaching an intersection are accorded the status of favored or disfavored drivers in order to facilitate the orderly movement of traffic. A favored driver cannot blindly rely on the right-of-way, but instead must maintain a proper lookout and use reasonable care. However, a favored driver has the right to assume that a disfavored driver will yield the right-of-way when required by law. As favored driver, Kornder-Owen had the right to rely on Roe's compliance with this section and was not required to anticipate Roe's right-of-way violation. The predicate for imposition of a duty on Kornder-Owen, as favored driver, did not occur. Further, the speed at which Kornder-Owen was traveling did not contribute as a substantial factor to the collision and did not satisfy Roe's burden of demonstrating a material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Roe v. Kornder-Owen, 282 M 287, 937 P2d 39, 54 St. Rep. 366 (1997), distinguishing Sweet v. Edmonds, 171 M 106, 555 P2d 504 (1976), and Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228 (1996). Roe was distinguished and Sweet was compared in Spinler v. Allen, 1999 MT 160, 295 M 139, 983 P2d 348, 56 St. Rep. 632 (1999).

Failure to Yield at Limited Visibility Intersection: Although there was conflicting testimony as to the length of time Dotting waited at a stop sign at a limited visibility intersection before proceeding into traffic, there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that Dotting could have yielded to oncoming traffic if he had waited for traffic obscured by a hill to become visible. It was proper for the court to apply 61-8-344 and this section to Dotting's actions in entering traffic from the limited visibility intersection. Yellowstone Water Serv. v. Dotting, 280 M 1, 928 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1271 (1996).

Through-Road Intersections: Montana law does not contemplate that if a road is designated as "through" it becomes the duty of persons approaching intersections with such through road to stop in the absence of stop signs. When two vehicles in this case collided in such an intersection, having entered at about the same time, the court assessed the negligence of each driver at 50%. Andrews v. U.S., 447 F. Supp. 434, 35 St. Rep. 350 (D.C. Mont. 1978).

Jury Question: A directed verdict should not have been granted on the basis that the plaintiff failed to prove a causal relationship between the defendant's acts and the collision when the evidence was undisputed: the defendant was speeding, he had been drinking, and he did not see the plaintiff's automobile until immediately before the collision. Sweet v. Edmonds, 171 M 106, 555 P2d 504, 33 St. Rep. 1017 (1976), followed in Spinler v. Allen, 1999 MT 160, 295 M 139, 983 P2d 348, 56 St. Rep. 632 (1999).

Improper Signaling: Improper signal between drivers creates no legal duty to look out for maneuver which is a failure to yield right-of-way. Slagsvold v. Johnson, 168 M 490, 544 P2d 442, 32 St. Rep. 1273 (1975).

Four-Way Stops: The vehicle approaching from the right that would otherwise have the right-of-way loses the preference on approaching a four-way stop because it is required to stop. Where two drivers approached a four-way stop, neither had a statutory right-of-way or "preferred" or "favored" driver status and both were required to exercise ordinary care as they proceeded into or through the intersection. Elliott v. Hansen, 164 M 107, 519 P2d 411 (1974).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 352 at beginning of introductory clause substituted "An operator" for "When the intersection is designated by the department of transportation, or the local authority having jurisdiction, as a "Yield" intersection, the driver"; in (1) near beginning after "speed" substituted "that is reasonable for existing conditions and, if required for safety, shall stop before entering the intersection" for "of not more than 15 miles per hour and yield right-of-way to all vehicles approaching from the right or left on the intersecting roads or streets which are so close as to constitute an immediate hazard"; inserted (2) requiring an operator to yield the right-of-way to any vehicle in the intersection or approaching on another roadway close enough to constitute an immediate hazard during the time that the operator is moving across or within the intersection or junction of roadways; inserted (3) requiring an operator to yield the right-of-way to pedestrians within crosswalks at the intersection; in (4) at beginning after "If" substituted "an operator of a vehicle, after having driven past a "Yield" sign" for "a driver", after "a collision" inserted "with another vehicle", after "intersection or" substituted "junction of roadways or with a pedestrian in an adjacent crosswalk" for "interferes with the movement of other vehicles after driving past a "Yield" sign", after "the collision" substituted "is considered prima facie" for "or interference shall be deemed", and near end substituted "operator's" for "driver's"; and made minor changes in style. Failure to Yield as Negligence as Matter of Law — Summary Judgment Proper: Defendant, who was involved in an automobile collision, admitted that he failed to yield the right-of-way to plaintiff's vehicle. Because defendant had a duty to yield, his failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law, and the District Court erred in denying defendant partial summary judgment. Olson v. Parchen, 249 M 342, 816 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 718 (1991), distinguished in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67 (1988).

Material Fact Remaining Regarding Circumstances of Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment Improper: Contreras entered a highway from a side road and collided with Fitzgerald, who was passing a truck in the same lane that Contreras entered. Fitzgerald requested summary judgment regarding Contreras's negligence as a matter of law for failure to yield the right-of-way. The District Court found that whether Contreras was negligent was a question best left to the jury and denied the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although violation of a motor vehicle statute will not constitute negligence as a matter of law only under extremely limited circumstances, in this case, it was uncertain from the record about what occurred immediately preceding the accident. Evidence conflicted concerning when Contreras entered the highway, whether Contreras and Fitzgerald entered the same lane simultaneously, and how much time Contreras had to react and prevent the accident. These material questions of fact were for the trier of fact to decide, and summary judgment was not proper when these material fact questions remained. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002).

Public Approach Ramp: An exit on state right-of-way from gravel road intersecting paved frontage road to interstate highway was a public approach ramp within the meaning of this section. Pachek v. Norton Concrete Co., 160 M 16, 499 P2d 766 (1972).

Intersection Rules Inapplicable: The word "crossing" as used in section 32-1102, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), with relation to the duty of drivers at crossings, referred to the intersection of a highway and a railroad or of two highways. An instruction based upon that section offered by defendant, through whose negligence in driving on a private way across the highway with the intention of entering a gate on the opposite side, plaintiff was injured, was properly refused as not applicable. Knott v. Pepper, 74 M 236, 239 P 1037 (1925).

Failure to Yield at Limited Visibility Intersection: Although there was conflicting testimony as to the length of time Dotting waited at a stop sign at a limited visibility intersection before proceeding into traffic, there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that Dotting could have yielded to oncoming traffic if he had waited for traffic obscured by a hill to become visible. It was proper for the court to apply 61-8-341 and this section to Dotting's actions in entering traffic from the limited visibility intersection. Yellowstone Water Serv. v. Questions of Duty of Care and Proximate Cause Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Remand: Highway patrol officer Fisher was investigating a traffic accident when he was struck by a semitruck owned by Swift Transportation Company (Swift) that was being removed from the accident scene. Fisher sued Swift for negligence, alleging that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care. The District Court found that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff as a matter of law, but granted partial summary judgment for Swift on the issue of causation, and held that Fisher's injuries were unforeseeable as a matter of law. Fisher appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care based on the driver's legal duty to drive in a careful and prudent manner and at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent under the conditions existing at the point of operation when approaching a stationary, authorized emergency vehicle. Citing Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), the court also agreed that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff because Fisher was within the foreseeable zone of risk and that the Swift driver could reasonably have foreseen that his negligent conduct could have resulted in injury to Fisher. Additionally, no policy considerations barred the imposition of statutory duties on the Swift driver. The court also disagreed with the District Court's conclusion that Fisher's injury was unforeseeable as a matter of law, concluding that reasonable minds could differ as to whether the injury was a foreseeable result of the Swift driver's negligence and that the issue of proximate cause was best left to the factfinder for resolution. Thus, the question of whether the Swift driver's conduct, in a natural and continuous sequence, helped produce Fisher's injury constituted a genuine issue of material fact that was inappropriate for resolution by summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 M 335, 181 P3d 601 (2008). See also Prindel v. Case Notes

Admissibility of Evidence to Rebut Affirmative Defense — "Plain Visibility" of Oncoming Train: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. In basing its defense on Mickelson's comparative negligence in failing to see the train, MRL was allowed to allege and represent to the jury that the train was plainly visible, in part because of its yellow blinking light, thereby triggering Mickelson's alleged duty to stop for the train. Mickelson sought to refute that contention by offering testimony that the train's lighting configuration did not make the train visible to approaching motorists, but the evidence was held inadmissible on grounds that MRL met federal requirements regarding lighting and thus could not be held liable for its particular lighting configuration. However, Mickelson's evidence was not offered to impose liability upon MRL for failing to change its lighting configuration, but rather to demonstrate that, contrary to MRL's experts, the lighting configuration did not make the train so plainly visible that Mickelson was comparatively negligent for failing to see it. Under Pitasi v. Stratton Corp., 968 F2d 1558 (2nd Cir. 1992), evidence that is not admissible to prove culpability may nevertheless be introduced to rebut an affirmative defense. By denying Mickelson the right to rebut MRL's evidence in support of its contention that Mickelson was comparatively negligent, the trial court essentially directed a verdict in favor of MRL on the comparative negligence issue, which was an abuse of the court's discretion, constituting reversible error. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), distinguishing Marshall v. Burlington N., Inc., 720 F2d 1149 (9th Cir. 1983), and Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Improper Jury Instruction Regarding Speed of Train — Applicable Law of Case: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. MRL moved for summary judgment, arguing that the subject of train speed was preempted by CSX Transp., Inc. v. Easterwood, 507 US 658, 123 L Ed 2d 387, 113 S Ct 1732 (1993). The District Court denied MRL's motion, ruling that a negligence action based on a state law duty to slow or stop a train to avoid a specific individual hazard was not preempted under CSX. Nevertheless, the court's instructions to the jury stated that "Under the laws governing the speed of trains, a train crew has no duty to slow a train until a reasonable and prudent train operator has reason to believe, based upon the circumstances present, that the operator of a motor vehicle will not yield to the train and there is a substantial risk of a collision" and that "Montana law does not provide the driver of an emergency vehicle any special privilege in relation to railroad crossings. Emergency vehicle drivers must follow the requirements when approaching and crossing railroad crossings as any other vehicle driver". Following jury deliberations, MRL was found not liable. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in instructing the jury on the speed of trains because the instructions did not state the applicable law of the case. As set out in Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), whether a railroad is negligent in a particular manner, such as failing to reduce train speed, is a question of fact for the jury. Here, the jury instructions improperly removed the question of train speed from jury consideration, compelling the jury to conclude that the train crew did not have a duty to do anything more than they did, rather than deciding whether the facts and circumstances of this case constituted a specific individual hazard. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000).

Coordination of Statutes: Section 61-8-347 setting forth the obligation of a motorist to stop at a railroad crossing when a train by reason of its speed or proximity to the crossing, is a hazard establishes the applicable duty of motorists. Section 61-8-347 controls over the provisions of 61-8-349(1) setting forth a duty to stop whenever a moving train is within sight or hearing. Marshall v. Burlington N., Inc., 720 F2d 1149 (9th Cir. 1983).

Admissibility Dependent on Nature of Treatise: Learned treatises are permissible for use in cross-examination of an expert if the treatise is "established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice". Here, a treatise on design of grade railway-highway crossings was properly used to test the knowledge of an expert witness in cross-examination. Another treatise concerning the visibility and audibility of trains approaching crossings was properly held to be inadmissible, as it was merely advisory in nature. Treatises may be admitted upon the foundation that they (1) show what is feasible to the jury, or (2) show what the defendant knew or should have known about safety precautions. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

Jury Instructions: Failure of trial court to instruct jury that decedent had been contributorily negligent if he failed to stop, look, and listen when either tracks or highway signs indicated the presence of a railway crossing was reversible error. O'Brien v. Great N. Ry., 145 M 13, 400 P2d 634 (1965), certiorari denied 387 US 920, 87 S Ct 2034 (1967).

Attorney General's Opinions

Covering of School Bus Markings — Field Trips or Athletic Events: School bus markings need not be covered or concealed where school buses are being utilized to transport children to or from school on school sponsored field trips or in connection with school athletic events or other authorized activities. 38 A.G. Op. 104 (1980).

Duty to Display Flashing Lights: Red lights on school buses need not be activated when a bus is stopped to load or unload students inside the corporate limits of a city or town. However, it is appropriate to maintain flashing amber lights on such vehicle while stopped to load or unload children as a warning to motorists in the interest of safety. 37 A.G. Op. 93 (1977).

Case Notes

Stop for Alleged Parking Violation Pretextual for Suspected Drug Investigation — Tainted Evidence Excluded: Defendant, on parole for a felony drug conviction, attracted the attention of a highway patrol officer who was aware of defendant's conviction and suspected reinvolvement in illegal drug activity. When defendant parked behind an acquaintance's car along the side of an unpaved street, the officer followed and subsequently cited both vehicles for illegal parking violations. During the stop, officers searched both vehicles and discovered drugs and a stolen handgun. Upon indictment for possession of the drugs and the firearm, the District Court denied defendant's claim that the evidence gathered as a result of the vehicle search should be suppressed as a violation of defendant's fourth amendment rights. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court reversed, holding that the officer's use of an alleged parking violation was merely a pretext to search for evidence of defendant's illegal drug involvement, requiring exclusion of all evidence seized during an illegal search. U.S. v. Hernandez, 55 F3d 443 (9th Cir. 1995).

Parked and Disabled Vehicle Not Proximate Cause of Accident — Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where the defendant parked his stalled pickup truck at the side of a frontage road and turned on the floodlights of the haygrinder he was pulling before leaving the truck to seek help, but the truck was nevertheless struck by the plaintiff's vehicle, the Supreme Court found that the jury verdict for the defendant was supported by substantial evidence. The record showed that the plaintiff had seen the defendant's lights from one-half mile away but failed to avoid the accident. The jury found defendant 0% negligent and plaintiff 100% negligent; it was entitled to conclude, as it did, that negligence on the part of the defendant was not the proximate cause of the accident. Griffel v. Faust, 205 M 372, 668 P2d 247, 40 St. Rep. 1370 (1983).

Statutory Violations a Jury Question: The plaintiff sued the defendants for injuries he suffered when he drove his truck into the rear of their car. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants violated various motor vehicle statutes and the duty of care owed to the plaintiff, but the Supreme Court found that these were questions of fact for the jury and substantial evidence supported the findings for the defendants. Substantial and sufficient evidence also was found to support the jury's determination that the defendants' actions did not proximately cause the plaintiff's injury. Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 1492 (1981).

Visibility Impaired: This section prohibits stopping in a traffic lane even under weather conditions causing poor visibility. Kirby v. Kelly, 161 M 66, 504 P2d 683 (1972).

Disabled Vehicle: Where truck had run out of gas, its driver was negligent in not removing the vehicle from the highway when the operator of a passing vehicle offered to assist. Burns v. Fisher, 132 M 26, 313 P2d 1044, 67 ALR 2d 1 (1957).

Right to Stop — Incident to Highway Use: A motorist ticked the fender of a car stopped to repair a flat tire. The motorist stopped to see if he had done any damage to the car. He stepped from his car and was struck by an approaching car. While the motorist who stopped was required to exercise reasonable care for his own safety, he was not required to anticipate that an oncoming car would not see him. The right to stop on the highway when occasion demands is incident to the right to use the highway even though it places such person in a dangerous position. The negligence of the parties involved is a question for the jury. Fulton v. Chouteau County Farmers' Co., 98 M 48, 37 P2d 1025 (1934).

Stopping on Highway — Driver to Use Diligence in Removing: The right to stop an automobile on the public highway when occasion demands is an incident to the right to travel. When an automobile becomes disabled on the highway causing its stoppage, the driver should employ due diligence to remove it in a reasonable time. In the absence of any showing of lack of diligence, the driver is not liable in negligence for injuries arising from a collision with the stopped automobile. Morton v. Mooney, 97 M 1, 33 P2d 262 (1934).

Failure to Keep Lookout at Light-Controlled Intersection — Liability as Matter of Law: With a green light, Vender pulled into an intersection to make a left-hand turn but had to wait for oncoming traffic before turning. While in the intersection, he was struck by Stone, who testified that he did not see a light and could not avoid colliding with the Vender car. The jury found 50% negligence with each driver. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that as a matter of law, Stone was solely liable for the collision by failing to exercise reasonable care. A motorist's failure when approaching a controlled intersection to keep a lookout to see what is plainly visible or obviously apparent makes him chargeable for failure to see what he should have seen with the exercise of reasonable care. Vender v. Stone, 245 M 428, 802 P2d 606, 47 St. Rep. 2121 (1990).

Negligence Issue Not Normally Susceptible to Summary Judgment: Plaintiff was injured when a car struck her as she was crossing a street at an intersection. Plaintiff sued the driver of the car and a beer distributing company whose truck was at least partially blocking one of four lanes of traffic and the intersection. The District Court granted summary judgment to the distributor. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's decision, holding that issues of negligence are not ordinarily susceptible to summary judgment. There was a material issue of fact as to whether the truck was illegally parked, and if so, whether the truck's position was a proximate cause of the accident. Hendrickson v. Neiman, 204 M 367, 665 P2d 219, 40 St. Rep. 909 (1983).

Negligence as Matter of Law: Crane driver whose crane was blocking bridge was not negligent as matter of law even though he parked crane on bridge in violation of statute proscribing drivers from parking vehicles upon bridge where suit was between driver of automobile which stopped to avoid crane and driver of second automobile which rear-ended first. Jimison v. U.S., 427 F2d 1133 (9th Cir. 1970), affirming Jimison v. U.S., 267 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1967).

The authorities determined that no action or inaction on Cady's part was responsible for the accident. The personal representative for Hislop's estate initiated a civil action and argued that Cady was liable as a matter of law because the provisions of this section require a driver to stay to the right when traveling through a mountainous region. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 472, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation has asserted regulatory jurisdiction over the beds of various rivers and streams based on the premise that the streams are navigable and that the state therefore owns the riverbeds and streambeds; and

WHEREAS, very few Montana rivers or streams have been adjudicated as navigable, either in whole or in part; and

WHEREAS, it is not economically feasible for either the Department of Revenue or the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation to obtain judicial determinations of riverbed or streambed ownership by statewide quiet title actions, yet that ownership determination may not be made legally by unilateral administrative decisions; and

WHEREAS, if the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation wishes to assert regulatory control over the bed of a river or stream that has not been adjudicated to be navigable and was not determined navigable at the time of the original federal government surveys of the public land as evidenced by the recorded and monumented surveys of the meander lines of the river, it is required to provide written notice of the claim of state ownership to the affected property owners; and

WHEREAS, because the present claims of state ownership of riverbeds and streambeds is contrary to longstanding administrative practice and because the test for navigability depends upon evidence concerning the log floating capability of a stream at the time of statehood, there is no presumption of correctness attached to a navigability claim made by any state agency."

Legislative Findings: Section 1, Ch. 472, L. 2009, provided: "The legislature finds that:

(1) for 120 years since the admission of Montana as a state in 1889, the department of revenue and its predecessor agencies have taxed some landowners whose property abuts a river or stream on the assumption that those riparian landowners owned the property to the middle of the river or stream;

(2) in Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544 (1981), the United States supreme court recognized that if a river or stream is not navigable, the abutting riparian landowners own the land in the bed of the stream to the middle of the stream, but if a river or stream is navigable, the state owns the bed of the river or stream, having acquired ownership from the United States when the state was admitted to the union, and therefore Montana owns the bed of the Bighorn River where it flows through the Crow reservation;

(3) for the purpose of determining the ownership of a riverbed or streambed, the test of navigability is whether logs could be floated in the stream at the time of statehood as stated in Montana Coalition for Stream Access v. Curran, 210 Mont. 38, 682 P.2d 163 (1984), based upon The Montello, 87 U.S. 430 (1874), Sierra Pacific Power Co. v. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, 681 F.2d 1134 (9th Cir. 1982), and State of Oregon v. Riverfront Protection Association, 672 F.2d 792 (9th Cir. 1982);

(4) beginning with tax assessments that were effective January 1, 2008, the lien date for real property taxes, the department of revenue reassessed the property of riparian landowners whose land abuts various rivers and streams by reducing the amount of land assessed based upon the premise that the landowners did not own to the middle of the river or stream because the river or stream was navigable and these reassessments, if correct, have enormous impact upon the riparian landowners because they affect land titles, acreage owned, qualification for various conservation and price support programs, and ownership of water diversion facilities and other structures that the riparian landowners have constructed for water usage;

(5) the 2008 reassessments were made by simply sending out tax bills without any notice that they were based upon a claim of state ownership of the riverbeds or streambeds and some riparian landowners have paid the first installment of 2008 real property taxes based upon the reassessments without realizing that a claim of state ownership of the riverbeds and streambeds was the basis for the reassessments;

(6) procedural due process requires that if a claim of change in ownership is involved, the state agency involved shall afford the affected property owners both notice of the claim and the opportunity to be heard;

(7) the 2008 real property tax assessments based upon claims of state ownership did not comply with the constitutional requirement for procedural due process and under that circumstance payment by the property owners of taxes based on the reassessment does not constitute acquiesence in the underlying state ownership claim;

(8) The department of revenue is required to provide written notice to the affected property owners of the state's claim of ownership so that the affected property owners have a fair opportunity to be heard and to dispute the government's claim."

Intoxicated Operator's Negligence — Sole Proximate Cause of Accident: In a civil action by the guardian of a person incapacitated in a motorcycle accident, the Supreme Court held that substantial credible evidence supported a finding that the operator, who was intoxicated at the time of the accident, was negligent; his negligence was the sole proximate cause of his accident. Although the state's design, construction, signing, and maintenance of the intersection at which the accident occurred were deficient, the plaintiff's own acts of negligence, including driving under the influence of alcohol, caused the accident. Any negligence by the state was not in any degree a proximate cause of the accident. Bartel v. St., 217 M 380, 704 P2d 1067, 42 St. Rep. 1266 (1985).

Court to Advise Defendant of Rights in Statute — No Duty to Inform of Additional Rights: Charged with his fourth DUI, the defendant claimed that under the Supreme Court's decisions in St. v. Knox, 2001 MT 232, 307 Mont. 1, 36 P.3d 383, and St. v. Yother, 253 Mont. 128, 831 P.2d 1347 (1997), a criminal defendant must be advised of certain rights in addition to those listed in 46-12-210 before a court may accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere. Accordingly, he argued that his three prior guilty pleas were constitutionally deficient because he was advised of only the rights listed in 46-12-210. The District Court disagreed and concluded his prior pleas were informed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed and clarified that the only rights of which a criminal defendant must be made aware prior to entering a plea are those found in 46-12-210. The court also clarified that neither Knox nor Yother expanded the list of rights. St. v. Otto, 2012 MT 199, 366 Mont. 209, 285 P.3d 583.

No Custody or Interrogation — Miranda Warning Not Required for Public Roadside DUI Investigation: A Miranda warning is not required during a roadside DUI investigation if brief public investigative encounters, even if somewhat coercive, do not constitute a custody and if the request for a field sobriety test is done without interrogation. St. v. Larson, 2010 MT 236, 358 Mont. 156, 243 P.3d 1130.

Officer's Voluntary Exchange With Person in Parked Vehicle in Public Place Not Considered Seizure: Wilkins was parked in a public industrial area late on a cold night in a running vehicle with the lights on. An officer noticed the car and, being concerned that the vehicle was in an area where recent burglaries had occurred and concerned for the welfare of the driver, stopped to investigate. While speaking with Wilkins, the officer smelled the odor of an alcoholic beverage and noticed that Wilkins' speech was slurred, and after further investigation Wilkins was arrested for DUI. Wilkins contended that the arrest was unlawful because the officer had no particularized suspicion and because the community caretaker doctrine was inapplicable. Without reaching either of Wilkins' arguments, the Supreme Court affirmed because the officer's contact with Wilkins did not amount to a seizure. The officer was alone and did not activate emergency lights or a spotlight, display a weapon, or use threatening tones during the conversation, but rather simply approached Wilkins to see why she was parked on a dark, remote street late at night in cold weather. A reasonable person in Wilkins' place would not have concluded that she was not free to leave following the voluntary contact. Wilkins was parked in a public place, and the officer did not need a particularized suspicion to justify the contact. St. v. Wilkins, 2009 MT 99, 350 M 96, 205 P3d 795 (2009).

Statutory Right to Plead Guilty to DUI and Related Misdemeanor Citations Not Violated by City Court's Refusal to Accept Pleas: There was no prejudice and any error was harmless when the state dismissed DUI charges prior to the District Court trial on one felony count and two misdemeanor charges of negligent vehicular assault. St. v. Milligan, 2008 MT 375, 346 M 491, 197 P3d 956 (2008).

No Triple Jeopardy in Prosecution of Misdemeanor Absent Prosecutorial Intent to Provoke Mistrial: At Mouat's misdemeanor DUI trial, the city prosecutor presented a videotape of Mouat's arrest, which showed the arresting officer asking Mouat about previous DUI arrests. Mouat moved for and was granted a mistrial. The trial court found that admission of the offending statement was an inadvertent oversight by both parties and ordered the city to redact the statement from the tape. Nevertheless, despite the city's efforts, at the next trial, the statement was still slightly audible, and Mouat again moved for and was granted a mistrial. Mouat then asserted that, based on double jeopardy and fundamental fairness grounds, the prosecution should not be granted a third trial in a misdemeanor case when the cause was negligence on the part of the government. The Supreme Court disagreed, citing St. v. Mallak, 2005 MT 49, 326 M 165, 109 P3d 209 (2005), for the proposition that when a mistrial is declared on a defendant's motion, double jeopardy does not bar a subsequent trial unless the governmental conduct in question was intended to goad defendant into moving for a mistrial. Billings v. Mouat, 2008 MT 66, 342 M 79, 180 P3d 1121 (2008).

Failure to Give Investigative Stop Advisory Following DUI-Related Accident — No Error: Zakovi was involved in a motorcycle accident, and when the investigating officer arrived, Zakovi was being loaded into an ambulance. Prior to transport to the hospital, the officer noticed that Zakovi's breath smelled of alcohol. Following further investigation at the hospital, Zakovi was arrested for DUI. At trial, Zakovi moved to suppress the DUI evidence because the officer failed to give the investigative stop advisory required under former 46-5-402 and St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002). The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under the former statute, an officer was required to give an investigative stop advisory only when making an investigative stop upon observing circumstances that created a particularized suspicion. Here, the officer did not observe circumstances creating a particularized suspicion because Zakovi was already stopped. Absent initiation of an investigative stop, no advisory was required. St. v. Zakovi, 2005 MT 91, 326 M 475, 110 P3d 469 (2005).

Defendant Advised Not to Drive — No Entrapment Upon Subsequent Arrest for DUI: The bartender at a Carter bar called officers to report that Reynolds was drunk and causing a disturbance. When they arrived, the officers inquired about Reynolds' health and concluded that he was not ill but intoxicated. A background check revealed that Reynolds driver's license had been revoked, so the officers advised Reynolds not to drive. Reynolds gave his car keys to the bartender and indicated that he had arranged for a ride. The bartender told Reynolds that he could stay until he was sober or his ride arrived, providing that he did not bother the other customers. About 2 hours later, officers received another call indicating that Reynolds was again belligerent and demanding return of the keys and that the bartender feared for her safety if she refused to return them. The officers told the bartender to return the keys and proceeded back to the bar, waiting outside to see if Reynolds drove away. When Reynolds drove off, he was arrested for felony DUI, fourth or subsequent offense, driving while his license was suspended or revoked, ninth offense, and driving without liability insurance. Reynolds contended that the officers' conduct constituted entrapment and moved to dismiss the charges, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. In St. v. Canon, 212 M 157, 687 P2d 705 (1984), the court set out elements of the defense of entrapment: (1) criminal intent or design originating in the mind of the police officer or informer; (2) absence of criminal intent or design originating in the mind of the accused; and (3) luring or inducing the accused into committing a crime that the accused had no intention of committing, noting that there is a difference between inducing a person to commit a crime and setting a trap to catch a person in the execution of a criminal design of the person's own conception. Reynolds failed to prove any of the elements of entrapment. The officers warned Reynolds about driving, and yet he did so anyway. Merely affording Reynolds the opportunity or facility to commit the offenses was not entrapment. St. v. Reynolds, 2004 MT 364, 324 M 495, 104 P3d 1056 (2004). See also St. v. Kim, 239 M 189, 779 P2d 512 (1989), and St. v. Sweet, 1998 MT 30, 287 M 336, 954 P2d 1133 (1998).

Failure of Counsel to File Motion to Dismiss Not Considered Ineffective Assistance When Element of Offense Before Jury: Maki was arrested for DUI after being discovered slumped into the passenger seat of a running vehicle that was parked off the highway near a missile silo access site. Maki claimed ineffective assistance of counsel because his attorney did not file a motion to dismiss based on the fact that Maki was not on a way of the state open to the public. However, Maki's location on a way open to the public was an element of a DUI offense, so the issue was before the jury and Maki had an opportunity to contest the point. Counsel did not need to offer a motion to dismiss in order to raise the issue, and failure to do so neither prejudiced nor deprived Maki of a fair trial, so the ineffective assistance claim failed, and the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Maki, 2004 MT 226, 322 M 420, 97 P3d 556 (2004).

Imposition of Mandatory Statutory Fine Without Specifying Payment Schedule or Consideration of Ability to Pay Not Erroneous: Mingus was convicted of DUI and fined the statutory minimum $1,000, as required in 61-8-731. The fine was statutorily mandated and clearly within statutory parameters. Mingus asserted error because the sentencing court did not inquire into his ability to pay, as required in 46-18-231, or establish a payment schedule, as allowed in 46-18-234. The Supreme Court disagreed. Ability to pay and consideration of a payment schedule apply only to discretionary fines, not statutorily mandated fines. When a fine is mandated, the sentencing court has no discretion whether to impose the fine, irrespective of defendant's ability to pay, nor is a sentencing court required to establish a payment schedule or specify when a mandatory fine must be paid under 61-8-731. St. v. Mingus, 2004 MT 24, 319 M 349, 84 P3d 658 (2004).

Voluntary Encounter Versus Investigative Stop: Officers received a report from a citizen that a vehicle had been observed being driven erratically on the interstate and that the driver had pulled over at a convenience store and staggered into the building. When officers arrived, they found an unoccupied vehicle that matched the informant's description and observed Wagner inside on the telephone. The officers initiated contact with Wagner, noticing immediately that he appeared intoxicated, and requested that Wagner speak with them outside. Wagner acceded, voluntarily admitted that he had been drinking, failed field sobriety tests, and was arrested for DUI. Wagner subsequently asserted that the officers lacked a particularized suspicion to make the investigative stop because the informant's report was not sufficiently corroborated and moved to dismiss. The motion was denied, and Wagner appealed. The Supreme Court noted that if the telephone encounter constituted an investigative stop, it would be necessary to determine whether the officers obtained the requisite particularized suspicion, but if the encounter did not constitute a stop, it must be determined whether officers obtained the requisite particularized suspicion after initiating contact but prior to conducting a stop. Here, the court cited U.S. v. Mendenhall, 446 US 544 (1980), and held that Wagner was not "seized" because in view of all the circumstances surrounding the incident, Wagner would not have believed that he was not free to leave. Following the initial approach, the officers then obtained the evidence of Wagner's intoxication through consensual means, providing the requisite particularized suspicion to conduct the ensuing investigative stop. St. v. Wagner, 2003 MT 120, 315 M 498, 68 P3d 840 (2003). See also St. v. Jenkins, 192 M 539, 629 P2d 761 (1981), St. v. Roberts, 1999 MT 59, 293 M 476, 977 P2d 974 (1999), and St. v. Clayton, 2002 MT 67, 309 M 215, 45 P3d 30 (2002).

Prosecutor's Comment Alleging Uncontradicted Evidence Erroneous When Defendant Who Asserted Right to Remain Silent Was Only Person Who Could Offer Contradictory Evidence — Error Harmless: Harrington was arrested for DUI, was read his Miranda rights, and chose to remain silent. Harrington contended that his due process rights and privilege against self-incrimination were violated by testimony elicited and statements made by the prosecution during trial. Although Harrington failed to preserve the issues in the District Court, the Supreme Court applied the plain error doctrine pursuant to its discretionary power enunciated in St. v. Finley, 276 M 126, 915 P2d 208 (1996), considering the totality of the circumstances and evaluating the nature of the constitutional rights implicated, rather than the sufficiency of the evidence. The court decided that because no comment was made that Harrington at any time refused to give a statement or refused to testify and because the prosecutor did not insinuate that an innocent person would have given a statement or testified, no Doyle error occurred (see Doyle v. Ohio, 426 US 610 (1976)). However, the prosecutor did comment during rebuttal that there was no evidence to contradict the state's case, which was error as an improper reference to Harrington's decision not to testify because Harrington was the only person who could have offered contradictory testimony (see St. v. Hart, 154 M 310, 462 P2d 885 (1969)). To determine whether the error was prejudicial, the court applied the test in St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001). The error was considered a trial error rather than a structural error, and because the error concerned comment rather than evidence, the court went on to determine whether it was harmless and contributed to the conviction. In this case, the single comment that the evidence was uncontradicted was an isolated one, and there was no reasonable possibility that it contributed to Harrington's conviction given the fact that during closing, the prosecutor focused on the driving errors Harrington made before being stopped, the videotape of Harrington's field sobriety tests, the arresting officer's expertise, and the results of the preliminary breath test. Harrington's constitutional rights were not prejudiced by the improper reference to his decision not to testify. Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P3d 937 (2001).

Driver Stopped at Flashing Red Light Over Twenty-Five Seconds Sufficient to Warrant Investigative Stop: About 1 a.m. on a Sunday morning, an officer observed a vehicle stopped at a flashing red light. The officer performed a U-turn and pulled in behind the vehicle. Although there was no other traffic, the vehicle remained stopped for at least 10 more seconds, then the officer honked his horn in an effort to get the vehicle to proceed. The vehicle remained stopped for an additional 10 to 15 seconds and then proceeded through the intersection. By that point, the officer was concerned that the driver was impaired by alcohol, so an investigative stop was made. Cook was tested and arrested for DUI and convicted. Cook moved for suppression of the evidence on grounds that the only information that the officer had upon which to base the stop was that Cook stopped at the light for what the officer believed to be an unusual length of time and that, pursuant to St. v. Reynolds, 272 M 46, 899 P2d 540 (1995), the information was not sufficient to create a particularized suspicion that a criminal offense was being committed to justify an investigative stop. On the other hand, the officer testified that an officer is more likely to encounter an impaired driver during weekend time, such as when Cook was observed, and that a driver's observably slow response to traffic signals is one of a number of visual indicators that a driver may be impaired. The Supreme Court applied the test for particularized suspicion in St. v. Anderson, 275 M 344, 912 P2d 801 (1996), and affirmed. The court distinguished Reynolds, noting that Cook was stopped more than twice as long as Reynolds and that nothing in Reynolds indicated that the officer in that case relied on training and experience to interpret the pause at the intersection as indicative of impaired driving. Based on the totality of the circumstances, the officer had sufficient objective data from which to make inferences regarding Cook's possible impairment that created a particularized suspicion that Cook was committing an offense and to conduct the investigative stop. Missoula v. Cook, 2001 MT 237, 307 M 39, 36 P3d 414 (2001).

Failure to Show Prejudice in Delayed DUI Trial Based on Pretrial Anxiety: Stuart was arrested for DUI, and after a delay of more than 200 days, moved for dismissal on grounds of denial of a speedy trial. The motion was denied, and Stuart ultimately was convicted, but timely asserted the right to a speedy trial on appeal. The Supreme Court applied the analysis set out in Billings v. Bruce, 1998 MT 186, 290 M 148, 965 P2d 866 (1998), to determine if prejudice occurred. No single factor is determinative, and each must be weighed in light of the facts of the case. The only disputed factor was the possible anxiety caused by the pretrial delay that might have placed Stuart's employment as a commercial driver in limbo; however, Stuart conceded that he had received full-time employment as a commercial truck driver about 6 months after the DUI charge. Affidavits from Stuart and his wife addressed the anxiety factor, but did not transcend the generic anxiety inherent in being accused of a crime. Stuart failed to establish prejudice once the state met its burden of showing a lack of prejudice, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial. St. v. Stuart, 2001 MT 178, 306 M 189, 31 P3d 353 (2001).

Payment of Child Support Improper Condition of Sentence for Felony DUI — Victim and Correlation to Underlying Offense Necessary for Imposition of Restitution: Horton was arrested for DUI, and a search of his driving record revealed nine prior DUI convictions. A further search showed that Horton also owed more than $47,000 in back child support. Horton was charged with felony DUI, with driving with a suspended or revoked license, as a habitual traffic offender operating a motor vehicle, and with felony nonsupport. By plea agreement, Horton agreed to plead guilty to the traffic offenses in exchange for dismissal of the nonsupport charge. The plea agreement stated that the state would recommend a 13-month sentence to be served in prerelease, followed by 4 years of probation, and, as a condition of the probationary sentence, provided that Horton would also make regular child support payments plus an additional sum monthly toward the support arrearage. As set out in the agreement, Horton pleaded guilty to the traffic offenses, and the nonsupport charge was dismissed. At sentencing, the habitual traffic offender charge was subsequently dismissed for failure of the state to prove that a valid habitual offender designation was in place at the time of the offense, and in addition, Horton's counsel objected to the court ordering payment of any child support arrearage, arguing that because the nonsupport charge had been dismissed, Horton would be paying restitution on a count for which he had not been convicted. Nevertheless, the court ordered Horton to pay support and promised to revoke his probation and sentence him to 4 years in prison with no parole if support was not paid. On appeal, Horton argued that the District Court abused its discretion and exceeded statutory mandates when it required him to pay restitution for an offense that was dismissed, citing St. v. Brown, 263 M 223, 867 P2d 1098 (1994), for the position that restitution is statutorily limited to the victim of the crime and that because there was no victim who sustained pecuniary or economic loss as a result of the felony DUI or driving with a suspended or revoked license, restitution was inappropriate. The state argued that Horton was attempting to receive the benefit of the plea agreement—having the felony nonsupport charge dismissed—without holding up his end of the bargain by paying child support. The Supreme Court noted that a plea agreement is subject to contract law and that the court will not assist a defendant in escaping the obligations of a plea agreement once its benefits are received. However, the court also pointed out that a District Court's authority to impose sentences in criminal cases is defined and constrained by statute. The statutory authority for payment of restitution is in 46-18-201, which limits payment of restitution to the victim of a crime for which a defendant is convicted, and because Horton was not convicted of nonsupport, there was no victim to whom Horton could be ordered to pay restitution. The state also contended that ordering Horton to pay child support was proper because under 46-18-202(1), a sentencing court may impose any condition reasonably related to the objectives of rehabilitation and the protection of the victim and society. The Supreme Court noted that under St. v. Ommundson, 1999 MT 16, 293 M 133, 974 P2d 620 (1999), a sentencing condition must have some correlation or connection to the underlying offense, but there was no correlation or connection between Horton's conviction for DUI and ordering him to pay child support. Thus, the Supreme Court ordered that the portion of Horton's sentence requiring payment of child support be stricken. St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), followed in St. v. Setters, 2001 MT 101, 305 M 253, 25 P3d 893 (2001).

Sentencing Condition Required to Have Correlation or Connection to Underlying Offense: Ommundson pleaded guilty to felony DUI. In imposing sentence, the District Court considered a presentence investigation that documented Ommundson's criminal history, which included more than 10 convictions for indecent exposure. The court also considered a sex offender evaluation, which determined that Ommundson qualified for community-based treatment. The court committed Ommundson to the Department of Corrections for 54 months, with all but 6 months suspended on condition that Ommundson participate in a sex offender treatment program and not have any contact with children without adult supervision. Ommundson did not object to the condition prohibiting contact with children, so that issue was not cognizable on appeal. However, on the issue of whether the District Court had authority to impose a condition of participation in a sex offender program as a penalty for DUI, the Supreme Court held that 46-18-202 allows only the imposition of sentencing limitations reasonably related to the objectives of rehabilitation and the protection of the victim and society. That authority is broad, but not without limit. In order to be reasonably related, a sentencing limitation or condition must have some correlation or connection to the underlying offense for which the defendant is being sentenced. In the present case, the requirement that Ommundson participate in a sex offender program was not reasonably related to the rehabilitation of a DUI offender or to the protection of society from drunk drivers. The Supreme Court reversed the part of Ommundson's sentence requiring that he participate in a sex offender program. St. v. Ommundson, 1999 MT 16, 293 M 133, 974 P2d 620, 56 St. Rep. 70 (1999), following St. v. Sullivan, 197 M 395, 642 P2d 1008, 39 St. Rep. 412 (1982), and St. v. Black, 245 M 39, 798 P2d 530, 47 St. Rep. 1677 (1990), distinguishing Dahlman v. District Court, 215 M 470, 698 P2d 423, 42 St. Rep. 550 (1985), St. v. Shaver, 233 M 438, 760 P2d 1230, 45 St. Rep. 1617 (1988), and St. v. Blanchard, 270 M 11, 889 P2d 1180, 52 St. Rep. 54 (1995), and followed in St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), St. v. Setters, 2001 MT 101, 305 M 253, 25 P3d 893 (2001), St. v. Watson, 2001 MT 143, 306 M 33, 29 P3d 1026 (2001), and St. v. Armstrong, 2006 MT 334, 335 M 131, 151 P3d 46 (2006).

In St. v. Ashby, 2008 MT 83, 342 M 187, 179 P3d 1164 (2008), the Ommundson nexus rule was expanded to allow a sentencing judge to impose a particular condition of probation as long as the condition has a nexus either to the offense for which the offender is being sentenced or to the offender. However, offender-related conditions may be imposed only in cases in which the history or pattern of conduct to be restricted is recent and significant or chronic. A passing, isolated, or stale instance of behavior or conduct is insufficient to support a restrictive probation condition imposed in the name of offender rehabilitation. Ashby was followed in St. v. Park, 2008 MT 429, 347 M 462, 198 P3d 321 (2008), St. v. Sadowsky, 2008 MT 405, 347 M 192, 197 P3d 1018 (2008), and St. v. Stiles, 2008 MT 390, 347 M 95, 197 P3d 966 (2008). Stiles was followed in St. v. Russette, 2008 MT 413, 347 M 285, 198 P3d 791 (2008).

Misdemeanor Traffic Offenses in Tribal Court and Felony DUI in State District Court Not Arising From Same Transaction — No Double Jeopardy: Couture was cited for two misdemeanor traffic offenses in tribal court. A few days later he was moved to state District Court and charged with felony DUI, sixth offense. He pleaded guilty to the tribal court misdemeanors and then sought dismissal of the District Court felony on grounds of double jeopardy. He contended that because the offenses all arose from the same transaction and he had been convicted in tribal court, prosecution in District Court was barred under 46-11-504. The District Court properly held that the misdemeanors—driving without a license and without proof of insurance—were unrelated to the criminal objective of DUI. Because by definition the offenses did not arise out of the same transaction, the District Court felony prosecution did not constitute double jeopardy.

St. v. Couture, 1998 MT 137, 289 M 215, 959 P2d 948, 55 St. Rep. 548 (1998), following St. v. Sword, 229 M 370, 747 P2d 206 (1987).

DUI Reasonable Grounds Test Equivalent to Search and Seizure Law Investigative Stop Particularized Suspicion Test: The reasonable grounds test for the issue of whether a peace officer had reasonable grounds to believe that a person was driving or in actual physical control of a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol or drugs is the equivalent of particularized suspicion, as defined in 46-5-401, which provides that in order to verify an account of a person's presence or conduct or to determine whether to arrest the person, a peace officer may stop any person or vehicle that is observed in circumstances that create a particularized suspicion that the person or an occupant of a vehicle has committed, is committing, or is about to commit an offense. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999), and Kleinsasser v. St., 2002 MT 36, 308 M 325, 42 P3d 801 (2002).

Field Sobriety Tests Constitute Search — Particularized Suspicion Needed: Field sobriety tests are not merely observations of a person's physical behavior but constitute a search under the fourth amendment to the United States Constitution and Art. II, sec. 11, Mont. Const., because an individual's constitutionally protected privacy interests are implicated in both the process of conducting the tests and in the information disclosed by the tests. An officer observes certain aspects of an individual's physical and psychological condition that would not otherwise be observable. A compelling state interest is needed to invade privacy interest. Montana has a compelling state interest in removing drunk drivers from the road. The officer's observation of such traits as the manner of walking to and from the squad car, height and weight, speech, appearance, and smell is distinguished and does not constitute a search because an individual has no reasonable expectation of privacy as to the traits. An investigatory stop and field sobriety tests are constitutional if based upon particularized suspicion. The particularized suspicion for the investigatory stop may also serve as the particularized suspicion for the field sobriety tests if the basis for the stop leads the officer to believe that the driver is intoxicated. Part or all of the grounds for the particularized suspicion for the field sobriety tests may arise after the investigatory stop when the officer, in the present case, observed defendant drive from a bar at night with her headlights off, he activated his overhead lights, she did not respond, he activated his siren, she stopped in half a block, he smelled alcohol on her breath and saw bloodshot eyes, she had difficulty in producing her license, and he asked her to perform three field sobriety tests. Administration of the tests was a constitutionally permissible search arising from a particularized suspicion that was based on the officer's observations after the investigatory stop. The lower court properly found that the officer had reasonable grounds to believe that defendant was driving under the influence. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in St. v. Steinmetz, 1998 MT 114, 288 M 527, 961 P2d 95, 55 St. Rep. 450 (1998), and Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999).

DUI Conviction Incurred Prior to 1981 Expungement Provision Eligible for Expungement: Reams was charged with fourth offense felony DUI based on convictions in July 1975, March and May 1990, and May 1996. Reams argued that his 1975 conviction should have been expunged from his record under the expungement provisions of the 1981 law when it was adopted because it had been more than 5 years between the 1975 conviction and any subsequent conviction and that therefore he could not be charged with fourth offense felony DUI. The state countered that the expungement provision did not apply retroactively because there was no evidence that the Legislature intended it to so apply. The Supreme Court held that a defendant is entitled to the benefit of the law in effect when the offense is committed, except to the extent that a later amendment mitigates a sentence or punishment, in which case the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the later law unless there is clear legislative intent through a saving clause that the former law is intended to control. The Supreme Court ruled that Reams's 1975 conviction was expunged with the adoption of the 1981 law and that therefore he could not be tried for fourth offense felony DUI. St. v. Reams, 284 M 448, 945 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 972 (1997), followed in St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997).

Previous DUI Conviction Not to Be Considered for Purposes of Felony DUI — Former Requirement for Expungement of Record Held Self-Executing — Lorash Distinguished — Expungement Applicable to Local Records: Bowles was convicted of DUI in 1977 and did not receive another DUI for 5 years but was convicted of two other DUI offenses after 1982. When Bowles was arrested for DUI in Park County in 1996, Park County charged Bowles with felony DUI, fourth offense, counting the 1977 conviction as one of three prior convictions. Bowles moved for dismissal of the felony charge, contending that the 1977 record should have been expunged pursuant to the 1981 version of 61-8-714(5), and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly dismissed the felony charge because the expungement provision in effect at the time, unlike the expungement provision in 46-18-204 that was litigated in St. v. Lorash, 238 M 345, 777 P2d 884 (1989), was self-executing and did not require the defendant to move the court to have the record of conviction expunged. The requirement for expungement applied to the 1977 conviction, despite the change in the law in 1989 requiring that the record be held as confidential criminal justice information, because the requirement for expungement was self-executing. The Supreme Court also noted that the expungement requirement applied to records of conviction notwithstanding the requirement in 61-11-102 that the Department of Justice maintain records of convictions of licensees. Further, the Supreme Court also held, relying upon St. v. Brander, 280 M 148, 930 P2d 31 (1996), that because "expungement" means to destroy and was without limitation, all traces of the conviction record should have been destroyed, that the record of the 1977 conviction was maintained by the Park County Sheriff in violation of the law, and that the 1977 county conviction record should not have been used as the basis for the felony charge. In response to the state's argument that the expungement requirement, enacted in 1981, applied prospectively only to convictions occurring after the requirement's effective date, the Supreme Court noted that it had rejected that argument in St. v. Reams, 284 M 448, 945 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 972 (1997). St. v. Bowles, 284 M 490, 947 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 962 (1997).

One of Three Previous DUI Convictions Subject to Expungement: Cooney argued that his DUI convictions in October 1984, September 1986, and July 1989 should have been expunged from his record under the language of the statute that existed prior to October 1989 and that therefore his conviction for DUI in December 1995 could not make him liable for fourth offense felony DUI. The Supreme Court held that any DUI conviction prior to the October 1989 repeal of the statute was automatically eligible for expungement if the elements of the expungement provision were satisfied. The Supreme Court ruled that the July 1989 conviction should have been expunged, removing any liability for Cooney for fourth offense felony DUI, but not the October 1984 and September 1986 convictions because at no time had more than 5 years expired between those convictions and a subsequent conviction. St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891, 54 St. Rep. 967 (1997). See also St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997), regarding expungement of a previous DUI conviction.

Reasonable Time for Preliminary Examination or Leave to File Information — Time for Commencement of "Reasonable Time" — Higley Clarified: McElderry was arrested on October 14 for DUI, fifth offense; reckless driving; and driving while her license was revoked. On October 16, she made her initial appearance in Lake County Justice's Court and was charged by complaint with the offenses for which she was arrested. On October 25, the state filed a motion in District Court for leave to file an information. The motion was granted on October 28, and an information was filed the same day. On October 29, McElderry filed a motion in District Court to dismiss the charges, arguing that 46-10-105, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in St. v. Higley, 190 M 412, 621 P2d 1043 (1980), required that a determination of probable cause be made within 10 days after a defendant's initial appearance. The District Court dismissed the information, reasoning that the state failed to hold a preliminary examination in Justice's Court or to obtain leave from the District Court to file the information within the reasonable time required by 46-10-105. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in calculating the reasonable time as beginning with the time of McElderry's arrest because the plain language of 46-10-105 requires that the period be calculated from the date of initial appearance of the defendant. The Supreme Court therefore recalculated the total delay at 12 days, rather than 14 days. The Supreme Court further explained that its use of the 10-day time period in Higley was intended to mean that the 10-day period at issue in that case was not unreasonable but was not intended to limit the period of reasonable time to 10 days in all cases. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in interpreting Higley to apply a 10-day limitation in every case. Because the District Court erred in determining the start of the reasonable time and in applying Higley, the Supreme Court held that a new time must be calculated. However, the Supreme Court was unable to tell how the District Court would properly apply its discretion in redetermining a reasonable time and therefore vacated the judgment of the District Court and remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's opinion. St. v. McElderry, 284 M 365, 944 P2d 230, 54 St. Rep. 922 (1997), followed in St. v. Robison, 2003 MT 198, 317 M 19, 75 P3d 301 (2003).

Driver Asleep at Wheel of Pickup Not Running — Sufficiency of Evidence: Testimony of a peace officer that when he shook awake a driver slumped over the wheel of a parked pickup that was not running, the driver started the engine and of the driver's wife that when she left the truck after an argument, she threw him keys belonging to her son and that they contained a worn key that could fit defendant's pickup (she had parked the pickup and took the keys with her when she started to leave) was sufficient for the jury to find that defendant was in actual physical control of the pickup and to convict him of DUI. St. v. Hagen, 283 M 156, 939 P2d 994, 54 St. Rep. 542 (1997).

Punishment for Refusal to Take Breathalyzer Test and for Driving Under the Influence Not Double Jeopardy: Danichek argued that he could not be convicted of driving under the influence because he had already been punished when his driver's license was suspended because he refused to take the Breathalyzer test and that to punish him for driving under the influence would constitute multiple punishments for the same offense. The Supreme Court held that Danichek's license was suspended for refusing the test and that it was the refusal that was a violation. That conviction had nothing to do with whether or not the person actually was driving under the influence, and therefore, he was being punished for two separate infractions and was not being placed in double jeopardy. Helena v. Danichek, 277 M 461, 922 P2d 1170, 53 St. Rep. 767 (1996).

Criminal Endangerment Properly Charged in Arrest for Driving Under Influence — Constitutionality: Smaage had a history of seven DUI arrests when he was arrested again while driving with a blood alcohol level of 0.250. After review of his record of drinking and driving, Smaage was charged with criminal endangerment under 45-5-207, which Smaage contended was improper, rather than DUI under 61-8-722 or this section. Smaage also asserted that the criminal endangerment statute was unconstitutionally vague as applied to him because he was not given fair notice that driving after drinking was a felony crime. The Supreme Court found that the statutes were not conflicting, but rather were alternative charging statutes. The legislative history of the criminal endangerment statute indicated legislative intent in allowing use of that statute in prosecutions for DUI. Because the elements of criminal endangerment were present in this case due to Smaage's mental state of acting "knowingly", the conviction was affirmed. Further, with a history of DUI and negligent vehicular homicide, Smaage should have understood that his drunk driving created a substantial risk of bodily injury to others and was therefore proscribed. In light of Smaage's conduct, 45-5-207 is not unconstitutionally vague as applied to this case. St. v. Smaage, 276 M 94, 915 P2d 192, 53 St. Rep. 294 (1996), following U.S. v. Mazurie, 419 US 544, 42 L Ed 2d 706, 95 S Ct 710 (1975).

Arrest in Convenience Store Parking Lot Within Town Limits Within City Officer's Jurisdiction: When Henry did not cite any evidence of record supporting the argument that a city officer was without jurisdiction when the arrest was made, the District Court did not err in denying Henry's motion to dismiss charges or, in the alternative, to suppress evidence. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

Error to Impose Prosecution Legal Fees as Condition of Suspended Sentence: Henry was convicted of driving under the influence, first in City Court and then in District Court. As part of Henry's suspended sentence, the District Court imposed certain conditions, including payment of $10,550 to the town of Darby for legal fees incurred in prosecuting the case and for additional legal fees incurred in defending the appeal. The Supreme Court held that the imposition of prosecution legal fees is neither expressly nor implicitly authorized by statute and that the District Court abused its discretion in imposing the payment of prosecution legal fees as a condition of Henry's suspended sentence. St. v. Henry, 271 M 491, 898 P2d 1195, 52 St. Rep. 516 (1995).

Knowledge of Statutory Inference of Intoxication Irrelevant: Dixon was charged with rape of H.D., which occurred while H.D. was intoxicated. On cross-examination, Dixon's counsel asked H.D. whether she knew that the legal limit of intoxication in Montana is 0.10 (see 2003 amendment), to which question the prosecution objected on grounds of relevancy. The District Court sustained the objection, holding that the evidence of intoxication was relevant, but H.D.'s knowledge of the legal limit was irrelevant. The Supreme Court held that H.D.'s knowledge of her condition was relevant as impeachment evidence, but since there was no evidence that H.D. was in control of a motor vehicle, her knowledge of the 0.10 legal limit was irrelevant. St. v. Dixon, 264 M 38, 869 P2d 779, 51 St. Rep. 135 (1994).

City Attorney's Authority to Try City Prosecution of Statutory DUI Violation Upheld: McCarvel was charged in Billings City Court with a violation of the state DUI statute. He was convicted by a jury and appealed to District Court in which, after the District Court refused to dismiss, he pleaded guilty. The Supreme Court held that the city attorney could lawfully prosecute a violation of a state statute in City Court because the City Court had concurrent jurisdiction with the Justice's Court and because it was the city attorney's duty to prosecute on behalf of the city offenses heard in that court. Billings v. McCarvel, 262 M 96, 863 P2d 441, 50 St. Rep. 1460 (1993).

Dismissal for Failure to Charge Offense of Which Convicted — Reckless Driving Not Lesser Included Offense of DUI: Barker was charged with DUI but was convicted of reckless driving by the Ravalli County Justice of the Peace. Barker appealed to the District Court and filed a motion to dismiss, which the District Court granted. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the reckless driving charge and the DUI charge were inapposite charges and that reckless driving was not a lesser included offense of DUI. The Supreme Court also held that the conviction should be set aside because Barker did not have notice that he was charged with reckless driving, which violated Barker's constitutional right to due process. St. v. Barker, 260 M 85, 858 P2d 360, 50 St. Rep. 970 (1993).

Implied Consent Suspension Not Relieved by Guilty Plea: Respondent's license was suspended when he refused to take a breath test. Two weeks after arrest, respondent pleaded guilty to the offense of DUI. The District Court found that the plea of guilty constituted a withdrawal of his refusal to take breath test under the implied consent statute and recommended respondent receive a probationary license. Supreme Court reversed and reinstated suspension of respondent's license. The revocation of a driver's license is a civil sanction, not a criminal penalty, and there is no connection between the DUI statute and the implied consent statute. A violation of both statutes means the suspensions run concurrently. Respondent was not eligible for a probationary license until the 90-day implied consent suspension was completed. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985), followed in In re Blake, 220 M 27, 712 P2d 1338, 43 St. Rep. 143 (1986), and Walker v. St., 229 M 331, 746 P2d 624, 44 St. Rep. 2008 (1987).

Alcohol Abuse Program — Confidential Information — Use in Drunk Driving Prosecution or Arrest: Concerned that Magnuson was intoxicated, Kee attempted to keep him from driving away from the Kee ranch and, when the attempt failed, called the local Alcoholics Anonymous and talked of her fears to House, not knowing that Magnuson was in counseling with House under a federally funded program. Federal law provides that patients' records are confidential and that information received while performing any alcohol abuse prevention function cannot be used to initiate or substantiate any criminal prosecution. House called an undersheriff and told him Magnuson was intoxicated, was driving a Ford Bronco, that Tracy's Bar was his usual hangout, and that the undersheriff should watch out for Magnuson. While driving around, the undersheriff saw Magnuson driving erratically. When stopped, Magnuson smelled of alcohol, appeared drunk, and failed onsite sobriety tests. The information House gave the undersheriff was not tainted with the federal prohibition, and dismissal of a DUI charge on the grounds of taint would be reversed. House was not performing an alcohol abuse prevention function when he received the information from Kee, and thus the information he gave the undersheriff was not federally prohibited confidential records information. In addition, the information the undersheriff received from House was not used to initiate or substantiate any charge; the undersheriff's own observations were. St. v. Magnuson, 210 M 401, 682 P2d 1365, 41 St. Rep. 1121 (1984).

Availability of Writ of Prohibition — Drunk Driving: Plaintiff was cited for driving while intoxicated. The Justice's Court did not hear the case although a trial has been scheduled. The defendant then sought a Writ of Prohibition against the Justice's Court to stop further proceedings in the prosecution of the D.W.I. charge. On appeal, the sole issue was whether the District Court judgment for the defendant Justice's Court, denying relief to the plaintiff and granting the motion to quash the Writ of Prohibition, was justified under the state of the record. The Supreme Court held that a Writ of Prohibition was not the appropriate remedy in the case. A Writ of Prohibition is available only when there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. It is not issued as a matter of right but only in the exercise of sound judicial discretion when there is no other remedy. In this case, the plaintiff did not show why he could not assert his jurisdictional defense in the Justice's Court directly or by Writ of Certiorari in the District Court. State ex rel. Morse v. Justice Court, 192 M 95, 626 P2d 836, 38 St. Rep. 542 (1981). See also State ex rel. Aho v. Justice Court, 131 M 585, 313 P2d 542 (1959).

Severance of Habitual Traffic Offender Charge Properly Denied: The District Court did not err in refusing to sever a habitual traffic offender charge from a D.W.I. charge and a negligent homicide charge. None of the three basic kinds of prejudice outlined in St. v. Orsborn, 170 M 480, 555 P2d 509 (1976), was found to outweigh the judicial economy resulting from a joint trial. This balancing process is left to the sound discretion of the trial judge, which was not abused. St. v. Campbell, 189 M 107, 615 P2d 190, 37 St. Rep. 1337 (1980), followed in St. v. Enright, 2000 MT 372, 303 M 457, 16 P3d 366, 57 St. Rep. 1590 (2000).

CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION

Idaho DUI Statute Similar to Montana DUI Statute — Enhancement of Charge Affirmed: The defendant was charged with felony DUI. He had three prior DUI convictions, two of which were from Idaho. The defendant argued that the Idaho convictions could not be applied to enhance the DUI charge because the Idaho DUI statute required a lesser degree of impairment and therefore was not sufficiently similar to the Montana statute. The District Court disagreed and the defendant appealed. In comparing the language of the two statutes, the Supreme Court found them not only similar, but nearly identical, and affirmed the District Court. St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

DUI Absolute Liability Offense — Proof of Mental State and Consideration of Involuntary Intoxication Not Required: During Weller's DUI trial, Weller proffered a jury instruction concerning a defense of involuntary intoxication, but the instruction was refused. Weller appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The statute on involuntary intoxication, 45-2-203, provides that even though involuntary intoxication is not a defense to any offense, it may be taken into consideration in determining the existence of a mental state in cases where a mental state is an element of an offense. However, DUI is an absolute liability offense that does not require proof of a mental state, so consideration of involuntary intoxication was not necessary. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing an involuntary intoxication instruction. St. v. Weller, 2009 MT 168, 350 M 485, 208 P3d 834 (2009).

Driving While Ability Impaired in Colorado Not Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — Felony DUI Sentence Reversed — Montanye Reversed: The District Court found that Colorado law was substantially similar to Montana's DUI statute, and based on McNally's four prior DWAI convictions in Colorado, the court sentenced McNally for felony DUI. McNally appealed on grounds that the Colorado convictions did not constitute previous convictions under a similar statute for purposes of determining the number of prior DUI convictions under Montana law. The Supreme Court examined Colorado law and agreed with McNally. Colorado law allows a person to be convicted for DUI if the person's ability is impaired to the slightest degree, which is a lower standard than Montana law. Therefore, McNally's prior Colorado convictions did not qualify as convictions for purposes of enhancing McNally's conviction to a felony, and McNally's felony conviction was reversed. St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002), following Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224 (1986), and overruling Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234 (1993). However, see St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110, ruling that Montana and Idaho DUI statutes were sufficiently similar to uphold felony sentence.

Expungement of Two of Three Prior DUI and BAC Convictions — Lack of District Court Jurisdiction — Felony Charge Dismissed: Sidmore was arrested for DUI in March 1996. His driving record revealed that he had a 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, a 1994 Montana DUI conviction, and a 1990 Montana BAC conviction. Pursuant to 61-8-714, Sidmore was charged with felony DUI, fourth offense. Sidmore agreed that under 61-8-714, both BAC and DUI convictions can be counted to determine the total number of convictions that a defendant has received. However, under the 1989 version of 61-8-722, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent BAC conviction within the 5-year period following the 1990 BAC conviction nor did the 1994 DUI conviction prevent expungement of the 1990 BAC conviction, so the 1990 BAC conviction was expunged from the record. Further, under the 1987 version of 61-8-714, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent DUI conviction within the 5-year period following the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction nor did the 1990 BAC conviction prevent expungement of the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, so the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction was also expunged from the record, making the 1994 DUI conviction the only prior conviction that could be counted to support the felony DUI charge. Thus, under 3-10-303, the Justice's Court retained jurisdiction of the misdemeanor 1996 offense and the District Court erred in denying Sidmore's motion to dismiss the felony DUI charge for lack of jurisdiction. St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558, 54 St. Rep. 1381 (1997).

Privately Owned and Maintained Road as Way of This State Open to Public: As defined in 61-8-101, "ways of this state open to the public" does not include only those ways or places for travel that are legally dedicated to the public use. The term includes a privately owned and maintained unposted roadway adapted for public travel and commonly used by members of the public who are lost, curious, or use the road to access residences served by the road. St. v. Weis, 285 M 41, 945 P2d 900, 54 St. Rep. 1034 (1997), followed in St. v. Schwein, 2000 MT 371, 303 M 450, 16 P3d 373, 57 St. Rep. 1587 (2000).

Failure of Felony DUI Punishment Provision to Include Mental State or Impose Absolute Liability: Failure of the statutory provision stating the punishment for a fourth or subsequent DUI offense to either include a mental state as an element of the offense or to clearly indicate a legislative purpose to impose absolute liability for the conduct was not a flaw because that statute was merely the statute under which defendant was sentenced. A separate statute defining the offense clearly stated that absolute liability is imposed. The court rejected the argument that the absolute liability provision of the statute defining the offense applied only to the offenses that existed at the time that the absolute liability provision was inserted in the law and did not apply to the felony offense that defendant was charged with and that was inserted in the law at a later date. St. v. Ellenburg, 283 M 136, 938 P2d 1376, 54 St. Rep. 532 (1997).

Willing but Unable Participant in Alcohol Test — Meaning of "Test or Tests" as Single Test for Alcohol — Psychological Inability to Perform: Wessell consented to a breath test, but two attempts failed because of the failure of the internal standards check for the test instrument. He was asked to submit to a blood test but immediately refused based on his great fear of needles. He volunteered to take a urine test, but the offer was refused because the police department had no way to preserve the integrity of a test sample. Wessell declined to have an independent test completed because he believed that his driving privileges would be suspended regardless as a result of his failure to submit to a blood test. The officer completed the refusal affidavit and seized Wessell's license. On appeal, Wessell claimed that 61-8-402 does not expressly authorize more than one test for alcohol to which he gave consent. However, the state claimed that the language "test or tests" in subsection (3) allows consecutive tests for alcohol and that Wessell refused to submit to the alternate blood test. The Supreme Court concluded that the plural language added to the statute refers to the sequential testing for alcohol and then drugs, not for consecutive tests for alcohol alone. However, the alcohol test must be a full and complete analysis. Because the breath test was not completed, it was not valid, so the officer was within the statutory constraints when designating a second method of testing to achieve a valid alcohol test. Although certain uncooperative actions by a motorist may comprise a refusal, Wessell was fully cooperative but was unable to submit to the blood test because of a valid, disabling fear of needles. This psychological inability to perform the test was the equivalent of a physical disability precluding Wessell from completing a valid test regardless of his willingness. The District Court erred in concluding that Wessell's inability to participate in the test regardless of his willingness constituted a refusal warranting license suspension, and thus the case was reversed and remanded. Wessell v. St., 277 M 234, 921 P2d 264, 53 St. Rep. 610 (1996).

Driving While Ability Impaired in New York Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — License Suspension Affirmed: Montanye was arrested in New York for driving while impaired, and his driver's license was suspended in Montana under the reciprocal application of the Driver License Compact. Montanye contended that because conviction in New York of driving while impaired requires a lesser degree of intoxication than conviction for driving under the influence in Montana, the offenses are totally dissimilar and suspension of his license was improper. The Supreme Court noted that there were a few differences between the states' statutes, but that both laws deal with a driver's diminished ability to drive while under the influence of alcohol and both provide for suspension of license as punishment and are thus substantially similar. Therefore, the District Court did not err in revoking Montanye's license under Montana law. Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234, 50 St. Rep. 1541 (1993), overruled in St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002). See also St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Driving Snowmobile Under Influence — Construction With Other Law — Snowmobile Law Penalty Alone Applies: In enacting Title 23, ch. 2, part 6, the Legislature duplicated the motor vehicle code concerns for regulation of snowmobiles upon streets, roads, and highways with respect to registration and licensing, accidents, enforcement, unlawful operation, penalties, and disposition of fines and forfeitures and provided a statutory scheme that supplants the motor vehicle code regarding snowmobiles. The Legislature clearly intended to impose a civil penalty for operating a snowmobile while under the influence in violation of 23-2-632, but the civil label of the penalty is not alone dispositive. Review of the statutory scheme and attendant penalties leads the court to conclude that the penalties in 23-2-642(2) and (3) are punitive in nature and constitute criminal penalties. Therefore, defendant could not be charged under this section, the law relating to driving a motor vehicle under the influence, because to hold otherwise would allow conflicting criminal penalties. Defendant could only be charged under 23-2-632. (See 2005 amendment defining vehicle.) St. v. Delap, 237 M 346, 772 P2d 1268, 46 St. Rep. 856 (1989).

Driving Under the Influence as Absolute Liability Offense: Driving under the influence is an absolute liability offense not requiring the proof of a mental state or a jury instruction on the mental state element of the charge. St. v. McDole, 226 M 169, 734 P2d 683, 44 St. Rep. 561 (1987), followed in St. v. West, 252 M 83, 826 P2d 940, 49 St. Rep. 170 (1992).

Driving Under Influence in Privately Owned Parking Garage — Definition Applicable: A privately owned parking facility fit the definition of "ways of this state open to the public"; therefore, defendant was properly charged under 61-8-401 when arrested for DUI in a hotel parking garage. Billings v. Peete, 224 M 158, 729 P2d 1268, 43 St. Rep. 2097 (1986), followed in Santee v. St., 267 M 304, 883 P2d 829, 51 St. Rep. 1034 (1994), and St. v. Schwein, 2000 MT 371, 303 M 450, 16 P3d 373, 57 St. Rep. 1587 (2000).

Incorrect Statutory Reference — Charge Not Invalid: A complaint which used the statutory language of 61-8-401 to describe the offense but which listed a citation to 61-8-406 was not made defective by the incorrect reference since the complaint adequately described and gave notice of the offense. The District Court did not err in granting a motion to amend the complaint to correct the statutory reference. St. v. Handy, 221 M 365, 719 P2d 766, 43 St. Rep. 897 (1986).

Motorist Asleep in Barrow Pit: Defendant was arrested when he was found slumped over the steering wheel of his car in the barrow pit with the engine running and the lights on. He was charged with being in actual physical control of a motor vehicle upon the highways while under the influence of alcohol. Defendant contended he was not in actual physical control of the vehicle and was not on the highway. The Supreme Court held that a motorist remains in a position to regulate a vehicle while asleep behind the steering wheel of the vehicle in the barrow pit and that movement of the vehicle is not required. The court also held that under the definition of highway found in 61-1-201 (now repealed — see 61-1-101 for definitions), the barrow pit is part of the way dedicated to public use. St. v. Taylor, 203 M 284, 661 P2d 33, 40 St. Rep. 451 (1983), followed in St. v. Peterson, 236 M 247, 769 P2d 1221, 46 St. Rep. 333 (1989).

Intoxication — City Traffic Code Not in Conflict With State Statute: Where the defendant was found to have violated a city traffic code proscribing a certain level of intoxication "within this municipality", the District Court did not err in holding that the traffic code was not in conflict with a state statute proscribing the same conduct "upon the highways of this state". While the city has chosen to use language that does not precisely mirror the language of the corresponding state statute, any conflict between the ordinance and this section is resolved when it is read in pari materia with 61-12-101, authorizing the city to regulate persons driving motor vehicles under the influence of alcohol. Billings v. Weatherwax, 193 M 163, 630 P2d 1216, 38 St. Rep. 1034 (1981).

Municipal Ordinance: A city ordinance which penalized drunken driving within the city in the same terms as this section was valid and enforceable even though the Legislature had acted on the subject. Bozeman v. Ramsey, 139 M 148, 362 P2d 206 (1961).

Effect of Amendments: The defendant was not prejudiced by being charged under the original version of this section, even though the 1957 amendments may have been applicable to his case, since the definition of the crime was not changed by the amendments. The 1957 amendments did not evince a legislative intent to repeal the 1955 enactment, rather they were a continuation of the enactment so that a violator could still be prosecuted thereunder. St. v. Cline, 135 M 372, 339 P2d 657 (1959).

Actual Physical Control: By defining the words "actual", "physical", and "control" as they are used in their ordinary meanings, it was held that if a person has existing or present bodily restraint, directing influence, domination, or regulation of an automobile while under the influence of intoxicant he violates the statute. St. v. Ruona, 133 M 243, 321 P2d 615 (1958), followed in In re Turner v. St., 244 M 151, 795 P2d 982, 47 St. Rep. 1576 (1990). The definition was clarified in St. v. Robison, 281 M 64, 931 P2d 706, 54 St. Rep. 61 (1997).

Movement Unnecessary: Movement of the vehicle is unnecessary to charge an offense under this provision. St. v. Ruona, 133 M 243, 321 P2d 615 (1958).

Driving Under the Influence — Malum in Se: Under section 1746.2, R.C.M. 1935 (now repealed), it was a misdemeanor to drive a motor vehicle while under the influence of an intoxicating liquor. Driving while under the influence of an intoxicating liquor was an act "malum in se" and was embraced within section 1059, R.C.M. 1935 (now repealed), defining the offense of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. St. v. Darchuck, 117 M 15, 156 P2d 173 (1945).

CONSTITUTIONALITY

Affirmative Evidence Showing Violation of Rights Required to Prove Invalidity of Prior DUI Convictions — Felony DUI Conviction Upheld: The defendant, charged with his fourth DUI, claimed that two of his previous DUI convictions were invalid because he had not been advised of his right to counsel. Under St. v. Okland, 283 Mont. 10, 941 P.2d 431 (1997), and St. v. Jenni, 283 Mont. 21, 938 P.2d 1318 (1997), a defendant who challenges a prior conviction as unconstitutionally invalid must present direct evidence of irregularity in the prior proceeding.

Here, the defendant provided documents related to the two prior convictions that did not clearly designate that he had been advised of his right to counsel. However, none of the documents affirmatively demonstrated that he had not been advised of his right to counsel. Because the documents were inconclusive, the District Court determined that the defendant had failed to meet his burden of proof to rebut the presumption that the prior convictions were valid. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a defendant who challenges prior convictions must present evidence affirmatively showing a conviction was invalid and that a silent or ambiguous record is insufficient. St. v. Chaussee, 2011 MT 203, 361 Mont. 433, 259 P.3d 783. See also St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 Mont. 173, 103 P.3d 503, St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 Mont. 221, 136 P.3d 543, and St. v. Maine, 2011 MT 90, 360 Mont. 182, 255 P.3d 64.

DUI Punishment Statutes Not Violative of Equal Protection: Blue contended that the statutory scheme for DUI sentencing, allowing different punishments for the first through third offenses and felony sentencing for a fourth DUI, violated equal protection under the Montana Constitution. The Supreme Court disagreed. The Montana Constitution does not include a right to be sentenced without regard to prior convictions. The assumption that a prior offender is a greater danger to the public is reasonable. Under Montana law, even if the highest degree of equal protection analysis was applied requiring the state to show a compelling interest in the DUI punishment statutes, that interest exists as a matter of law. Therefore, the DUI statutes withstood analysis and do not violate the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. St. v. Blue, 2009 MT 304, 352 M 382, 217 P3d 82 (2009).

Showing of Irregularity in Prior DUI Conviction Based on Failure to Inform Defendant of Right to Counsel — Remand for Further Findings Whether Prior Conviction Applicable to Felony DUI Charge: Peterson was charged with fourth offense felony DUI. Peterson collaterally challenged the felony status of the charge, asserting that two previous misdemeanor convictions were constitutionally insufficient because he was not properly informed of the right to counsel, and moved to dismiss. The motion was denied after the District Court found that Peterson was properly informed in both prior instances. Peterson appealed. It was conceded that Peterson met his burden to show direct evidence of irregularity because he testified that he was not informed of the right to counsel or appointed counsel at either conviction, so the Supreme Court had to determine whether the District Court erroneously found that the state met its burden by a preponderance of the evidence to show that Peterson was properly informed of his rights in each of the prior pleas. The court found that Peterson was properly informed of his rights in one case, but because the District Court did not address the inconsistency in the testimony of the judge involved in the other conviction and resolve whether Peterson was actually represented by counsel, the case was remanded for further proceedings regarding the conviction in question. St. v. Peterson, 2002 MT 65, 309 M 199, 44 P3d 499 (2002). See also St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431 (1997), and St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318 (1997).

Nontestimonial Nature of Reciting Alphabet and Counting in DUI Field Test — Constitutional Self-Incrimination Protection Inapplicable: Devlin was arrested for DUI and taken to the Sheriff's office for additional field sobriety tests, which were videotaped. Prior to being advised of his Miranda rights, an officer asked Devlin to recite the alphabet starting at "K" and to count aloud from 46 to 72. Upon prosecution in Justice's Court, Devlin moved for suppression of all statements made prior to the Miranda warning and of testimonial answers in the field sobriety tests, but the motion was denied. Devlin renewed the motion in District Court, which suppressed the results of the alphabet and counting tests. The state appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the constitutional right against self-incrimination was designed to protect against the cruel trilemma of having to choose among answering truthfully, answering falsely, or remaining silent. However, the court declined to expand the holding in Pa. v. Muniz, 496 US 582, 110 L Ed 2d 528, 110 S Ct 2638 (1990), to cover relatively content-free oral declarations, holding that neither reciting the alphabet nor counting involves an express or implied assertion of fact or belief. Therefore, a defendant who is asked to do so conveys no facts specific to the person being questioned, assuming that the defendant is familiar with the alphabet and counting. Neither reciting the alphabet nor counting is testimonial in nature, so the constitutional protection against self-incrimination does not attach when a driver is asked to perform either as part of a DUI field sobriety test. St. v. Devlin, 1999 MT 90, 294 M 215, 980 P2d 1037, 56 St. Rep. 383 (1999), affirming St. v. Thompson, 237 M 384, 773 P2d 722, 46 St. Rep. 887 (1989).

DUI and Negligent Homicide Arising From Same Accident Not Part of Same Transaction — No Double Jeopardy: Booth pleaded guilty in Justice's Court to a DUI charge and claimed double jeopardy when he was subsequently charged in District Court with two counts of negligent homicide arising out of the accident that led to the DUI charge and conviction. Neither 46-11-503 nor 46-11-504 barred the District Court charges. Under each section, double jeopardy requires that the offenses arise out of the same transaction. Because Booth's conduct in allegedly causing the two deaths was not motivated by a purpose to accomplish the criminal objective of DUI, the DUI and negligent homicide offenses did not arise out of the same transaction within the meaning of the statutory definition of "same transaction" as conduct consisting of a series of acts that are motivated by a purpose to accomplish a criminal objective and that are necessary or incidental to the accomplishment of that objective. State ex rel. Booth v. District Court, 1998 MT 344, 292 M 371, 972 P2d 325, 55 St. Rep. 1395 (1998), followed in St. v. Condo, 2008 MT 114, 342 M 468, 182 P3d 57 (2008).

Mandatory Presumption of Intoxication — Jury Instruction — Unconstitutional Shifting of Burden: Following an accident in which defendant struck and killed a pedestrian, defendant was charged with negligent homicide after a breath test registered his blood alcohol content at 0.12. Defendant appealed his conviction, alleging that the jury instruction that a blood alcohol level greater than 0.10 raised a mandatory rebuttable presumption that he was under the influence of alcohol. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, stating that the instruction requiring the jury to find intoxication "unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its nonexistence" may have led the jury to believe that defendant not only had to introduce contrary evidence but had an affirmative duty to convince the jury that he was not intoxicated. A mandatory rebuttable presumption that shifts the burden of persuasion to the defendant violates due process. The instruction was not harmless, and the court remanded for new trial. St. v. Leverett, 245 M 124, 799 P2d 119, 47 St. Rep. 1753 (1990).

Permissive Inference That Person Was Under Influence: This statute creates a permissive inference that the person charged was under the influence of alcohol. The Justice Court erred in holding that the statute is unconstitutional because the language "it shall be presumed that the person was under the influence of alcohol" relieves the state from being required to prove every element of a criminal case beyond a reasonable doubt. St. v. Tollefson, 239 M 305, 780 P2d 621, 46 St. Rep. 1703 (1989).

Nature and Constitutionality of Audio-Video Tape Used as Evidence:

Driver was arrested for DUI, and an audio-video tape was made at the Sheriff's office of his actions and speech during field sobriety tests, the reading of his Miranda rights, and his waiver of those rights. The tape was objective evidence, not constitutionally prohibited testimonial compulsion. The court distinguished between the compelling of communications or testimony and real, physical, or objective evidence. The tape was introduced into evidence not for the incriminating content of the words of the defendant, but rather as evidence that helped the jury understand the testimony of the police who observed the defendant's unsteady walk and slurred speech. St. v. Thompson, 237 M 384, 773 P2d 722, 46 St. Rep. 887 (1989), followed in St. v. Devlin, 1999 MT 90, 294 M 215, 980 P2d 1037, 56 St. Rep. 383 (1999), and St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001).

An audio-video tape of a DUI defendant at the Sheriff's office was objective evidence and not protected by the fifth amendment; therefore, whether he was, or should have been, given a Miranda warning prior to the taping is not an issue. St. v. Thompson, 237 M 384, 773 P2d 722, 46 St. Rep. 887 (1989), affirmed in St. v. Devlin, 1999 MT 90, 294 M 215, 980 P2d 1037, 56 St. Rep. 383 (1999).

Jail Sentence for DUI Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment: The defendant, who has an extensive record of driving under the influence of alcohol, was convicted on three counts of driving under the influence (DUI) and sentenced to serve 10 months in the county jail. The defendant contends her sentence is cruel and unusual punishment and a denial of equal protection because it may be greater than would be served in the state prison for a more serious offense since county jail inmates are not entitled to statutory good time allowance or parole eligibility as are prison inmates. However, the sentence falls within the maximum authorized by statute and is not so disproportionate to the crime that it shocks the conscience and outrages the moral sense of the community or of justice. Therefore, the sentence imposed is not cruel and unusual punishment that would render it unconstitutional. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

Field Sobriety Test Not a Search: Purdie was stopped as part of routine traffic control as he passed a vehicular accident. The police officer who stopped him smelled alcohol. When Purdie left the accident scene driving erratically, the police officer stopped him again and asked him to get out of the car and perform some field sobriety tests. He showed a lack of coordination during the tests. Purdie argued that the test results were the fruits of an illegal warrantless search. The Supreme Court disagreed. Field sobriety tests are not searches protected by the constitution. St. v. Purdie, 209 M 352, 680 P2d 576, 41 St. Rep. 754 (1984).

Double Jeopardy:

The defendant's involvement in a vehicular accident resulted in his conviction in Justice's Court of driving under the influence of alcohol and his conviction in District Court of aggravated assault. The defendant's constitutional right against being placed in double jeopardy was not violated as each offense requires proof of a fact the other does not. Driving under the influence requires proof of intoxication, while assault does not. Assault requires proof of bodily injury, while driving under the influence does not. St. v. Pierce, 199 M 57, 647 P2d 847, 39 St. Rep. 1205 (1982).

Conviction under this section did not bar subsequent prosecution for involuntary manslaughter arising out of the same incident because proof of involuntary manslaughter requires proof of an additional fact. St. v. McDonald, 158 M 307, 491 P2d 711 (1971).

Audio-Video Taping: The procedure of audio-video taping defendant arrested for driving while intoxicated was not violative of due process requirements, did not constitute an unreasonable search and seizure, and was held to be objective evidence outside the privilege against self-incrimination. St. v. Finley, 173 M 162, 566 P2d 1119 (1977).

Search of Automobile: After a person has been removed from a car and arrested for driving while under the influence, search of the person's automobile is reasonable. St. v. Turner, 164 M 371, 523 P2d 1386 (1974).

Constitutionality: The term "actual physical control" as used in this section is not so vague, ambiguous, and uncertain as to render the statute void. St. v. Ruona, 133 M 243, 321 P2d 615 (1958).

CHEMICAL TESTS

Video of Defendant Taking Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Inadmissible — Expert Testimony Required: After being convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol, the defendant claimed on appeal that the District Court abused its discretion by admitting a police video that showed the defendant participating in a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST) and then being placed under arrest. The sound from the video was muted and the results of the PAST were not presented to the jury. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, reasoning that the video showing administration of the PAST, followed by an arrest, raised a compelling inference that the defendant was over the legal blood alcohol limit. Consequently, the Supreme Court determined that the video was impermissibly used as substantive evidence of intoxication without the state satisfying the requirement of St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 Mont. 276, 119 P.3d 1194, and Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), to call an expert witness to testify regarding the reliability and accuracy of the PAST. St. v. Lozon, 2012 MT 303, 367 Mont. 424, 291 P.3d 1135.

No Notice to Defendant of Testimony of Officer Who Ordered DUI Blood Test — Denial of Motion to Suppress DUI Blood Test Affirmed: Grela was taken to the hospital following a vehicle accident. The officer at the scene noticed several empty and full beer cans and a half-full bottle of whiskey in and around the vehicle. Grela was unconscious, but the officer requested a DUI blood test, and Grela was subsequently charged in Municipal Court with DUI. Grela asserted that the test results should be suppressed because he did not consent to withdrawal of the blood and because the state should have provided notice that the officer would be called as an expert witness. The suppression motion was denied and Grela appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Based on the best evidence available to the officers at the accident scene and at the hospital, the officer's belief that Grela was incapable of refusing the blood test was reasonable, so the blood was legally drawn and the test results were admissible. Additionally, Grela was given a copy of the officer's accident report as requested, so Grela had notice that the officer would testify as to the reasons underlying the officer's belief that Grela was incapable of refusing the blood test, and it was not necessary that the officer be disclosed as an expert. Billings v. Grela, 2009 MT 172, 350 M 511, 209 P3d 222 (2009).

Admissibility of Expert Testimony on Blood Alcohol Content — Elimination Phase Versus Retrograde Extrapolation: Larson contended that the trial court improperly allowed expert testimony concerning Larson's blood alcohol content (BAC) because the expert estimated the BAC using the retrograde extrapolation method in violation of state crime lab policy. The Supreme Court disagreed. Retrograde extrapolation is a method of estimating BAC at a specified time using a person's known BAC at a later time. However, the expert in this case opined that Larson would have reached the peak alcohol phase earlier in the evening and would have been in the elimination phase when the blood was drawn, so the expert did not engage in retrograde extrapolation. Crime lab policy was not violated, and the testimony was properly admitted. St. v. Larson, 2004 MT 345, 324 M 310, 103 P3d 524 (2004).

Test Taken Three Hours After Accident Reasonable Under Circumstances and Evidentiary Use of Results: Under the circumstances, a 3-hour lapse between the time of the accident and the time that blood was drawn was reasonable under this section's requirement that blood be drawn within a reasonable time after the alleged act. In its first interpretation of what constitutes a reasonable time, the court stated that it depends on the totality of the circumstances. In this case, the peace officers did not unreasonably delay the test. The driver was injured on a rural road, the "jaws of life" were needed to get him out of the vehicle, and he needed to be taken to the hospital for treatment, which took priority over testing. The lower court found that because of many unknown variables, the test results could not be used to extrapolate backwards to determine the alcohol level at the time of the accident, but could be used to show that he would have had to consume a large amount of alcohol prior to the accident to reach the 0.26 level shown by the test. Moreover, a forensic crime scientist testified that the alcohol level usually peaks within a half hour to an hour and a half after consumption. Therefore, the test results were relevant and admissible. St. v. Hamilton, 2002 MT 263, 312 M 249, 59 P3d 387 (2002).

Issue of Untested Breath Test Solution Raised for First Time on Appeal: Appellant, convicted of DUI, raised for the first time on appeal a claim that a newspaper reported that untested ethyl alcohol, used to calibrate Intoxilyzers, was distributed to the Sheriff's office that tested him and that his conviction should be reversed because the solution used to calibrate the Intoxilyzer used on him was not approved as required by rule. He did not show that the untested solution was actually in use at the time that his breath sample was taken. He assumed that the solution was in use based on the news article. The statute providing for review of material and controlling facts that were not known to a defendant and that could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence was not applicable. Review of the issue would require the appellate court to conduct a hearing and act as a finder of fact, and the District Court had not decided the question of whether the untested solution was used for appellant's breath test. St. v. Hagen, 283 M 156, 939 P2d 994, 54 St. Rep. 542 (1997).

Arrest Not Required for Nonconsenual Blood Sample Without Warrant — No Fourth Amendment Violation: While administering first aid to plaintiff injured in a motorcycle accident rangers noticed telltale signs of alcohol use and requested that plaintiff submit to a Breathalyzer test. After plaintiff refused, park rangers instructed the medic to withdraw a sample of blood while administering an emergency I.V. Based largely on the blood sample, plaintiff was subsequently convicted of drunk driving. On appeal, a three-judge panel reversed the conviction, concluding that under U.S. v. Harvey, the rangers' failure to arrest the plaintiff before or shortly after obtaining the blood sample rendered the seizure unreasonable under the fourth amendment. On review, the Ninth circuit Court vacated the conviction, holding that the fourth amendment does not require a suspect's arrest for officers to obtain a blood sample without consent or a warrant. U.S. v. Chapel, 55 F3d 800 (9th Cir. 1995), expressly overruling U.S. v. Harvey, 701 F2d 800 (9th Cir. 1983), which held that the fourth amendment requires authorities to arrest a suspect prior to a nonconsenual taking of blood without a warrant.

Failure of City to Comply With Request for DUI Independent Blood Test — Due Process Violation: Defendant timely requested an independent blood test during the booking procedure on a DUI violation and was told that the test would be obtained, but the test was not obtained. A person accused of a criminal offense has a constitutional right to attempt to obtain exculpatory evidence, and when the offense charged involves intoxication, this right, as set out in St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155 (1986), encompasses the accused's right to obtain an independent blood test to establish sobriety, regardless of whether the accused submitted to a police-designated test. Failure to obtain the test when timely requested was a due process violation warranting reversal and dismissal of the charge. Whitefish v. Pinson, 271 M 170, 895 P2d 610, 52 St. Rep. 384 (1995). See also St. v. Peterson, 227 M 418, 739 P2d 958 (1987), and St. v. Klinkhammer, 256 M 275, 846 P2d 1008 (1993).

Urine Test: Even though a urine alcohol test was not specifically provided for by this section prior to 1961, the results thereof could be admitted in evidence, and together with the testimony of an expert witness interpreting the results could go to the jury. St. v. Cline, 135 M 372, 339 P2d 657 (1959).

Blood Test: An information charged the driver of a death car with manslaughter. A blood test taken from defendant soon after his arrival at the hospital pursuant to his written consent was transmitted to State Board of Health (functions now transferred to Department of Public Health and Human Services), analyzed, and showed an alcohol concentration of 0.13%. The result was admissible in evidence, as was the testimony of chemist of State Board of Health that the percentage of alcohol concentration was high enough to indicate that defendant was under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time his car hit garage. St. v. Haley, 132 M 366, 318 P2d 1084 (1957).

JURISDICTION

Minor's Prior DUI in City Court Properly Applied to Felony DUI Charge — No Violation of Constitutional Rights in City Court: Allen was arrested for a felony fourth DUI in 2004. Calculation of the number of DUIs included Allen's first arrest in 1997 as a minor, to which Allen pleaded guilty in City Court. Allen contended that it was improper to include the 1997 conviction in the total because that conviction was constitutionally infirm in that the City Court failed to advise him of his rights, including the right to counsel, and accepted his guilty plea without consent of a parent. Allen further contended that as a minor he was incapable of knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waiving the right to counsel. The Supreme Court disagreed. City Court records provided direct evidence that Allen's 1997 conviction was not obtained in violation of Allen's constitutional rights, and Allen failed to rebut the presumption of regularity that attached to the 1997 conviction. With specific regard to the right to counsel argument, the court noted that because the Youth Court does not have concurrent jurisdiction with the City Court over traffic violations, including DUIs, Allen was incorrect in claiming that the right to counsel could only have been waived by Allen and a parent at the 1997 proceedings. Therefore, application of Allen's 1997 conviction in calculating a felony DUI was not error. St. v. Allen, 2009 MT 124, 350 M 204, 206 P3d 951 (2009).

Off-Campus Stop Following On-Campus Traffic Violation — Extension of Campus Security Officer's Jurisdiction: Howard ran a red light at 2:30 a.m. on the University of Montana campus. However, despite pursuit by a campus security officer, Howard did not stop his vehicle until he was about 1 mile off campus. Following arrest and conviction for a traffic violation and felony DUI, Howard asserted that the officer did not have jurisdiction to make a traffic stop off campus and that because the violation occurred at a time when there was little traffic on the road, the offense did not pose an imminent threat to public safety. The Supreme Court disagreed with both arguments and affirmed. The offense occurred within the officer's jurisdiction, and campus police had authority under a joint university-city agreement to enforce, within city limits, traffic and criminal offenses that occurred on campus in the officer's presence and that posed an imminent threat to public safety. Despite light traffic, Howard's conduct did pose a threat to public safety, and the officer did not lose jurisdiction simply because Howard failed to stop until he was beyond campus parameters. St. v. Howard, 2008 MT 173, 343 M 378, 184 P3d 344 (2008).

DUI Arrest on Street Contiguous to University Campus Proper Under Jurisdiction Agreement Between University, City, and County: O'Neill was arrested for DUI by a University of Montana security officer on a street contiguous to but outside the boundaries of the university campus. O'Neill moved for dismissal on grounds that the arrest was unlawful because the offense occurred outside the geographic boundaries of the officer's jurisdiction. However, in 1993, the university entered an agreement with the city and county of Missoula under 20-25-322 that expanded the jurisdiction of campus security officers to make arrests for parking and moving violations on streets and alleys contiguous to the campus. The officer was patrolling the campus when he observed O'Neill's vehicle, and as a result, the streets contiguous to the campus were within the officer's jurisdiction. Thus, denial of O'Neill's motion to dismiss on jurisdictional grounds was proper. Missoula v. O'Neill, 2004 MT 328, 324 M 124, 102 P3d 21 (2004).

Use of Prior DUI Convictions in Washington to Enhance Montana DUI to Felony: The District Court used Hall's three prior DUI convictions in Washington to enhance Hall's Montana conviction to a felony. Hall appealed on grounds that Montana and Washington laws were too dissimilar to allow enhancement of Hall's Montana DUI. The Supreme Court examined both states' statutes and concluded that a person convicted of violating the Washington law committed an offense for which each subsection of the Washington statute had an analogous statute in Montana. The laws were held to be sufficiently similar to allow felony enhancement in this case, and Hall's fourth offense Montana conviction was affirmed. St. v. Hall, 2004 MT 106, 321 M 78, 88 P3d 1273 (2004).

Authority of City Court to Try DUI Charge Under State Statute — No Error in District Court Failure to Dismiss: McCarvel was charged in Billings City Court with DUI in violation of this section. McCarvel moved to dismiss on the grounds that he was charged with a violation of a state statute rather than a city ordinance. The City Court refused to dismiss. McCarvel was convicted by a jury and took a de novo appeal to the District Court. The District Court refused to dismiss and McCarvel pleaded guilty. The Supreme Court held that the Billings City Court had jurisdiction over the DUI offense concurrent with the Justice's Court. Because McCarvel was charged with a violation of a state statute rather than a city ordinance, the language of the city ordinance was immaterial. Billings v. McCarvel, 262 M 96, 863 P2d 441, 50 St. Rep. 1460 (1993).

District Court Jurisdiction Over D.W.I. Charge: Jurisdiction of the District Court over criminal matters depends on the maximum sentence that can be imposed for committing the crime. When the maximum sentence increases to give the District Court jurisdiction because of repeated D.W.I. offenses, proof of prior offenses does not become an element that must be proved at trial and can be proved at any time until sentencing. Thus, failure to introduce evidence of prior convictions at trial does not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. St. v. Campbell, 189 M 107, 615 P2d 190, 37 St. Rep. 1337 (1980).

Jurisdiction of District Court: While it is generally true that Justices' Courts have jurisdiction over offenses described in this section, since third conviction may lead to sentence of up to 1 year, prosecution of third offense can be in District Court. St. v. Heine, 169 M 25, 544 P2d 1212 (1976).

Jurisdiction of Justice of Peace: Since the driving of a vehicle on a highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor is a misdemeanor under this section, it falls within the jurisdiction of a Justice of the Peace under 3-10-303. Wilson v. Brodie, 148 M 235, 419 P2d 306 (1966).

SUFFICIENCY AND ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE

Community Caretaker Doctrine Inapplicable — Denial of Motion to Suppress Affirmed Based On Particularized Suspicion: An officer saw the defendant execute a hard left turn in an area where the officer knew there were no cross streets and then drive on the sidewalk and onto the grass before coming to an abrupt stop and possibly hitting a fire hydrant. While speaking to the defendant, the officer noticed the smell of alcohol and other indicators of intoxication. The defendant failed a field sobriety test and subsequently pleaded guilty to driving under the influence after the Municipal Court denied his motion to suppress. The District Court affirmed on the basis of the community caretaker doctrine. The Supreme Court upheld the denial of the motion to suppress because the officer had particularized suspicion that the defendant had been involved in a property damage accident, but it clarified that the community caretaker doctrine applies to situations in which a citizen is in need of help or is in peril. St. v. Marcial, 2013 MT 242, 371 Mont. 348, 308 P.3d 69, distinguishing St. v. Lovegren, 2002 MT 153, 310 Mont. 358, 51 P.3d 471.

Improper Exclusion of Evidence That Defendant Ingested "Date Rape" Pill Prior to DUI — Automatism Defense Available as Affirmative Defense Upon Written Notice — Burden on Defendant: The defendant was charged with a misdemeanor DUI. She alleged that she had unknowingly ingested a "date rape" drug prior to the incident and therefore she did not commit a voluntary act by driving the car. The District Court disallowed her from asserting the "automatism" defense, ruling that because DUI is an absolute liability offense, the defendant's mental state is irrelevant. The defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that under 45-2-202, a voluntary act is a material element of every offense, and thus the plaintiff was entitled to raise the defense. Missoula v. Paffhausen, 2012 MT 265, 367 Mont. 80, 289 P.3d 141.

Challenge to Intoxilyzer Certification Reports: Rule 803(6), Montana Rules of Evidence, is a foundational rule that allows the state to admit into evidence Intoxilyzer certification reports that would normally be excluded as hearsay, and a defendant's failure to challenge Intoxilyzer certification reports prior to trial does not result in forfeiture of the right to do so at trial. St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Abrupt Stop on Desolate Back Road on Cold Winter's Night — Adequate Basis for Initial Welfare Check — Stop Valid Under Community Caretaker Doctrine: A police officer was driving down a desolate back road in the middle of a cold January night when a vehicle ahead of him abruptly pulled over. The officer pulled up behind it to see if the occupants were lost or needed assistance. The police officer testified at trial that as he approached the vehicle, he considered prior burglaries that had occurred in the area. Upon contact with the driver, the officer smelled alcohol, and he cited the driver for a misdemeanor DUI. The defendant moved to suppress evidence from the stop, claiming that the stop was not permitted under the community caretaker doctrine because the officer did not stop her with the sole intention of performing a welfare check. The District Court denied the motion to suppress, finding that the state had presented objective facts that the officer suspected the occupants might be in need of assistance because they were driving down a desolate back road in the middle of the night and had abruptly pulled over. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed and further noted that the community caretaker doctrine does not require an officer to have the sole subjective purpose of conducting a welfare check as long as the officer has adequate grounds for conducting the welfare check initially. St. v. Spaulding, 2011 MT 204, 361 Mont. 445, 259 P.3d 793. See also St. v. Graham, 2007 MT 358, 340 Mont. 366, 175 P.3d 885, and St. v. Lovegren, 2002 MT 153, 310 Mont. 358, 51 P.3d 471.

Elements of Affirmative Compulsion Defense — Compulsion Possible Acceptable Defense to DUI Charge: The affirmative defense of compulsion is a well-recognized basis for finding a person not guilty of a charged offense even though the person's conduct appears to fall within the definition of the offense. As set out in St. v. Owens, 182 M 338, 597 P2d 72 (1979), the elements of a compulsion defense require a defendant to show that the defendant was compelled to perform the offensive conduct by the threat or menace of the imminent infliction of death or serious bodily harm, that the defendant believed that death or serious bodily harm would be inflicted on the defendant if the conduct was not performed, and that this belief was reasonable. A defendant need not show that there were no options other than the allegedly compelled action, only that the elements of the defense were satisfied. In this case, the District Court held that the compulsion defense did not apply to a DUI charge, so Leprowse was precluded from presenting evidence in support of the defense. The Supreme Court reversed. Leprowse alleged that the required elements of the defense were present because she was compelled to drive away from a bar due to an imminent threat of serious bodily injury, and that the belief was reasonable. Whether Leprowse was compelled to drive 14 miles and ostensibly commit a DUI was a question of fact based on the circumstances, but Leprowse should have been allowed to present the evidence, so the case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. Leprowse, 2009 MT 387, 353 M 312, 221 P3d 648 (2009). See also Missoula v. Paffhausen, 2012 MT 265, 367 Mont. 80, 289 P.3d 141, allowing the defendant to introduce evidence of automatism as a defense to DUI.

Admissibility of Video of Defendant Immediately After Accident: Schauf asserted that a video taken by the arresting officer's patrol car camera depicting Schauf's behavior at the scene of a vehicle accident should not have been admitted because the prejudicial effect of the evidence outweighed its probative value. The Supreme Court disagreed. The video was clearly relevant and probative of Schauf's condition and level of intoxication. The jury was informed that the video was taken just after a horrific high-speed crash and that Schauf had suffered a head injury. The jury was in a position to weigh the factors and to give the evidence as a whole the weight it deserved. As the District Court found, the only prejudice to Schauf was that the video was highly probative of the state's contention that Schauf was intoxicated at the time of the crash. The evidence was not unfairly prejudicial, and the District Court properly exercised its discretion in allowing admission of the video into evidence. St. v. Schauf, 2009 MT 281, 352 M 186, 216 P3d 740 (2009).

Sufficient Evidence of Vehicular Homicide While Under the Influence: After the state presented its case in chief at Coluccio's trial for vehicular homicide while under the influence, Coluccio moved to dismiss for lack of sufficient evidence on grounds that a reasonable juror could not conclude that his actions rose to the level of criminal negligence simply because he committed a minor traffic violation by failing to yield to another vehicle when making a left turn. The motion was denied, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. The traffic offense was only part of the evidence. Other evidence showed that Coluccio drank at least three beers just before driving and then turned in front of a visible oncoming motorcycle, killing the rider. Coluccio's alcohol consumption and driving were sufficient evidence for a reasonable juror to conclude that turning in front of the motorcycle was a gross deviation from ordinary care. St. v. Coluccio, 2009 MT 273, 352 M 122, 214 P3d 1282 (2009).

Failure to Demonstrate Exigent Circumstances Justifying Warrantless Entry Into Residence for DUI Evidence — Reversed: Saale was involved in a one-car rollover after leaving a bar. Witnesses who helped Saale from the vehicle observed that Saale appeared to be highly intoxicated but not seriously injured. Saale's husband then arrived and took Saale home. Officers went to the home, but the husband refused to allow anyone into the home and refused to bring Saale outside. Officers had been advised by the County Attorney's office that they could enter the home without a warrant because of exigent circumstances of Saale's possible intoxication and trying to elude officers and because Saale might be severely injured from the accident. Therefore, officers handcuffed the husband and removed him from the area, entered the home, and removed Saale back to the scene of the accident, where Saale sat in the patrol car for 45 minutes. Saale subsequently failed a portable breath test and was arrested for DUI second offense. Saale moved to suppress evidence from the warrantless search. The District Court held that the exigent circumstances warrant exception gave officers the right to enter the home and to take Saale back to the accident scene, to question Saale about the accident and potential injuries, and to protect against the destruction of Saale's blood alcohol level as evidence of DUI, so the dismissal motion was denied. Saale appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Entry into the home without consent was reasonable only if the exigent circumstances were legitimate, but in this case officers had neither a lawful nor practical exigency justifying warrantless invasion of the home to obtain evidence. The argument for preservation of DUI evidence was negated by the fact that no physical evidence had been taken from Saale at the time of entry, so there was no evidence to destroy, and by the fact that Saale sat in the patrol car for 45 minutes before a breath test was even taken. The argument that possible injury constituted an exigent circumstance was belied by the fact that witnesses informed the officers that Saale did not appear to be injured and by the fact that if injuries had been obvious to officers when Saale was removed from the home, Saale would have been taken to the hospital rather than to the accident scene to sit idly and unattended in the patrol car while officers investigated the accident. Absent proof of exigent circumstances, warrantless entry into Saale's home was unreasonable and constituted reversible error. St. v. Saale, 2009 MT 95, 350 M 64, 204 P3d 1220 (2009), following St. v. Peplow, 2001 MT 253, 307 M 172, 36 P3d 922 (2001), and distinguishing St. v. Deshner, 158 M 188, 489 P2d 1290 (1971), and St. v. Wakeford, 1998 MT 16, 287 M 220, 953 P2d 1065 (1998).

Probable Cause and Particularized Suspicion of DUI Based on Flagrant Traffic Violations — Suspension of License Proper: Cybulski drove west in the eastbound lane of an interstate highway for at least 30 minutes, obviously oblivious to the surrounding environment. Cybulski initially refused to stop for a pursuing officer, and when she did stop, she failed to respond to the officer's instructions, and the officer had to forcibly remove her from the car before placing her under arrest. Cybulski failed field sobriety tests and refused to take a breath test, so her license was suspended. Cybulski later petitioned for reinstatement of her license, and the District Court granted the petition on grounds that although the officer had a particularized suspicion to stop Cybulski for driving on the wrong side of the highway, the officer lacked the requisite particularized suspicion to conduct sobriety tests and the probable cause to make a DUI arrest. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. An experienced officer could infer that Cybulski was DUI based on the sheer length of time that Cybulski traveled on the wrong side of the interstate and her apparent obliviousness to oncoming traffic traveling in the same lane. When paired with Cybulski's unusually delayed response to pursuing officers, the officer was entitled to infer that Cybulski was DUI even before she stopped her car. Probable cause existed because there were sufficient facts and circumstances within the officer's personal knowledge to warrant a reasonable belief that Cybulski had committed an offense. Because the officer had both a particularized suspicion to believe that Cybulski was DUI and probable cause for an arrest, Cybulski was lawfully under arrest at the time that she was removed from her car and handcuffed on the interstate and when asked to submit to a breath test, so her license was properly suspended. In re License Suspension of Cybulski, 2008 MT 128, 343 M 56, 183 P3d 39 (2008).

Improper Admission of Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test Results: Michaud appealed his DUI conviction on grounds that the trial court improperly admitted evidence regarding how a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test was administered by the arresting officer and the officer's results or inferences from the test because the state did not establish a proper foundation upon which the nonexpert officer could offer the evidence. The state conceded that a proper foundation was not laid, but contended that the evidence was admissible as cumulative evidence of Michaud's guilt. The Supreme Court, citing Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), agreed that there was an insufficient foundation for the admission of the HGN evidence and that the trial court abused its discretion by allowing the officer to testify regarding the test results. To determine whether the error prejudiced Michaud's rights to a fair trial, warranting reversal, the court applied the test in St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001). The error here was trial error and thus not automatically reversible, but contrary to the state's argument that the evidence was cumulative and the state's offer of proof of Michaud's failing several other sobriety tests, the state failed to meet its burden of proving that admission of the HGN evidence was harmless because the HGN test was scientific and likely to be accorded more weight by the jury than more subjective evidence, such as the officer's testimony and less scientific field sobriety tests. The jury verdict was reversed and remanded for retrial. St. v. Michaud, 2008 MT 88, 342 M 244, 180 P3d 636 (2008). However, see St. v. Chavez-Villa, 2012 MT 250, 366 Mont. 519, 289 P.3d 113, ruling that although implication of HGN results was improperly admitted, the cumulative evidence of the defendant's intoxication rendered the introduction of the implied results harmless.

No Particularized Suspicion for Stop to Investigate Couple Engaged in Romantic but Not Criminal Behavior — Community Caretaker Doctrine Inapplicable Absent Indication of Citizen in Peril: While on routine patrol, an officer observed a vehicle parked on a pullout adjacent to a public road. The officer thought perhaps the driver was experiencing vehicle problems and drove by to investigate. However, the occupants were not having vehicle problems but were kissing, and the female passenger was observed attempting to "mount" the male driver. Concerned that the occupants were engaged in inappropriate sexual behavior, the officer circled back, parked behind the vehicle and activated the emergency lights, and approached the vehicle with the intent to discourage the couple from engaging in their behavior and to move them along. The officer discovered a cold, sweaty beer can outside the driver's door and also discovered the couple in various states of undress. Upon questioning the couple about what they were doing, the officer noticed that they both appeared intoxicated. The driver, Graham, was tested and subsequently arrested for DUI. Graham moved to suppress the evidence of the DUI on grounds that the officer did not have authority to make an investigative stop or, if that authority did exist, that the officer exceeded the scope of an investigative stop. The District Court agreed that the officer did not have a sufficient particularized suspicion to make an investigative stop, but nevertheless allowed the DUI evidence on grounds that the community caretaker doctrine provided a legal justification for the stop. On appeal, the Supreme Court first noted that if particularized suspicion was absent and no other exception to the warrant requirement applied, the search and seizure were unconstitutional. In this case, once the officer activated the emergency lights, Graham would not have felt free to walk away, so a seizure occurred. The Supreme Court agreed that the totality of the circumstances did not give rise to a particularized suspicion that a crime was occurring or was about to occur. Graham committed no traffic offense, and the couple's conduct was not criminal and did not indicate that a crime was about to occur. Any particularized suspicion occurred only after Graham was seized. The officer did not approach the vehicle because of a belief that a crime was being committed, but rather to discourage the couple from engaging in their behavior and to move them along, so the requisite particularized suspicion of a crime was absent. The Supreme Court also held that the community caretaker doctrine did not apply because under the criteria developed in St. v. Lovegren, 2002 MT 153, 310 M 358, 51 P3d 471 (2002), the first step in determining whether the doctrine applies is whether there are objective, specific, and articulable facts from which an experienced officer would suspect that a citizen is in need of help or is in peril. No such facts existed in this case, and the court declined to extend the doctrine to allow law enforcement officers equipped with nothing more than personal dissatisfaction of a person's otherwise lawful conduct to detain that person without any intention of providing community care or assistance. Dismissal of Graham's motion to suppress the evidence was reversed, and the case was remanded. St. v. Graham, 2007 MT 358, 340 M 366, 175 P3d 885 (2007), distinguishing St. v. Nelson, 2004 MT 13, 319 M 250, 84 P3d 25 (2004), St. v. Seaman, 2005 MT 307, 329 M 429, 124 P3d 1137 (2005), and St. v. Litschauer, 2005 MT 331, 330 M 22, 126 P3d 456 (2005).

Officer's Observations Sufficient to Establish Particularized Suspicion of DUI Following Caretaker Stop: Vaughn pulled part way off the road, and an officer stopped to see if assistance was needed. The District Court concluded that under the community caretaker doctrine, the officer was justified in stopping to make sure Vaughn was all right. However, Vaughn asserted that once he assured the officer that no assistance was needed, the scope of the doctrine ended and that because the officer had no other justification for the stop, the officer's further questioning and request for field sobriety tests constituted an unlawful seizure, requiring suppression of all evidence gathered. The Supreme Court disagreed. When the officer approached the vehicle, he noticed an open can of beer between the front seats, and when asking about Vaughn's situation, he observed that Vaughn's speech was slurred and that his eyes were bloodshot and watery. Thus, the officer's observations were sufficient to establish a particularized suspicion that Vaughn may have been DUI, justifying further investigation once the purpose of the initial stop was accomplished. It was not error for the trial court to dismiss Vaughn's motion to suppress the evidence. St. v. Vaughn, 2007 MT 164, 338 M 97, 164 P3d 873 (2007).

Admissibility of Liquor Bottle in Plain View During Officer's Attempt to Secure Vehicle When Suspect in Custody for DUI: After receiving a report of a suspected drunk driver, the investigating officer stopped Delao and placed him in custody in the patrol car. Upon securing the vehicle, the officer saw a clear bottle partially covered beneath the center armrest, which the officer recognized as a liquor bottle. The bottle contained vodka, which the officer confiscated and which was entered as evidence in Delao's DUI case. Delao moved to suppress the evidence as the fruit of an unlawful search, but the motion was denied. Following conviction, Delao appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The officer's attempt to secure the vehicle fell within the ambit of the slight duty of care owed to Delao under St. v. Sawyer, 174 M 512, 571 P2d 1131 (1977), and neither the observation nor seizure of the bottle involved any privacy violation because the bottle was in plain view. The officer was lawfully present in the vehicle, and the incriminating nature of the bottle was immediately apparent. St. v. Delao, 2006 MT 179, 333 M 68, 140 P3d 1065 (2006), followed in St. v. Kelm, 2013 MT 115, 370 Mont. 61, 300 P.3d 687.

Retrograde Extrapolation of Blood Alcohol Content Not Necessary to Prove Person's Blood Alcohol at Time Person Was Driving: Retrograde extrapolation, a technique through which experts estimate alcohol concentration at some earlier time based on test results at some later time, is not necessary evidence to prove what a person's blood alcohol was at the time that the person was driving. Here, the results of an Intoxilyzer breath test, coupled with defendant's bloodshot and glassy eyes, the smell of alcohol when defendant was stopped, defendant's admission that he had consumed alcohol, and defendant's failure of field sobriety tests, were sufficient to sustain a conviction of DUI per se. St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006), following St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), and followed in St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Breath Test Administered Within Reasonable Time After Alleged DUI Consistent With Per Se Intoxication Statute: McGowan contended that the DUI per se statute required proof that a driver's alcohol concentration was above 0.08 while driving. The Supreme Court disagreed. A preliminary alcohol screening test administered in the field does not satisfy a person's obligation to submit to a breath test pursuant to 61-8-409(2). Reading 61-8-406 to require law enforcement officers to determine a person's alcohol content while driving would lead to an absurd result because it is impossible to administer a test while a person is driving. Therefore, interpreting the DUI per se statute to allow for the admissibility of breath tests administered within a reasonable time after an alleged act of driving under the influence represents a reasonable interpretation of statutory language, comports with legislative intent, and avoids an absurd result. In the present case, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, the state presented the jury with sufficient evidence to determine that McGowan committed the offense of driving with an alcohol concentration above 0.08 in violation of 61-8-406, and McGowan's conviction was affirmed. St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), followed in St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006).

Sufficient Evidence That Defendant Owned Vehicle and Drove on Public Way: At a DUI trial, Mooney contended that the state failed to prove that the vehicle that crashed into Ruff's fence belonged to Mooney and that the vehicle was ever driven on ways of the state open to the public. Mooney's arguments failed. It was Mooney who repeatedly appeared at Ruff's door and communicated that his vehicle had crashed into Ruff's fence, claiming that it was his car and apologizing for damaging the fence. Neither Ruff nor the investigating officer observed anyone else in the vicinity when Mooney came to the door. Based on this circumstantial evidence, a rational trier of fact could have concluded that Mooney was the driver of the vehicle. Additionally, a rational trier of fact could have concluded that the lane upon which Ruff's property sat qualified as a public or private place adapted for public travel in common use by the public, which constituted proof beyond a reasonable doubt that Mooney's car was driven on ways of the state open to the public. Mooney's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Mooney, 2006 MT 121, 332 M 249, 137 P3d 532 (2006).

Evidence of Malfunctioning Speedometer Not Admissible in DUI Case: Spencer was stopped for speeding and subsequently cited for DUI. Spencer sought to call an expert to testify that the speedometer in Spencer's vehicle had not been functioning properly, but the trial court excluded the expert testimony as irrelevant. On appeal, Spencer asserted that the speed of a vehicle is relevant in determining whether a driver's ability to safely operate a vehicle has been diminished. However, the state did not attempt to prove that Spencer was intoxicated because he was speeding, and whether Spencer justifiably thought that he was going slower than he was was not relevant to whether he was driving under the influence. The Supreme Court affirmed. St. v. Spencer, 2005 MT 338, 330 M 80, 125 P3d 1151 (2005), distinguishing St. v. Palmer, 247 M 210, 805 P2d 580 (1991), and Bauer v. St., 275 M 119, 910 P2d 886 (1996).

Use of Nontestimonial Intoxilyzer Certification Reports in DUI Trial Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses — Crawford Rule: At Carter's DUI trial, the state introduced three certification reports in order to demonstrate that an Intoxilyzer 5000 was working properly when Carter was tested. The officers who prepared the reports did not testify at trial. Carter initially contended that the reports were hearsay, but on appeal, Carter asserted that admission of the reports violated his right to confront witnesses. Although the Supreme Court will generally not address new arguments raised on appeal, the court applied the exception in Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895 (1987), in this case because of the new confrontation clause jurisprudence set out in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), which was decided while Carter's case was pending. In Crawford, the U.S. Supreme Court for the first time distinguished testimonial and nontestimonial out-of-court statements, delineating testimonial statements, at a minimum, as applying to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial as well as to police interrogations. States are allowed flexibility in the development of hearsay law when nontestimonial hearsay is at issue. In Carter's case, the state asserted that the certification reports used at Carter's trial were nontestimonial evidence because they did not fall within the core group of statements that the confrontation clause was meant to address. The Supreme Court held that the certification reports were nontestimonial in that they were not substantive evidence of a particular offense, but rather constituted foundational evidence necessary for the admission of substantive evidence. Thus, Carter's confrontation right was not implicated despite the fact that the authors were not present to testify or be confronted. The court noted that a defendant is always free to subpoena authors of such reports if the defendant's pretrial investigation reveals that the reports are erroneous or are otherwise subject to attack. Therefore, in conformance with the Crawford rule, the Supreme Court exempted the certification reports from confrontation clause scrutiny and affirmed Carter's conviction. St. v. Carter, 2005 MT 87, 326 M 427, 114 P3d 1001 (2005).

Sufficient Evidence of Impairment to Support Negligent Homicide and DUI Conviction: Larson contended that evidence was insufficient to support a jury's determination of impairment by alcohol at the time of a fatal accident and that the inference of impairment resulting from Larson's blood alcohol concentration was rebutted by other evidence indicating that the accident was caused by a momentary lapse of attention while driving on a dangerous road. The state presented evidence that Larson drank a substantial amount of alcohol during the evening and morning hours prior to the accident; admitted that he had consumed a considerable amount of alcohol; drove his pickup at a high rate of speed off the shoulder of the highway, causing the vehicle to roll and eject the passengers; and tested for a blood alcohol concentration of 0.12 2 hours after the accident and 4 hours after he had stopped drinking. Although the Supreme Court could not discern precisely why the jury reached its decision to convict Larson, Larson fully presented his defense theory, and the jury rejected it. The evidence was sufficient to support the conviction, and the Supreme Court affirmed. St. v. Larson, 2004 MT 345, 324 M 310, 103 P3d 524 (2004).

Sufficient Reasonable Cause to Suspect DUI Following Justified Traffic Stop — Refusal to Reinstate License Proper: Muri was initially stopped for expired license plates and then failed DUI field tests. Upon refusal to submit to a blood alcohol test, Muri's driver's license was seized and suspended. Muri petitioned for reinstatement of the license on grounds that the totality of circumstances occurring after the stop did not support a finding of reasonable cause for the officer to believe that Muri was DUI because the only indication of intoxication was the odor of alcohol emanating from the vehicle and the officer could not state with certainty whether the odor came from Muri or from a passenger. The petition was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Contrary to Muri's assertions, the odor was not the only indication of possible intoxication. Muri swerved in the driving lane at least once; the officer smelled a strong odor of alcohol when speaking with Muri; Muri could not produce a driver's license upon request, and when asked to recite her Social Security number, Muri could not do so at first and then recited it with slurred speech; the stop occurred at the approximate time when bars were closing; and Muri admitted consuming some alcohol. Given the officer's numerous observations, the officer had reasonable grounds to believe, prior to requesting field sobriety tests, that Muri was DUI, and the petition to reinstate Muri's license was properly denied. Muri v. St., 2004 MT 192, 322 M 219, 95 P3d 149 (2004), following Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212 (1996), and distinguishing Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464 (1999). See also Brewer v. St., 2004 MT 193, 322 M 225, 95 P3d 163 (2004).

Reliability of Citizen's Tip — Totality of Circumstances Justifying Investigative Stop: A citizen called in a suspected DUI, giving a detailed description of Hall and his vehicle. The report by the named informant was bolstered by a store clerk who personally observed Hall's behavior. An officer spotted Hall's vehicle minutes after receiving the report, matched it to the detailed description, and corroborated the report after observing Hall's actions. Hall contended that the officer nevertheless had insufficient information to support a particularized suspicion of DUI and that the subsequent investigative stop was illegal. The Supreme Court applied the factors in St. v. Pratt, 286 M 156, 951 P2d 37 (1997), to evaluate the totality of the circumstances. The court noted that an officer in the field must be able to rely on reports and dispatches from other officers without having to conduct a cross-examination as to the basis of the report, but when an officer has acted on dispatched information, it is appropriate to include information known to the dispatching or reporting officer. Here, the initial tip and the corroboration gave a high indicia of reliability that, when coupled with the officer's observations, satisfied the Pratt factors for a justified investigative stop made pursuant to a tip. St. v. Hall, 2004 MT 106, 321 M 78, 88 P3d 1273 (2004).

Carport Not Considered Part of Home — Privacy Standard Inapplicable to DUI Search of Condominium Carport: Large was arrested for misdemeanor DUI while seated in her running car that was parked in the carport outside her condominium. Large moved to suppress the evidence because she was arrested at night at her home for a misdemeanor committed elsewhere, in violation of 46-6-105. She also contended that the arrest was in violation of her right to privacy. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a carport may be structurally contiguous with the rest of a private house or dwelling, presence in a carport does not equate to presence in the home, and although lot lines do convey certain concrete ownership rights, the right to be free from misdemeanor arrest at night is reserved for the home, not coterminous property appurtenant to the home. Further, under 61-8-101, ways of the state open to the public include parking areas and other public or private places adapted for public travel that are in common use by the public. Large could not be considered to be in her home while sitting in a car parked in the common-area parking lot in her condominium complex where officers could see what was readily visible to any visitor without being overly intrusive. Thus, Large had no reasonable expectation of privacy that prohibited her arrest in her own carport, nor did a violation of 46-6-105 occur. Whitefish v. Large, 2003 MT 322, 318 M 310, 80 P3d 427 (2003). See also St. v. Hubbel, 286 M 200, 951 P2d 971 (1997).

No Requirement of Quantifiable Blood Alcohol Content to Prove DUI — Other Competent Evidence Allowed: Kortum was stopped for DUI after an officer observed him driving poorly. Kortum admitted drinking earlier in the day, but refused to take a breath test and failed standard field sobriety tests (SFST). Following presentation of the state's case, Kortum moved for a directed verdict, asserting that the SFST were improperly administered, which, coupled with the lack of blood alcohol test results, constituted insufficient evidence of DUI. The motion was denied, and Kortum was convicted and appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Evidence bearing on the issue of DUI is not limited to blood and breath samples or SFST. Rather, a full range of competent evidence is sufficient, including the manner in which a vehicle is driven and the fact that a driver refused to submit to a breath test. Here, the jury heard evidence of Kortum's refusal to take the test, heard the officer's testimony and saw a videotape showing Kortum's erratic driving, and heard Kortum's own admission that he had been drinking. Even assuming that the SFST were flawed, there was sufficient competent evidence for the jury to find Kortum guilty of DUI. Helena v. Kortum, 2003 MT 290, 318 M 77, 78 P3d 882 (2003).

Misleading Testimony of Arresting Officer Not Material to DUI Verdict — No Due Process Violation: At Gratzer's DUI trial, he argued that he could not have been in actual control of a vehicle because he had no ignition key for it. The arresting officer testified that he once owned a similar vehicle and needed no key to operate it. Gratzer filed for postconviction relief after discovering that the officer never actually owned a similar vehicle, but relief was denied. Gratzer appealed, contending that the officer's false testimony violated his due process rights. The Supreme Court noted that under Gollehon v. St., 1999 MT 210, 296 M 6, 986 P2d 395 (1999), it must be shown that false testimony was material to the verdict to prevail on a due process claim. Gratzer argued that Gollehon applied because the officer's testimony was material to the conviction inasmuch as it supported one of the elements of the crime. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although the officer may have been misleading in saying that he had owned a similar vehicle when in fact the vehicle was a county-owned car that was issued to him, ownership of the vehicle was irrelevant to the question of whether the vehicle would start without a key and was not material to the verdict. Further, testimony that the officer saw Gratzer drive and exit the vehicle was sufficient in itself for the trier of fact to determine that Gratzer was driving or in actual physical control of the vehicle. The District Court was affirmed. Gratzer v. St., 2003 MT 169, 316 M 335, 71 P3d 1221 (2003).

Sufficient Discovery Allowed Regarding Results of DUI Breath Test: Weldele moved in limine to exclude the results of a DUI breath test on grounds that the state failed to provide full discovery regarding the tests. The District Court denied the motion on grounds that the state had provided sufficient information upon which Weldele could prepare a defense. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although the state's production was not as extensive as requested, documents provided confirmed that: (1) the officers were certified to operate the Intoxilyzer and preliminary breath test equipment; (2) the Intoxilyzer received an annual certification less than 5 months before Weldele used it; (3) the Intoxilyzer solution was approved and used in compliance with applicable regulations; (4) the Intoxilyzer was properly calibrated before and after Weldele's test; and (5) the preliminary breath test instrument was properly field-certified. This information was adequate for both Weldele's and the state's purposes, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's findings in that regard. St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003). See also St. v. Peters, 2011 MT 274, 362 Mont. 389, 264 P.3d 1124.

One-on-One Showup Identification Impermissibly Suggestive — Witness Testimony Permissible Under Totality of Circumstances: Bingman sought to exclude the testimony of witnesses in a felony DUI trial on grounds that the witnesses' observation of Bingman through a two-way window at the police department was impermissibly suggestive, resulting in an unreliable identification. The suggestive nature of one-on-one showup identifications has been previously recognized. In St. v. Clark, 2000 MT 40, 298 M 300, 997 P2d 107 (2000), the Supreme Court set out a two-part test for determining whether evidence gained from such an identification is permissible. The state conceded that the identification procedure was impermissibly suggestive, satisfying the first part of the Clark test. The second part of the test requires a determination of whether, under the totality of the circumstances, the identification gave rise to a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. In this case, despite the impermissibly suggestive nature of the showup identification procedure, the certainty with which the witnesses identified Bingman outweighed the likelihood of misidentification, so the District Court did not err in allowing the witnesses' testimony. St. v. Bingman, 2002 MT 350, 313 M 376, 61 P3d 153 (2002).

Sufficient Evidence of DUI Despite Lack of Proof of Specific Level of Intoxication: Bingman contended that there was insufficient evidence presented to support a conviction for DUI, but the Supreme Court disagreed. Bingman admitted the possibility that his vehicle struck another vehicle, admitted encountering the witnesses to the accident, and admitted that his vehicle had swerved around a group of pheasants while Bingman was driving after the accident. Investigating officers testified that Bingman appeared to be intoxicated at the police stop, smelled strongly of alcohol, had bloodshot eyes and slurred speech, and had trouble walking. Bingman himself admitted to consuming six beers the morning of the accident, and according to Bingman's own timeline, he consumed three more beers and two shots of alcohol in a 15-minute period following the accident. The testimony of the officers and the witnesses served to corroborate the state's assertion that Bingman was driving under the influence. Although the state may not have proved Bingman's level of intoxication with specificity, it was possible for the jury to conclude that Bingman was guilty of DUI, and all the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction. St. v. Bingman, 2002 MT 350, 313 M 376, 61 P3d 153 (2002).

Witness and Forensic Testimony and Driver's Admission Supporting Conviction: Testimony of four witnesses that after the accident the driver smelled strongly of alcohol, the driver's admission to an officer at the scene that he'd been drinking, an officer's testimony that the driver appeared to be intoxicated, the driver's unusual behavior in the ambulance, a forensic scientist's testimony that the driver would have had to consume a large amount of alcohol prior to the accident to register a 0.26 blood alcohol content on a test taken 3 hours later, and the driver's inability to negotiate a car parked on the side of the road supported conviction for driving under the influence. St. v. Hamilton, 2002 MT 263, 312 M 249, 59 P3d 387 (2002).

Witness Without Adequate Knowledge of Intoxilyzer Test Properly Precluded From Testifying as to Validity of Test Results: Russette was arrested for DUI and attempted at trial to introduce as an expert witness a chemistry professor who would testify that an Intoxilyzer analysis constituted a scientific test that was not valid or reliable unless at least two scientific tests had been performed pursuant to the scientific method. The District Court did not allow the professor to testify because he had no specific knowledge regarding the Intoxilyzer, so the testimony would not help the jury to understand the evidence or determine a fact in issue. Russette appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The party presenting a witness as an expert must establish to the satisfaction of the trial court that the witness possesses the requisite knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education to testify to the issue in question. Russette failed to lay any foundation that the professor had adequate knowledge upon which to challenge the validity of the Intoxilyzer, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in precluding the witness from testifying. St. v. Russette, 2002 MT 200, 311 M 188, 53 P3d 1256 (2002).

Manner of Driving Sufficient to Demonstrate DUI — State Not Required to Produce Evidence of Quantifiable Blood Alcohol Content to Prove DUI: Price was charged with fourth offense DUI and with four misdemeanors in connection with a motor vehicle accident. Despite the lack of positive Breathalyzer or blood alcohol test results, testing for which Price declined, Price was convicted of DUI. On appeal, Price asserted that there was insufficient evidence to uphold the conviction. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. The manner in which a vehicle is driven can be evidence of DUI, and the state is not required to produce evidence of a quantifiable blood alcohol content to demonstrate DUI. Here, evidence was sufficient for the jury to conclude that Price was driving under the influence based on Price's admission that he had been drinking prior to the accident, on the arresting officer's testimony that Price recklessly entered an intersection from a stop sign without regard to oncoming traffic, exhibited slurred and incoherent speech, and smelled of alcohol, and on the testimony of the emergency room physician that Price smelled of alcohol and appeared intoxicated. St. v. Price, 2002 MT 150, 310 M 320, 50 P3d 530 (2002). See also St. v. Lias, 218 M 124, 706 P2d 500 (1985), St. v. Peterson, 236 M 247, 769 P2d 1221 (1989), and St. v. Brady, 2000 MT 282, 302 M 174, 13 P3d 941 (2000).

Improper Admission of Testimony by Highway Patrol Officer Regarding Effect of Prescription Medication on Driving Ability — Harmless Error: During Nobach's DUI trial, the District Court allowed testimony from a highway patrol officer regarding the effect of prescription medications on Nobach's driving ability, without specifically determining whether the testimony would be considered expert or lay opinion. The officer opined that Nobach's ability to drive safely was diminished as a result of the consumption of drugs. Following conviction, Nobach appealed on grounds that the testimony was an expert opinion that was improperly allowed without the requisite foundation. The state contended that the testimony was a lay opinion, and cited St. v. Bradley, 262 M 194, 864 P2d 787 (1993), and St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173 (1997), for the proposition that a lay witness may give an opinion regarding intoxication based on the witness's personal observations. The Supreme Court first distinguished Bradley and Carter because the type of intoxication in those cases involved alcohol, while in Nobach's case, the officer concluded that drugs were involved only when alcohol use was ruled out by the administration of a Breathalyzer test. The court was not convinced that lay people are sufficiently knowledgeable about common symptoms of drug consumption and its effect on driving ability to offer lay testimony on the subject based on personal observation. The officer's opinion testimony was thus considered expert testimony rather than lay testimony, requiring an adequate foundation under Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The officer's training and experience did not provide a sufficient foundation for admitting the expert testimony, so the District Court abused its discretion in allowing it. However, because the abuse was trial error rather than structural error, the error did not warrant automatic reversal. Rather, the question was whether the finder of fact was presented with admissible evidence that proved the same facts as the tainted evidence and, if so, whether the tainted evidence would have contributed to the conviction qualitatively by comparison. In this case, the state provided other expert testimony from a pharmacist that tended to prove the same facts as the officer's testimony, and because the officer's testimony would not have contributed to Nobach's conviction, the error was harmless and the conviction was affirmed. St. v. Nobach, 2002 MT 91, 309 M 342, 46 P3d 618 (2002).

Prejudicial Error in Failure to Accept Guilty Pleas: Peplow was charged with and convicted of DUI, driving with a suspended or revoked license, driving without insurance, failing to report an accident, and tampering with evidence. Prior to trial, Peplow tried to enter guilty pleas to the driving with a suspended or revoked license and driving without insurance counts, but the trial court ruled that it was not required to accept the pleas. Peplow appealed. The Supreme Court held that the tampering with evidence charge was not applicable and that Peplow had a right to plead guilty and thus the trial court erred in refusing the pleas. The Supreme Court then applied St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), to determine whether denial of the pleas prejudiced Peplow's right to a fair trial. The court first determined that the error did not undermine the fairness of the entire trial proceeding, nor was it of constitutional dimensions, so it was considered a trial error rather than a structural error. Once a convicted person establishes that the evidence in question was erroneously admitted and has alleged prejudice, the state must then demonstrate that the error was not prejudicial, i.e., that the quality of the tainted evidence was such that there was no reasonable possibility that it might have contributed to the conviction. Therefore, pursuant to Van Kirk, the Supreme Court was required to determine whether the evidence proving that Peplow drove with a suspended license and without insurance went to prove an element of either of the substantive charges of DUI or failing to report an accident. The court noted that if Peplow's guilty pleas had been properly accepted, the evidence in question would not have been admissible. Further, the jury was presented with ample admissible evidence that Peplow was under the influence, so it was not necessary that the state object to the guilty pleas in order to buttress the record at trial. However, the qualitative effect of the inadmissible evidence was such that there was a reasonable possibility that the tainted evidence might have contributed to the DUI conviction, so that conviction was reversed and the case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. Peplow, 2001 MT 253, 307 M 172, 36 P3d 922 (2001).

Introduction of Results of Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test — Explanation of Underlying Scientific Basis of Correlation Between Alcohol Consumption and Nystagmus Required: At Van Kirk's DUI trial, the District Court allowed the arresting officer to testify regarding Van Kirk's performance on a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test. Van Kirk contended that the state failed to lay the proper foundation for admitting the test results. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), in order to lay the proper foundation, the state must establish a scientific basis for the reliability of the test results and in addition show that the test was properly administered. This requires that a qualified expert explain the underlying scientific basis of the correlation between alcohol consumption and nystagmus. In this case, the arresting officer had a bachelor's degree in medical technology, had worked as a lab supervisor and technician at the state hospital, was certified to administer the HGN test, and testified that the test was properly administered to Van Kirk. However, nothing in the evidence established that the officer was specially trained or educated or had adequate knowledge to qualify as an expert able to explain the underlying scientific basis of the HGN test. Thus, the District Court erred in permitting the officer to offer the test results into evidence without the state first establishing the requisite foundation. However, the error was not prejudicial to Van Kirk, so the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001). See also St. v. Chavez-Villa, 2012 MT 250, 366 Mont. 519, 289 P.3d 113, ruling that although implication of HGN results was improperly admitted, the cumulative evidence of the defendant's intoxication rendered the introduction of the implied results nonprejudicial.

No Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Dismiss Case on Court's Own Motion for Insufficient Evidence: Brady was charged with DUI, fourth or subsequent offense, arising from circumstances surrounding a single-vehicle accident in which Brady swerved off the highway, hit a rock wall, and rolled the vehicle. After the state's case in chief, Brady moved for a directed verdict of acquittal, but the motion was denied. Brady was subsequently convicted and contended on appeal that the trial court erred when it did not dismiss the case on its own motion because the evidence was far from overwhelming, arguing that taken as a whole, the evidence was insufficient to submit to the jury because there was no direct or even circumstantial evidence that he had anything to drink, much less was intoxicated, at the time of the accident. However, there was circumstantial evidence of conduct before and after the accident that could have led the jury to believe Brady had been drinking. When circumstantial evidence is susceptible to differing interpretations, it is within the province of the jury to decide which will prevail. The jury apparently did not believe that the wreck happened because Brady's car malfunctioned, that his injuries accounted for his drunken behavior, or that his apparent intoxication when officers tracked him down at home after the accident was the consequence of a single beer that he drank after the accident. Taken in a light most favorable to the state, a reasonable juror could have found Brady guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and it was not error for the trial court to allow the evidence to go to the jury. St. v. Brady, 2000 MT 282, 302 M 174, 13 P3d 941, 57 St. Rep. 1178 (2000).

Admissibility of Proof of Refusal to Take Sobriety Test Not Violative of Separation of Powers Doctrine: Robertson claimed that by enacting 61-8-404, regarding admission of evidence of a person's refusal to take a sobriety test, the Legislature unconstitutionally infringed on the function of courts to determine the admissibility of evidence, in violation of the separation of powers doctrine. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that ultimately, the admissibility of evidence lies with the court pursuant to Rule 104, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Legislature routinely passes laws that determine whether certain kinds of evidence are admissible, without violating the separation of powers doctrine in the process. Further, "admissible" means that evidence may, but is not required, to be admitted. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also St. v. Long, 778 P2d 1027 (Wash. 1989).

DUI Test Result Improperly Admitted Without Establishing Requisite Basis for Reliability — Harmless Error: The City Court abused its discretion when it allowed horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) field test results into evidence without first establishing the requisite scientific basis for the test's reliability, as required by Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998). However, in this case, Robertson failed two other field sobriety tests, refused to perform the tests again after having already failed them, refused to submit to a Breathalyzer test, smelled of alcohol, had slurred speech, and exhibited an obvious lack of balance after getting out of his vehicle—all of which constituted other overwhelming evidence of guilt of DUI, rendering the error in allowing HGN test results harmless. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also St. v. Chavez-Villa, 2012 MT 250, 366 Mont. 519, 289 P.3d 113.

Finding That Three of Four Prior DUI Convictions Constitutionally Valid Affirmed — Use Proper to Support Felony Fifth Offense: In defending against felony DUI fifth offense, Brown raised various issues regarding the constitutionality of the prior four convictions. Allocating the respective burdens of proof as set forth in St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), the District Court correctly found that the state met its burden of proving the constitutional validity of three of four of Brown's prior convictions. The court balanced Brown's contentions that he did not recall being informed of his right to counsel and did not sign a waiver of his right to counsel when he pleaded guilty to the prior charges with the state's evidence in the form of the Justice's Court Judge who read Brown his rights in three of the four original trials. Declining to narrowly prescribe the type of direct, affirmative evidence necessary for the state to prove the constitutionality of prior convictions, the Supreme Court found that Brown's signature on an advisement of rights form and a waiver of rights form were but factors to be considered in the totality of the circumstances. The District Court is in the best position to weigh each party's evidence and determine which will prevail and did so here. The evidence was properly used to support enhanced felony charges. St. v. Brown, 1999 MT 143, 295 M 5, 982 P2d 1030, 56 St. Rep. 560 (1999).

DUI Field Sobriety Eye Tests and Admission of General and Novel Scientific Testimony: Not all scientific evidence is subject to the Daubert standard. The Daubert test should be used only to determine the admissibility of novel scientific evidence. In addition, and whether or not the scientific evidence is novel, a court presented with scientific evidence is encouraged to follow the Barmeyer decision and liberally construe the rules of evidence so as to admit all relevant expert testimony, the weight of which may be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Nystagmus is the involuntary jerking of the eyeball resulting from the body's attempt to maintain balance and orientation. It may be aggravated by alcohol. The inability of the eyes to maintain visual fixation (a jerking movement of the eyes) as they are turned to the side is known as horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN). The HGN test is a common field sobriety test. It measures various aspects of these involuntary, jerking eye movements. This is a scientific test in that science, not common knowledge, provides the legitimacy for the test. The HGN evidence could have a disproportionate impact on the jury's decision because of the test's scientific nature and because the jury may not understand the nature of the test or the methodology of its procedure. The test has been used for decades, and it is not novel scientific evidence. Therefore, the Daubert standard does not apply to its admissibility. However, the court must conduct a conventional Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), analysis and adhere to Barmeyer to determine admissibility. An officer testifying as to the results of a test that the officer administered must be shown to have proper training in the test and to have administered the test in accordance with that training (though a proper foundation for testifying as to test results does not constitute an adequate foundation to testify as to the scientific basis for the test). In the present case, the officer testified that he had 40 hours of field sobriety tests (including HGN) training, stated how he administered the test to defendant, and stated that defendant failed. However, there was no evidence establishing that the officer had special training or education or adequate knowledge to qualify him to testify that everyone's eyes exhibit nystagmus at maximum deviation and that with the introduction of alcohol, the nystagmus becomes more prevalent and does not cease. Thus, there was insufficient foundation for that statement, and the lower court abused its discretion by allowing the officer to testify as to the test results. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999), and Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000).

Admissibility of Government Pamphlets on Alcohol Consumption — Hearsay Exception: In a DUI trial, Department of Justice pamphlets relating to alcohol consumption were admitted in evidence for the limited purpose of showing that they were Department publications. The judge admonished the jury that the pamphlets were not admitted for their accuracy or truth. Defendant argued that they should have been admitted for their content, truth, and accuracy under the public records exception to the hearsay rule. Defendant failed to lay a proper foundation for admission under that exception because he did not show that the pamphlets were derived from the Department's regularly conducted and recorded activities, were published as a result of a duty imposed on the Department by law, or were the result of an investigation made under authority of law. St. v. Thompson, 237 M 384, 773 P2d 722, 46 St. Rep. 887 (1989).

Knowledge of Term of Art Shown Through Testimony — Evidence of Prior Crimes Admissible: When a defendant understands the intricacy of proving a legal term of art and attempts through his own testimony to subvert proof of this element, he has clearly shown knowledge. A defendant who said he was not familiar with the term "under the influence" at the time of arrest and did not believe he was under the influence when arrested, opened the door to evidence of previous DUI convictions, which evidence was then properly admitted under the knowledge exception of Rule 404(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). St. v. Kinney, 230 M 281, 750 P2d 436, 45 St. Rep. 205 (1988).

DUI Conviction Partially Based on Anonymous Tips — Substantial Independent Evidence to Support Conviction: The District Court did not err in allowing evidence and argument on the contents of two anonymous phone calls reporting a speeding car when the vehicle description, license number, speed, and direction of travel were corroborated by police officers. These facts constituted reasonable suspicion justifying a stop which "ripened into probable cause to arrest for DUI" upon the officers' observations of the defendant's impaired motor functions, and they indicated substantial evidence independent of the anonymous tips to support the conviction. St. v. Shaffer, 227 M 221, 738 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 1029 (1987).

Motion to Suppress Results of Breathalyzer Test Denied — Affirmed on Appeal — No Transcript Forwarded: Charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, defendant moved to suppress results of Breathalyzer test. The Justice of the Peace denied the motion. In a bench trial the Justice Court found defendant guilty. On appeal to the District Court, defendant renewed his suppression motion on a set of stipulated facts. Motion was denied and defendant was convicted by a jury of violating 61-8-406, but was acquitted of charges under 61-8-401. On appeal to the Supreme Court, defendant stated that no trial transcript was being forwarded since the appeal of the denial of the suppression motion could be reviewed upon the face of the stipulated facts. The state included excerpts of the trial transcript that buttressed the lower court's decision on the suppression motion. The Supreme Court approved the state's approach since the suppression motion denial was not final and could be reversed at any time. St. v. Sharp, 217 M 40, 702 P2d 959, 42 St. Rep. 1009 (1985).

Foundation Required for Admissibility of Blood Test Results: Defendant on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs in violation of 61-8-401 is entitled to the procedural safeguards of the Administrative Rules of Montana. To admit evidence of blood alcohol content and a test report, the state must lay a foundation pursuant to 61-8-404 which incorporates ARM 23.3.931. The laboratory analysis must be done in a laboratory qualified under the rules of the Department of Justice. The report must be prepared in accordance with the rules of the Department. If a blood sample is taken, the person withdrawing the blood must be demonstrably qualified to do so. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985).

No Indication of Weight Trial Court Placed on Inadmissible Evidence — New Trial: In the appeal of a conviction under 61-8-401 for driving under the influence of alcohol, the Supreme Court ruled inadmissible blood test results entered into evidence by the trial court. The Supreme Court further ruled that it could not decide whether there was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant without the blood test results because the Supreme Court had no indication of the weight the trial court placed upon the test in its decision. The case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985).

Sufficiency of Evidence: Facts of accident scene, testimony of highway patrolman and ambulance attendant, admissions of defendant and daughter, and blood alcohol test constituted substantial and sufficient evidence to support conviction. St. v. Longacre, 168 M 311, 542 P2d 1221, 32 St. Rep. 1133 (1975), followed in St. v. Peterson, 236 M 247, 769 P2d 1221, 46 St. Rep. 333 (1989).

Improperly Conducted Test: Although it was improper to admit results of blood test showing that deceased's blood contained 0.15% alcohol by weight where testimony disclosed that tube used to collect blood sample had previously contained formalin and formaldehyde which could have resulted in higher than actual alcohol content result, error was not reversible in view of other testimony concerning deceased's state of intoxication. Benner v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 150 M 97, 430 P2d 648 (1967).

Opinion Evidence: Opinion evidence of witnesses for the state who had observed defendant, to the effect that he was under the influence of liquor while driving an automobile, was properly admitted. This, together with evidence that an accident occurred at the time he was so driving, showed the circumstances under which the offense was committed. St. v. Schnell, 107 M 579, 88 P2d 19 (1939).

PRESUMPTIONS

Administration of Breath Test Not Mandatory: Beanblossom was arrested for felony DUI and was read an implied consent advisory. When asked if he would consent to a breath test, Beanblossom consented, but the test was never administered. Beanblossom moved to dismiss the charge based on the officer's failure to administer the test, contending that the language of 61-8-402 mandatorily required administration of the test, and that failure to do so violated his due process rights. The motion was denied, and Beanblossom appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a driver in Montana is presumed to have consented to taking a breath test if an officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the driver is intoxicated. However, the language in 61-8-402(2) merely mandates who must administer a breath test, but does not mandate administration of the test. Thus, denial of Beanblossom's motion to dismiss was not erroneous. St. v. Beanblossom, 2002 MT 351, 313 M 394, 61 P3d 165 (2002). See also St. v. Entzel, 805 P2d 228 (Wash. 1991).

Inability to Recall Advice of Right to Counsel Insufficient to Rebut Presumption of Regularity: Big Hair was arrested for a fourth DUI and at trial moved to quash references to his previous convictions. The basis for his motion was that he could not recall having been advised in those previous proceedings of his right to counsel. Citing St. v. Okland, 238 M 10, 941 P2d 431 (1997), the Supreme Court noted that in Montana, there is a rebuttable presumption of regularity in previous DUI convictions and that the presumption can only be overcome by direct evidence of irregularity in those proceedings presented by the defendant. In the case of Big Hair's trial, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no such direct evidence, only Big Hair's statement that he could not recall having been advised of his right to counsel. The Supreme Court concluded that like the defendants in St. v. Perry, 283 M 34, 938 P2d 1325 (1997), and St. v. Stubblefield, 283 M 292, 940 P2d 444 (1997), Big Hair failed to rebut the presumption, and therefore the court affirmed his conviction. St. v. Big Hair, 1998 MT 61, 288 M 135, 955 P2d 1352, 55 St. Rep. 257 (1998). See also St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Mandatory Presumption of Intoxication — Jury Instruction — Unconstitutional Shifting of Burden: Following an accident in which defendant struck and killed a pedestrian, defendant was charged with negligent homicide after a breath test registered his blood alcohol content at 0.12. Defendant appealed his conviction, alleging that the jury instruction that a blood alcohol level greater than 0.10 (see 2003 amendment) raised a mandatory rebuttable presumption that he was under the influence of alcohol. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, stating that the instruction requiring the jury to find intoxication "unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its nonexistence" may have led the jury to believe that defendant not only had to introduce contrary evidence but had an affirmative duty to convince the jury that he was not intoxicated. A mandatory rebuttable presumption that shifts the burden of persuasion to the defendant violates due process. The instruction was not harmless, and the court remanded for new trial. St. v. Leverett, 245 M 124, 799 P2d 119, 47 St. Rep. 1753 (1990).

Presumptions Formerly Applicable in Criminal Actions Only: Prior to its amendment, subsection (3) of this section was applicable only to criminal prosecutions for driving while under the influence of alcohol. Thus, the District Court's refusal to incorporate the presumptions of subsection (3) into its jury instructions in a wrongful death action was proper. Scofield v. Estate of Wood, 211 M 59, 683 P2d 1300, 41 St. Rep. 1212 (1984).

Prosecutorial Comment on Presumption of Intoxication: In negligent homicide trial of defendant involved in auto collision while he was driving after drinking, a forensic scientist testified that blood taken from defendant 2 hours after the accident had a .17 blood alcohol content and that at that level one's driving ability would be obviously impaired and speech, hearing, balance, judgment, reaction time, and other motor skills would be affected. The trial judge ruled that because the charge was negligent homicide he would not instruct the jury on the statutory presumption that one with a 0.10 blood alcohol content level (see 2003 amendment) is under the influence. Prosecutor twice disregarded the ruling, stating in the cross-examination of a witness and in his closing argument that 0.10 is the legal level of intoxication. Prosecutor used an improper and unacceptable tactic, but defendant was not prejudiced as there was already sufficient evidence as to what a 0.17 blood alcohol content level meant. St. v. Morgan, 198 M 391, 646 P2d 1177, 39 St. Rep. 1072 (1982).

PROBABLE CAUSE

Clarification of Authority of Out-of-Jurisdiction Peace Officer in Making Arrest: The defendant appealed his conviction of DUI, arguing the District Court should have dismissed the charge since his arrest was illegal because the out-of-jurisdiction peace officer who arrested him exceeded her authority under the private person arrest statute by investigating the defendant for DUI. In affirming the defendant's conviction, the Supreme Court revisited its analyses in Maney v. St., 255 Mont. 270, 842 P.2d 704 (1992), St. v. Hendrickson, 283 Mont. 105, 939 P.2d 985 (1997), and St. v. Williamson, 1998 MT 199, 290 Mont. 321, 965 P.2d 231, and concluded that the assumption underlying these cases — that if a peace officer lacks authority to act in the capacity of a peace officer, then the only alternative is that the peace officer acts in the capacity of a private person — is incorrect. The Supreme Court concluded that an out-of-jurisdiction peace officer must meet the arrest standard that applies to a private person in the same circumstances:

if probable cause exists to believe that a person is committing or has committed an offense and the existing circumstances require the person's immediate arrest. If this standard is met, the officer may then follow the procedures applicable to peace officers when processing an arrest. St. v. Updegraff, 2011 MT 321, 363 Mont. 123, 267 P.3d 28.

Officer's Assessment of Objective Facts Sufficient Probable Cause to Arrest: The District Court did not err in denying a motion to suppress based on an allegation of insufficient probable cause given the arresting officer's assessment of the objective facts, including a vehicle in a ditch, repeated futile efforts to back out of the ditch, strong smell of alcohol, glassy and bloodshot eyes, slurred speech, failure to understand simple instructions, and the failure to maintain balance and bodily functions. Probable cause must be based on an assessment of all relevant circumstances, evaluated in light of the knowledge of a trained law enforcement officer, and the absence of field sobriety tests does not fatally flaw the probable cause determination. St. v. Hafner, 2010 MT 233, 358 Mont. 137, 243 P.3d 435.

No Reason to View With Distrust Failure of Officer to Record Events Creating Particularized Suspicion for Traffic Stop: An officer observed Deines drive through two red lights without stopping, but the officer failed to record either act. Deines was subsequently stopped for a traffic violation and was then arrested for DUI as a result of the traffic stop. Following conviction, Deines appealed on grounds that because the officer failed to record the events that created a particularized suspicion for the traffic stop, the officer's testimony should be viewed with distrust in the judicial assessment of particularized suspicion. The Supreme Court noted a line of cases that "view with distrust" the failure of law enforcement officers to preserve a record of particular evidentiary matters, but the court declined to extend those cases to the circumstances of this case. The prior cases were related primarily to officers gathering evidence in the controlled environment of a police station, and the court recognized that circumstances in the field may preclude the creation of a tangible record. Additionally, the court noted the passage of HB 534 (Ch. 214, L. 2009), which requires the electronic recording of custodial interrogations in most felony cases and essentially renders the "view with distrust" line of cases moot, so future application of the view with distrust precedent is doubtful. Therefore, there is no reason to view with distrust the failure of a police officer to record events creating particularized suspicion for a traffic stop. St. v. Deines, 2009 MT 179, 351 M 1, 208 P3d 857 (2009), followed in St. v. Wagner, 2013 MT 159, 370 Mont. 381, 303 P.3d 285.

Criteria of Particularized Suspicion or Reasonable Grounds for Peace Officer to Make Investigative Stop — Officer's Experience and Training as Factor in Totality of Circumstances: For a peace officer to have particularized suspicion or reasonable grounds for an investigatory stop, the officer must be possessed of (1) objective data and articulable facts from which to make certain reasonable inferences; and (2) a resulting suspicion that the person to be stopped is committing or is about to commit an offense. Although the peace officer's experience and training may be a factor in determining what sort of reasonable inferences the officer is entitled to make based on the officer's observations, experience, and training, they are not necessarily the defining element of the test. Rather, courts should look at the facts and the totality of the circumstances of each case. Here, the officer was possessed of objective data and articulable facts that Brown's vehicle was barely moving along a public highway at 2:51 a.m. with its lights on and that it suddenly pulled over, came to a stop, and shut off its lights. Given that this sort of conduct can be indicative of intoxicated driving, the officer could reasonably suspect that the driver was DUI. On approaching the vehicle, the officer detected the odor of alcohol coming from Brown's vehicle, and observed Brown's slurred and slow speech, slow and staggered exit from the vehicle, and explanation of a recently absent passenger when no other person was in the vicinity, and these objective observations allowed the officer's particularized suspicion to escalate into probable cause for a DUI arrest. Brown v. St., 2009 MT 64, 349 M 408, 203 P3d 842 (2009), clarifying St. v. Gopher, 193 M 189, 631 P2d 293 (1981), St. v. Schatz, 194 M 59, 634 P2d 1193 (1981), and St. v. Morsette, 201 M 233, 654 P2d 503 (1982), and followed in St. v. Cybulski, 2009 MT 70, 349 M 429, 204 P3d 7 (2009), and St. v. Larson, 2010 MT 236, 358 Mont. 156, 243 P.3d 1130. See also U.S. v. Cortez, 449 US 411 (1981), and St. v. Hilgendorf, 2009 MT 158, 350 M 412, 208 P3d 401 (2009).

Authority and Probable Cause to Make DUI Arrest: Ditton contended that the city police officer who arrested Ditton for DUI lacked authority to make the arrest because the arrest occurred outside city limits. Ditton also asserted that the officer lacked probable cause to make the arrest. Nevertheless, Ditton was convicted of DUI. Ditton appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed on both issues. Although the arrest was outside city limits, pursuant to 7-32-4301 and relevant city ordinances, police officers had authority to conduct traffic stops within 5 miles of city limits. The arrest was within that area, so the officer had authority to make the stop. In addition, probable cause was present based on Ditton's overall driving, including striking a stop sign after the officer activated emergency lights, and an audio and video recording of the interactions between Ditton and the officer. The interactions, which included Ditton's performance in field sobriety tests, Ditton's overall appearance and level of functionality, and Ditton's driving, were sufficient to allow the officer to make a probable cause determination. St. v. Ditton, 2009 MT 57, 349 M 306, 203 P3d 806 (2009).

Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: Defendant was swerving within her lane so as to touch dividing and fog lines, cross the dividing line, and strike the curb when executing a right-hand turn. Thus the court's conclusions of law in denial of the motion to suppress evidence in a DUI case were correct. St. v. Ross, 2008 MT 369, 346 M 460, 197 P3d 937 (2008).

Driving Without Properly Functioning Brake Lights Constitutes Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: Operating a motor vehicle that is not equipped with functional brake lights is a misdemeanor offense, and thus deputy's decision to pull over defendant's vehicle was supported by a particularized suspicion. St. v. Faber, 2008 MT 368, 346 M 449, 197 P3d 941 (2008).

Slow Operation of Vehicle and Buildup of Traffic Behind Vehicle Establishing Particularized Suspicion That Driver Impeding Traffic — Stop Warranted: Benders was driving between 25 and 40 miles an hour in a 50-mile-an-hour zone and continued to drive at the reduced speed when the speed limit increased to 70 miles an hour. No vehicles were in front of Benders, but at least four vehicles were following, and additional vehicles were quickly approaching. An officer was concerned that Benders' slow driving was creating a dangerous situation even though there was nothing to indicate a need to drive at a reduced speed. The officer stopped Benders for impeding traffic pursuant to 61-8-311, and Benders was subsequently arrested for DUI. Benders moved to suppress all evidence relating to the initial stop, but the motion was denied. On appeal, Benders asserted that the motion should have been granted because the officer did not have a particularized suspicion to justify the stop. The Supreme Court affirmed. The combination of slow speed and the buildup of vehicles provided the officer with sufficient information that Bender was impeding traffic, justifying the stop. Benders also argued that the state failed to establish the minimum speed required under 61-8-311 and thus failed to show that his speed was slow enough to violate the law. However, the relevant determination under 61-8-311 is not the speed of the vehicle, but the effect of the slow speed on the flow of traffic. Benders also claimed that a violation of 61-8-311 requires a showing that a defendant has created unsafe driving conditions and an increased risk of an accident. However, such a showing is not required under the statute, and it would be inappropriate to conclude that an officer must wait for an unsafe driving condition to arise before concluding that traffic was being impeded. St. v. Benders, 2006 MT 275, 334 M 231, 146 P3d 751 (2006).

Observation of Traffic Violation Constituting Objective Data of Wrongdoing — Investigative Stop Justified: Thompson contended that because an officer did not observe Thompson speeding, driving erratically, or causing an accident or near accident and because the officer did not charge Thompson with any driving offense other than DUI, the officer did not have reasonable cause to justify an investigative stop. The Supreme Court disagreed. The officer testified that Thompson's vehicle made a wide turn and crossed over the centerline into the oncoming lane of traffic and that after Thompson overcorrected, Thompson continued to swerve in his own driving lane, rode the centerline, and swerved off the right side of the road, which led the officer to believe that Thompson might be intoxicated. The officer's observations constituted objective data from which an experienced officer could infer that the occupant of the vehicle was engaged in wrongdoing that was sufficient to justify the investigative stop. St. v. Thompson, 2006 MT 274, 334 M 226, 146 P3d 756 (2006), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004), and distinguishing St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998), and Morris v. St., 2001 MT 13, 304 M 114, 18 P3d 1003 (2001).

State Not Required to Prove Alcohol Consumption Rather Than Diabetic Condition Caused Failed Sobriety Tests — Sufficient Probable Cause for DUI Arrest: Ditton, arrested for DUI following an accident, claimed that his diabetes, rather than alcohol, caused his poor performance on field sobriety tests and argued that the state had a burden to prove that alcohol, rather than diabetes, diminished his capacity to drive. Distinguishing Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716 (1998), in which the court reversed the implied consent suspension of a defendant's driver's license because the state lacked probable cause for arrest, the Supreme Court ruled that Ditton's allegations regarding his diabetic condition were a matter of defense that were presented to and rejected by the jury. The state needed to prove only the elements of the criminal offense and presented sufficient evidence to sustain the DUI charge. St. v. Ditton, 2006 MT 235, 333 M 483, 144 P3d 783 (2006).

Motion to Suppress DUI Blood Test Evidence Obtained by Investigative Subpoena Properly Denied: Following a motorcycle accident, Fregien admitted to a responding firefighter that he had consumed some beer, and the firefighter and a highway patrol officer noticed the odor of alcohol on Fregien's breath. The firefighter's affidavit supported an investigative subpoena for Fregien's blood test results obtained at the hospital. Fregien contended that the evidence did not rise to the level of probable cause and that the blood test results should have been suppressed, but the suppression motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under St. v. Nelson, 283 M 231, 941 P2d 441 (1997), the facts warranted an honest belief in the mind of a reasonable and prudent person that Fregien had committed the offense of DUI, thereby establishing probable cause for the investigative subpoena for Fregien's blood test results, and the motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Fregien, 2006 MT 18, 331 M 18, 127 P3d 1048 (2006).

Smell of Alcohol and Driver's Admission of Minority Age — Sufficient Probable Cause for Search of Vehicle: When Shaw was stopped for speeding, she told the officer that she was 18 years old, could not produce proof of insurance, and had a suspended driver's license. During the conversation, the officer smelled alcohol on Shaw and in the vehicle. Shaw consented to a search of the car, and the officer discovered an open container of alcohol and drug paraphernalia. Following conviction, Shaw appealed on grounds that the officer threatened to impound the car and illegally obtained the evidence underlying the charges. The Supreme Court affirmed. The smell of alcohol, coupled with Shaw's admission that she was a minor, provided sufficient probable cause for a search of the vehicle, and Shaw knowingly and voluntarily consented to the search. Despite conflicting evidence, the trial court assessed the credibility and demeanor of the witnesses, and the Supreme Court declined to impose its own resolution of the conflicts on appeal. St. v. Shaw, 2005 MT 141, 327 M 281, 114 P3d 198 (2005), overruled, to the extent that a finding of probable cause is required in conjunction with the consent exception to the search warrant requirement, in St. v. Copelton, 2006 MT 182, 333 M 91, 140 P3d 1074 (2006).

Violation of City Ordinances Constituting Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: An officer saw Todd drive into a closed city park and exit his vehicle with an open beer. When the officer approached Todd's vehicle to inform him that the park was closed and that the city had an open container ordinance, the officer observed that Todd appeared to be intoxicated, and Todd was arrested for DUI. Todd moved to dismiss on grounds that the officer lacked a particularized suspicion to investigate because Todd had not broken any driving laws. The Supreme Court disagreed. A particularized suspicion exists if an officer believes that a person or occupant of a vehicle has committed, is committing, or is about to commit an offense, including a violation of a city ordinance. Thus, Todd's violation of the city ordinances was sufficient to provide the officer with a particularized suspicion of an offense to obtain or verify an account of Todd's presence or conduct, and based on the officer's subsequent observations of objective data indicating Todd's intoxication, the investigative stop was justified. Todd's motion to dismiss was properly denied, and Todd's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Todd, 2005 MT 108, 327 M 65, 111 P3d 677 (2005).

No Reasonable Grounds to Believe Defendant DUI — Sole Testimony of Defendant Sufficient to Prove No DUI Occurred: Eustance drove to the airport to pick up his daughter and grandson who were arriving on a flight. Because of hip pain, it was more comfortable to wait in his car. Eustance parked in the lot of a nearby car rental agency and fell asleep. Eustance was later awakened by a Deputy Sheriff who requested that Eustance perform field sobriety tests and a breath test, but Eustance refused to perform both tests, so his license was seized and suspended. At a hearing on a petition for reinstatement of his license, Eustance was the only witness. He testified that he had been operating his vehicle in a safe and legal manner prior to arrest, that his ability to drive was not impaired, and that he did not believe there was reasonable suspicion or probable cause to justify his arrest. The District Court agreed and granted the petition reinstating the license. On appeal, the state cited Hunter v. St., 264 M 84, 869 P2d 787 (1994), contending that Eustance had not met the burden of establishing that suspension of the license was improper because without the deputy's testimony, Eustance's own testimony was self-serving and insufficient to meet the burden. The Supreme Court disagreed. The testimony of one witness is sufficient to prove any fact. Nowhere in Hunter was it held that a petitioner in a license reinstatement hearing cannot meet the burden of proof without testimony from the arresting officer or that a petitioner's testimony, without more, is insufficient to meet the burden of proof. Thus, the District Court was entitled to accept Eustance's uncontradicted testimony as true. Absent evidence supporting the state's position, Eustance met the burden of proof and his license was properly reinstated. Eustance v. St., 2005 MT 34, 326 M 77, 107 P3d 478 (2005).

Crossing Centerline Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: An officer observed Loney crossing the centerline several times, and Loney was stopped for a traffic violation and subsequently charged with DUI. The District Court granted Loney's motion to dismiss for lack of particularized suspicion, citing Morris v. St., 2001 MT 13, 304 M 114, 18 P3d 1003 (2001). The state appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Morris was distinguishable because in that case, defendant was stopped only for DUI and not for driving in a manner justifying a traffic stop, while Loney violated 61-8-321. Crossing the centerline constituted a sufficient particularized suspicion to justify the stop, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. St. v. Loney, 2004 MT 204, 322 M 305, 95 P3d 691 (2004), following Widdicombe v. State ex rel. LaFond, 2004 MT 49, 320 M 133, 85 P3d 1271 (2004), and followed in St. v. Otto, 2004 MT 338, 324 M 217, 102 P3d 522 (2004), and St. v. Murray, 2011 MT 10, 359 Mont. 123, 247 P.3d 721.

Insufficient Probable Cause for Citizen Arrest — Suppression of Evidence Proper: At the visitor center at Malmstrom Air Force Base, security officers smelled alcohol on May's breath when May sought to enter the base. Because May was a civilian, the officers believed that May could be detained but not arrested, so they held May's driver's license, registration, and proof of insurance, and May was told to wait until a highway patrol officer arrived. May was subsequently arrested for DUI and at trial asked the District Court to suppress evidence from the arrest on grounds that the arrest was not based on probable cause and was thus illegal. Following denial of the suppression motions and conviction, May appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Applying the test in St. v. Widenhofer, 286 M 341, 950 P2d 1383 (1997), the court determined that May's detention constituted a citizen arrest. The test for probable cause for a citizen arrest is whether a reasonable person, under personally known facts and circumstances, is warranted in believing that someone is committing or has committed an offense. Here, the security officers' sole basis for detaining May was the smell of alcohol, but the odor of alcohol emanating from May's person, standing alone, was insufficient to establish probable cause for a citizen arrest. Thus, the arrest was illegal, and evidence related to the arrest should have been suppressed. St. v. May, 2004 MT 45, 320 M 116, 86 P3d 42 (2004).

Defendant Informed of Right to Independent Blood Test After Administration of Portable Breath Test — No Violation of Due Process Rights: After Feldbrugge was stopped for speeding, the investigating officer noticed that Feldbrugge seemed confused, had difficulty removing his driver's license from his wallet and producing proof of registration and insurance, had bloodshot and glassy eyes and slurred speech, and was unsteady on his feet. The officer did not perform field sobriety tests, but did ask Feldbrugge to take a portable breath test (PBT). The officer read a short advisory that did not contain information regarding Feldbrugge's right to obtain an independent blood test to challenge the PBT results. Feldbrugge consented to the PBT, which he failed, and was arrested and taken to the county jail. Before being administered an Intoxilyzer breath test at the jail, Feldbrugge was read the informed consent advisory form, which included a statement regarding Feldbrugge's right to obtain an independent blood test. At trial, Feldbrugge moved to suppress the evidence on grounds that his due process rights were violated because he was not informed of the right to an independent blood test until after the PBT was administered. However, the notion that Feldbrugge had a choice between taking a PBT or obtaining an independent blood test, without penalty, was misguided. Here, it was unnecessary for the officer to inform Feldbrugge of the right to an independent blood test prior to requesting the PBT because even if Feldbrugge had been so informed, his options remained the same: consent to the PBT or refuse and have his driver's license seized. The officer was required to timely inform Feldbrugge that he could obtain an independent blood test in addition to the PBT and Intoxilyzer breath test so that Feldbrugge could gather exculpatory evidence. Informing Feldbrugge after the PBT was timely, so Feldbrugge's due process rights were not violated. Because the PBT results were admissible, Feldbrugge's arrest was supported by probable cause, and the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Feldbrugge, 2002 MT 154, 310 M 368, 50 P3d 1067 (2002).

Elements of Community Caretaker Doctrine — Particularized Suspicion Not Required in Case of Safety Stop: About 3:05 a.m., an officer on routine patrol stopped to investigate a vehicle parked beside a highway with its lights out but with its motor running. Lovegren was in the driver's seat and appeared to be asleep, but he did not respond when the officer knocked on the window. When the officer opened the door, Lovegren awoke and stated, "I was drinking." The officer noticed that Lovegren's eyes were bloodshot and smelled alcohol. The officer had Lovegren perform field sobriety tests, which Lovegren failed, and arrested Lovegren for DUI. Lovegren moved to suppress all evidence, claiming that the search was illegal because the officer had no particularized suspicion of any wrongdoing. The District Court denied the motion on grounds that a particularized suspicion was not necessary because the officer had a duty to investigate for Lovegren's own safety. Lovegren appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed pursuant to the community caretaker doctrine. The court applied the following test to determine whether an officer's actions fall under the doctrine: (1) as long as there are objective, specific, and articulable facts from which an experienced officer would suspect that a citizen is in need of help or is in peril, the officer has a right to stop and investigate; (2) if the citizen is in need of aid, the officer may take appropriate action to render assistance or mitigate the peril; and (3) once the officer is assured that the citizen is not in peril and is not in need of assistance or that the peril has been mitigated, any actions beyond that constitute a seizure implicating constitutional protections afforded by the right of privacy and the right against illegal search and seizure. In this case, when the officer opened the door to check on Lovegren's well-being and Lovegren awoke and voluntarily stated that he had been drinking, the officer then noticed other signs of intoxication that constituted a particularized suspicion to make a further investigative stop that eventually developed into probable cause for an arrest. It would have been a dereliction of the officer's duty if, after knocking on the window and receiving no response, the officer had walked away and continued on patrol. Thus, the escalation of events leading to Lovegren's arrest was proper, and denial of the motion to suppress the evidence of the investigation was not erroneous. St. v. Lovegren, 2002 MT 153, 310 M 358, 51 P3d 471 (2002), following Grinde v. St., 249 M 77, 813 P2d 473 (1991), and Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), and followed in St. v. Reiner, 2003 MT 243, 317 M 304, 77 P3d 210 (2003), St. v. Nelson, 2004 MT 13, 319 M 250, 84 P3d 25 (2004), St. v. Litschauer, 2005 MT 331, 330 M 22, 126 P3d 456 (2005), St. v. Wheeler, 2006 MT 38, 331 M 179, 134 P3d 38 (2006), and St. v. Vaughn, 2007 MT 164, 338 M 97, 164 P3d 873 (2007). The Lovegren community caretaker doctrine was also applied in St. v. Seaman, 2005 MT 307, 329 M 429, 124 P3d 1137 (2005). See also Henry v. U.S., 361 US 98 (1959), Terry v. Ohio, 392 US 1 (1968), and Cady v. Dombrowski, 413 US 433 (1973).

Shining of Police Spotlight Into Vehicle Not Considered Seizure: After Clayton left a Bozeman bar, he noticed that he was being followed by a police car, so he pulled to the right side of the road and stopped. As the police car pulled in behind Clayton's vehicle, the officer shined a spotlight into Clayton's vehicle to see how many people were in it. Before the police car came to a stop, Clayton got out of his vehicle, looked at the police car, and began to run. The officer immediately recognized Clayton from a prior involvement and knew that Clayton's driver's license had been revoked, so the officer gave chase, eventually catching Clayton and placing him under arrest for obstructing an officer. Clayton was subsequently also charged with fourth offense felony DUI and driving with a suspended license. Clayton argued that he was seized when the officer pulled in behind his vehicle and shined the spotlight into it, because the officer did not have a particularized suspicion to effect a stop, and contended that he felt restrained and reasonably believed that he was not free to leave. The District Court concluded that the police acted reasonably and that when Clayton turned and faced the officer and gave away his identity, the police had particularized suspicion. The question for the Supreme Court was whether the police had effected a stop prior to that time and whether a seizure occurred. The state relied on Calif. v. Hodari D., 499 US 621 (1991), for the proposition that a seizure requires either a physical restraint or a submission to an assertion of authority, arguing that even if a stop did occur, the police had particularized suspicion to effect the stop and that the police action was reasonable in nature and scope. The Supreme Court rejected Hodari D., holding that it does not comport with Montana constitutional requirements, and instead affirmed the test in St. v. Roberts, 1999 MT 59, 293 M 476, 977 P2d 974 (1999), that no seizure occurs unless, in view of all the circumstances surrounding the incident, a reasonable person would have felt that the person was not free to leave. In this case, the fact of the police slowing down and coming to a stop behind Clayton's vehicle, and shining a spotlight into the vehicle, did not amount to such a show of authority to meet the Roberts test. The police did not use a siren or emergency lights, the encounter took place on a public street, and the police did not exit the police car and approach Clayton. Thus, no stop occurred prior to Clayton exiting his vehicle, and the District Court was affirmed. St. v. Clayton, 2002 MT 67, 309 M 215, 45 P3d 30 (2002).

Failure to Use Turn Signal Not Grounds for Traffic Stop: An officer responded to an anonymous complaint reporting a careless driver and observed a vehicle matching the description in a restaurant parking lot, but observed no activity that would justify a stop. The officer followed the vehicle when it departed and stopped it after the driver failed to signal a right-hand turn at an intersection, in violation of 61-8-336. Grindeland was subsequently arrested for DUI, but petitioned for reinstatement of his driving privileges on grounds that his failure to use turn signals did not violate the law and that the stop was thus not supported by a particularized suspicion of a criminal offense. The District Court agreed and reinstated

Grindeland's driving privileges. The state appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under 61-8-336(1), a driver is required to use a turn signal only when there is other traffic that might be affected by the turn. Although there were other vehicles in the area, there was insufficient objective data by which the officer could infer that the other vehicles may have been affected by Grindeland's turn, so the turn could not be considered illegal. Absent that objective data, the officer lacked a particularized suspicion upon which to make the stop, so the stop was illegal, and reinstatement of Grindeland's driving privileges was affirmed. Grindeland v. St., 2001 MT 196, 306 M 262, 32 P3d 767 (2001).

Erratic Driving at Night in Proximity to Bars — Totality of Circumstances Justifying Traffic Stop: Shortly after midnight, an officer observed Loiselle's vehicle drifting across the right traffic lane, crossing the white fog line, making several turns without signaling, and weaving. The officer pulled Loiselle over for an investigative stop, which resulted in a DUI charge. At trial, Loiselle moved to suppress evidence obtained during the stop, but the motion was denied, and Loiselle appealed. To make an investigatory stop, an officer must have a particularized and objective basis for suspecting criminal activity, and whether particularized suspicion exists is a question of fact determined by considering the totality of the circumstances. In this case, the totality of the circumstances justified the stop. Loiselle did not merely touch the fog line, but actually drove over it and proceeded on the shoulder of the road for at least 3 seconds. The behavior was preceded by erratic driving that caught the officer's attention and that occurred late at night in the proximity of several nearby bars. Irrespective of Loiselle's failure to use turn signals, to a 5-year veteran of the Sheriff's office, there was sufficient objective data from which the officer could suspect that the occupant of the vehicle had engaged in wrongdoing and commence an investigatory stop. St. v. Loiselle, 2001 MT 174, 306 M 166, 30 P3d 1097 (2001).

Public Duty Doctrine as Applied to Law Enforcement Personnel — Exception in Cases of Special Relationship: Trina admitted that she had been drinking when stopped in her vehicle by Officer Driscoll, who nevertheless believed that sufficient probable cause did not exist to arrest the woman. Instead, thinking Trina might be impaired, the officer suggested a ride home or that Trina walk the 2-mile distance and warned Trina about returning to the vehicle. Trina decided instead to walk to a phone and call for a ride and was killed in traffic. Trina's husband brought suit for civil damages under 42 U.S.C. 1983, claiming that the officer breached the duty to protect, in violation of Trina's due process rights. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, holding that because no probable cause existed for Trina's arrest, the officer had no duty to protect Trina from harm and that without a duty, the action failed. The public duty doctrine provides that a police officer's duty to protect and preserve the peace is owed to the public at large rather than to a particular person, unless a special relationship exists, thus giving rise to a special duty that is more particular than that owed to the public. A special relationship is established: (1) by a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which the plaintiff is a member, from a particular type of harm; (2) when a government agent undertakes specific action to protect a person or property; (3) by governmental actions that reasonably induce detrimental reliance by a member of the public; and (4) under certain circumstances when the agency has actual custody of the plaintiff or of a third person who harms the plaintiff. Relying on Stewart v. Standard Publishing Co., 102 M 43, 55 P2d 694 (1936), the Supreme Court agreed that although the officer may not have initially owed Trina a duty to protect, that duty was assumed as a matter of law when the officer prevented the woman from driving her car and ensured that she did not attempt to drive. The question of whether the duty to protect was breached is a question of fact for the jury, so summary dismissal was improper. Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999), clarifying and distinguishing Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), and followed in Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004). Nelson was followed, as to elements of exception to the public duty doctrine (nonlaw enforcement case), in Orr v. St., 2004 MT 354, 324 M 391, 106 P3d 100 (2004), and Prosser v. Kennedy Enterprises, Inc., 2008 MT 87, 342 M 209, 179 P3d 1178 (2008). See also Krieg v. Massey, 239 M 469, 781 P2d 277, 46 St. Rep. 1839 (1989), and Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

City Police Officer Making Arrest Outside Territorial Jurisdiction — Probable Cause Required:

A city police officer, investigating a phone call reporting a suspected drunk driver, pursued Williamson outside city limits and arrested him, although the officer observed no erratic driving or other indicators of alcohol impairment prior to stopping Williamson's truck. Williamson moved to suppress all the evidence on the basis that the officer did not have probable cause to make the stop, contending that probable cause was necessary because the officer was acting outside his territorial jurisdiction as a city police officer and that the information within the officer's knowledge at the time of the stop did not rise to the level of probable cause. Williamson's motion was denied. Clarifying the difference between the probable cause necessary to effectuate a valid arrest and the particularized suspicion necessary to justify an investigative stop, the Supreme Court noted that although an officer ordinarily needs only a particularized suspicion for a traffic stop, under these circumstances, the officer was outside his jurisdiction when the stop was made and was thus not acting within the scope of his authority as a peace officer. The criminal procedures in 46-5-401 and 46-6-311 were not available to the officer. Rather, as a peace officer acting outside his territorial jurisdiction, his authority was limited to that provided to private citizens under 46-6-502, so probable cause was required. The citizen informant's telephone report was not sufficient to establish probable cause because the relayed report was devoid of information as to why the informant believed that Williamson was intoxicated and the officer did not inquire into the basis of the report before stopping Williamson's truck. The report created, at most, a suspicion that an offense was being committed, but that suspicion alone was insufficient to establish probable cause. Even if the informant had sufficient information to establish probable cause for a citizen's arrest of Williamson, that information was not relayed to the officer, who thus did not possess sufficient information to make the stop. The judgment was reversed because the District Court erred in refusing to suppress the evidence. St. v. Williamson, 1998 MT 199, 290 M 321, 965 P2d 231, 55 St. Rep. 843 (1998), distinguishing St. v. Schoffner, 248 M 260, 811 P2d 548 (1991), and followed in St. v. Reiner, 2003 MT 243, 317 M 304, 77 P3d 210 (2003).

In St. v. Updegraff, 2011 MT 321, 363 Mont. 123, 267 P.3d 28, the Supreme Court clarified the authority of out-of-jurisdiction peace officers to make arrests, concluding that an out-of-jurisdiction peace officer must meet the arrest standard that applies to a private person in the same circumstances, and if this standard is met, the officer may then follow the procedures applicable to peace officers when processing an arrest.

Basis for DUI Arrest and Suspension of License for Breath Test Refusal: The officer who testified that he saw defendant drive from a bar at night with no headlights on, that she failed to immediately pull over when he put on his overhead lights and siren, that her eyes were bloodshot, and that she smelled of alcohol, fumbled for her driver's license, and failed two nonscientific field sobriety tests had probable cause to arrest her for DUI. Therefore, improper allowance of his testimony as to the scientific basis for a field sobriety eye test was harmless error. The lower court correctly concluded that her driver's license was lawfully suspended for failure to submit to a breath test and correctly refused to reinstate the license. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999).

Citizen Information Lacking Objective Data — No Particularized Suspicion of Wrongdoing to Warrant Investigative Traffic Stop: An anonymous citizen informant telephoned to notify police that a purple Chevrolet Camaro with a tan convertible top, driven by David Lee, was heading north toward Glasgow on the Fort Peck highway. The informant stated the belief that Lee was speeding and driving under the influence of alcohol. Officer Collins located the described vehicle on the indicated route and checked the vehicle's speed with radar. Lee was driving 52 miles an hour in a 55-mile-an-hour zone. Collins made a U-turn and speeded up behind the Camaro, at which point Lee slowed down to 35 miles an hour. Collins stopped the Camaro, determined that the driver was the person described in the dispatch report, and arrested Lee for driving under the influence. Relying on St. v. Gopher, 193 M 189, 631 P2d 293 (1981), the Supreme Court noted that while an anonymous citizen tip can establish a basis for a particularized suspicion of wrongdoing when corroborated by independent observation of wrongdoing or illegality by an officer, in the absence of other objective data, an anonymous tip alone does not support a particularized suspicion. Lee was not speeding and did not show obvious signs of driving under the influence. Merely slowing down after observing a police car make a U-turn and speed up to come within a few car lengths behind one's vehicle is not illegal and provides no evidence of wrongdoing. Because the investigative stop was not justified, the Supreme Court reversed Lee's conviction and dismissed the case. St. v. Lee, 282 M 391, 938 P2d 637, 54 St. Rep. 401 (1997).

Field Sobriety Tests Not Mandatory to Establish Probable Cause to Arrest on DUI Charge: Conducting field sobriety tests is not a requisite for determining whether probable cause exists for arrest on a DUI charge under this section. Probable cause must be based on an assessment of all relevant circumstances, and field sobriety tests are a tool that can assure the officer that the person is under the effect of intoxicating beverages. However, such tests are not mandatory and were not required as evidence in this case because the record was replete with other evidence supporting a DUI offense. Missoula v. Forest, 236 M 129, 769 P2d 699, 46 St. Rep. 237 (1989), followed in St. v. Hafner, 2010 MT 233, 358 Mont. 137, 243 P.3d 435.

Facts Following Stop Prompting Probable Cause: A founded suspicion to stop for investigative detention may ripen into probable cause to arrest through the occurrence of facts or incidents after the stop. St. v. Lee, 232 M 105, 754 P2d 512, 45 St. Rep. 903 (1988), citing St. v. Sharp, 217 M 40, 702 P2d 959, 42 St. Rep. 1009 (1985). See also Jess v. Probable Cause for Warrantless DUI Arrest: After a citizen reported a vehicle being driven recklessly, the undersheriff discovered the vehicle parked at defendant's trailer. Defendant stepped outside his trailer where he admitted driving and agreed upon request to perform field sobriety tests. Upon failing the tests, defendant was arrested and subsequently convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol. Defendant appealed, alleging that evidence had been obtained pursuant to illegal arrest. The Supreme Court affirmed the conviction, stating that the citizen's report, defendant's admissions, and the undersheriff's observations provided the undersheriff with probable cause for the arrest. Defendant had reduced privacy expectation once he stepped outside the trailer. Police may legally seize evidence likely to disappear before a warrant can be obtained. St. v. Ellinger, 223 M 349, 725 P2d 1201, 43 St. Rep. 1778 (1986), followed in Jess v. St., 255 M 254, 841 P2d 1137, 49 St. Rep. 951 (1992), and St. v. Peters, 2011 MT 274, 362 Mont. 389, 264 P.3d 1124. INSTRUCTIONS

Jury Instruction Not Clearly Reflecting State Law — Reversible Error: The jury instruction regarding "actual physical control" did not clearly state the law and resulted in confusion on the part of the jury regarding what it means to be in "actual physical control" of a vehicle. As a result, the defendant's right to a fair trial was prejudicially affected. St. v. Christiansen, 2010 MT 197, 357 Mont. 379, 239 P.3d 949.

Proper Instruction That Jury Could Infer Defendant's Intoxication Based on Refusal to Perform Field Sobriety Tests Without Consulting Attorney: The District Court did not err in instructing the jury that it could infer that Stanczak was under the influence because Stanczak refused to perform field sobriety tests before consulting with an attorney. St. v. Stanczak, 2010 MT 106, 356 Mont. 263, 232 P.3d 896. See also St. v. Hudson, 2005 MT 142, 327 Mont. 286, 114 P.3d 210, and St. v. Miller, 2008 MT 106, 342 Mont. 355, 181 P.3d 625.

Proper Jury Instruction Regarding Defendant's Lack of Right to Attorney During Field Sobriety Tests: During a traffic stop, Stanczak was asked to perform field sobriety tests. The District Court instructed the jury in Stanczak's DUI trial that because there was no custodial interrogation, Stanczak had no right to counsel before completing the tests. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the instruction as a full and fair instruction on the applicable law. St. v. Stanczak, 2010 MT 106, 356 Mont. 263, 232 P.3d 896.

No Prejudice in Instruction on Burden of Proof and Consideration of Circumstantial Evidence: The District Court gave a jury instruction in Sirles' DUI trial that differentiated between direct and circumstantial evidence. The instruction directed that in the case of circumstantial evidence susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, one pointing to guilt and the other toward innocence, the jury was to consider which interpretation was most reasonable. Sirles contended that the instruction improperly lessened the state's burden by allowing the jury to disregard the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard in favor of a "most reasonable" standard. However, the instruction neither required Sirles to prove or disprove any elements of DUI nor lessened the state's burden of proving its case beyond a reasonable doubt; the instruction merely clarified for the jury how it should resolve an evidentiary question. Sirles was not prejudiced by the instruction, and the District Court did not err in giving it. St. v. Sirles, 2010 MT 88, 356 Mont. 133, 231 P.3d 1089.

No Error in Jury Instructions on Criminal Negligence at Trial for Vehicular Homicide While Under the Influence: At Coluccio's trial for vehicular homicide while under the influence, the trial court gave the jury an instruction on the definition of negligence. In another instruction the court told the jury that in order to convict Coluccio the jury had to find that the state proved that Coluccio was in physical control of a vehicle on state public roadways while under the influence and negligently caused a death, but the court omitted the requirement that the jury conclude that Collucio was criminally negligent, which Coluccio contended took away his defense that he was not criminally negligent while driving after drinking. The Supreme Court disagreed. Considering the instructions as a whole, the second instruction was not misleading. The court also noted that after jury instructions were given, the prosecutor argued that Coluccio was both under the influence and criminally negligent, and that Coluccio's counsel pointed out that the state had to prove not only that Coluccio was at fault, but also that his conduct was a gross deviation from the standard of care. Thus, the jury was fairly instructed and Coluccio was not deprived of his defense. St. v. Coluccio, 2009 MT 273, 352 M 122, 214 P3d 1282 (2009).

DUI Absolute Liability Offense — Proof of Mental State and Consideration of Involuntary Intoxication Not Required: During Weller's DUI trial, Weller proffered a jury instruction concerning a defense of involuntary intoxication, but the instruction was refused. Weller appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The statute on involuntary intoxication, 45-2-203, provides that even though involuntary intoxication is not a defense to any offense, it may be taken into consideration in determining the existence of a mental state in cases where a mental state is an element of an offense. However, DUI is an absolute liability offense that does not require proof of a mental state, so consideration of involuntary intoxication was not necessary. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing an involuntary intoxication instruction. St. v. Weller, 2009 MT 168, 350 M 485, 208 P3d 834 (2009).

No Unconstitutional Burden Shifting in Court's Instructing Jury on Rebuttable Presumption When Arrested Driver Refuses Breath Test: Well-settled case law, plus the trial court's admonition to the jury that the statutory inference that a driver is under the influence of alcohol if the driver refuses a blood alcohol concentration test can be countered by evidence presented by the driver, showed no abuse of discretion by the judge. St. v. Slade, 2008 MT 341, 346 M 271, 194 P3d 677, (2008).

Jury Instructions Concerning Actual Physical Control and Implied Consent Proper: The trial court instructed the jury that a person has actual physical control of a vehicle when the person is in a position and has the ability to operate a vehicle. The court also instructed the jury regarding the admissibility of Hudson's refusal to submit to field sobriety tests. Hudson appealed on grounds that the definition should be modified to address whether the trier of fact believed that the person under the influence drove the vehicle to the location and intended to operate the vehicle and on grounds that the evidence of a refusal to submit to field sobriety tests was an improper comment on the evidence. The Supreme Court affirmed the jury instructions. The definition of actual physical control was identical to the Model Criminal Jury Instruction and accurately reflected the law as developed by judicial interpretation. Additionally, under the implied consent provisions of 61-8-402, evidence of a refusal to submit to field sobriety tests, including the Breathalyzer, remains admissible in any criminal proceeding. The trial court fully and adequately instructed the jury, Hudson had ample opportunity to argue the merits of his defense, and Hudson's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Hudson, 2005 MT 142, 327 M 286, 114 P3d 210 (2005).

Jury Instructions Regarding Expertise of Arresting Officers and Admissibility of Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Results Considered Fair Presentation of the Law: The officers who testified at Harrington's DUI trial described their educational background, specialized training, and experience with field sobriety and breath tests, and the jury instruction informed the jury that the officers' expert opinions could be accepted or rejected and that the jury could give the opinions the weight deserved. The jury instruction was relevant to the evidence and issues in the case and was not given in error. Harrington asserted that jury instructions regarding the inferences in this section should not apply because preliminary alcohol screening test results did not establish a particular blood alcohol concentration in the body, but rather provided only an estimate. The jury was separately instructed that the test results were only estimates and that the inference was permissive and rebuttable. The jury instructions thus fully and fairly informed the jury on the applicable law, and Harrington's DUI conviction was affirmed. Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P3d 937 (2001).

DUI Charged Against Defendant Sitting in Running Truck While Intoxicated — No Emergency Creating Defense of Necessity: Nelson was arrested for DUI after being found sitting in a running truck in a bar parking lot while intoxicated. Nelson requested that the trial court give a jury instruction that actual physical control of a vehicle does not include use of the vehicle solely for a place or shelter or habitation. The court declined to give the instruction, and Nelson was convicted. On appeal, Nelson cited St. v. Shotton, 458 A2d 1105 (Vt. 1983), for the common-law defense of necessity. Shotton set out the elements of the necessity defense as follows: (1) there must be a situation of emergency arising without fault on the part of the actor concerned; (2) the emergency must be so imminent and compelling as to raise a reasonable expectation of harm, either to the actor or to those whom the actor was protecting; (3) the emergency must present no reasonable opportunity to avoid the emergency without doing the criminal act; and (4) the injury impending from the emergency must be of sufficient seriousness to outmeasure the criminal wrong. Nelson presented evidence that the low temperature that evening was 31 degrees and that the wind was blowing and contended that it was necessary to wait in the truck for his brother and wife to pick him up. The Supreme Court declined to follow Shotton, noting that Nelson's situation did not present a similar medical emergency or present a situation in which Nelson was blameless in creating the emergency. Rather, Nelson's was a self-created predicament that had multiple solutions and options other than turning on the truck. Nelson drove to the bar by himself on a cold night without a jacket and clad only in a sleeveless T-shirt. He could have walked to a nearby hotel for shelter while waiting, and he also had a blanket in the truck that he could have used to keep warm instead of starting the truck. The court declined to adopt the defense of necessity in this case, and Nelson's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Nelson, 2001 MT 236, 307 M 34, 36 P3d 405 (2001).

Stipulation to Not Mention Suspended Driver's License at DUI Trial — Mention of Expired Driver's License Cured by Jury Admonition: Brady was charged with DUI, fourth or subsequent offense, arising from circumstances surrounding a single-vehicle accident in which Brady swerved off the highway, hit a rock wall, and rolled the vehicle. The information also charged Brady with three misdemeanors: driving while his license was suspended or revoked, failure to provide proof of insurance, and failure to give notice of an accident by the quickest means. Shortly before voir dire, Brady stated that he would plead guilty to the misdemeanors and moved that the state's witnesses not mention any of the offenses to which Brady would plead guilty. The state did not object to the motion. The third witness for the state, a deputy who was at the wreck scene, testified that he found a wallet near the vehicle that contained an expired driver's license. Brady moved for mistrial on grounds that the state violated the judge's order not to mention an expired license. The state countered that the stipulation was that the state would not mention that the license was suspended, but that mention of an expired license was not covered. The District Court found that there was a difference between the jury knowing that Brady's license was suspended, which suggested criminal activity, and knowing that the license was expired, which is not in itself criminal. The court then admonished the jury to disregard the testimony regarding the expired license as irrelevant to the case. Brady was convicted of DUI and appealed on grounds that denial of his motion for a mistrial was reversible error because the state's witness deliberately violated an order in limine to which the state previously stipulated. Granting a mistrial is appropriate when a reasonable possibility exists that inadmissible evidence might have contributed to the conviction. The strength of the evidence against the defendant, together with the prejudicial influence of the inadmissible evidence and whether a cautionary jury instruction could cure any prejudice, must be considered in determining whether a prohibited statement contributed to the conviction. A mistrial should be denied for technical errors of defects that do not affect the defendant's substantial rights and when the record is sufficient to establish guilt. The Supreme Court agreed that there is a difference between an expired license and a suspended license with regard to implications of guilt. Here, any potential prejudice that might have resulted from testimony about the expired license was sufficiently cured by the admonition to the jury, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for mistrial. St. v. Brady, 2000 MT 282, 302 M 174, 13 P3d 941, 57 St. Rep. 1178 (2000), distinguishing St. v. Partin, 287 M 12, 951 P2d 1002 (1997). Brady was followed in St. v. White, 2008 MT 129, 343 M 66, 184 P3d 1008 (2008), with regard to denial of a mistrial when technical errors or defects do not affect a defendant's substantial rights and when the record is sufficient to establish guilt.

Jury Instruction on Physical Control Overbroad: Robison and Rutledge testified that although the police found Robison passed out in the front of a locked and running vehicle, it was Rutledge who had been driving and had temporarily left the car. The lower court submitted the standard jury instruction of physical control to the jury but added an additional sentence that read: "One may be in actual physical control of a motor vehicle if he is physically inside an operational motor vehicle with the potential to operate or drive that motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol on the ways of this State open to the public." The Supreme Court held that the instruction impermissibly broadened the definition of actual physical control because it would include, as a practical matter, every intoxicated occupant of a vehicle whether or not the occupant was or ever had been operating the vehicle. St. v. Robison, 281 M 64, 931 P2d 706, 54 St. Rep. 61 (1997).

Mandatory Presumption of Intoxication — Jury Instruction — Unconstitutional Shifting of Burden: Following an accident in which defendant struck and killed a pedestrian, defendant was charged with negligent homicide after a breath test registered his blood alcohol content at 0.12. Defendant appealed his conviction, alleging that the jury instruction that a blood alcohol level greater than 0.10 raised a mandatory rebuttable presumption that he was under the influence of alcohol. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, stating that the instruction requiring the jury to find intoxication "unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its nonexistence" may have led the jury to believe that defendant not only had to introduce contrary evidence but had an affirmative duty to convince the jury that he was not intoxicated. A mandatory rebuttable presumption that shifts the burden of persuasion to the defendant violates due process. The instruction was not harmless, and the court remanded for new trial. St. v. Leverett, 245 M 124, 799 P2d 119, 47 St. Rep. 1753 (1990).

"Cline Instruction" Improper Statement of Law Regarding DUI: A jury instruction approved by the Supreme Court in St. v. Cline, 135 M 372, 339 P2d 657 (1959), stating that a violation of 61-8-401 occurred if a person drove while impaired by alcohol to the "slightest degree", was held to no longer be a proper statement of the law in light of subsequent legislative amendments which specifically spell out the extent of the influence of intoxicants necessary for conviction. The court held that the instruction must be either revised or abandoned to conform with 61-8-401 and remanded for a new trial. Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224, 43 St. Rep. 1447 (1986).

Attorney General's Opinions

City Court Jurisdiction of Third Offense DUI: Prior to 1987, a city court had jurisdiction of a third offense DUI only if that offense was adopted as a city ordinance and prosecuted as such by the city attorney. The 1987 amendment to 3-11-102 enabled third offense DUI to be prosecuted in city court as a violation of state law as well. 42 A.G. Op. 34 (1987).

City Attorney — No Authority to Prosecute Third DUI or Per Se Violations Without Ordinance: A city attorney has no authority to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under 61-8-401 and 61-8-406. However, a city may adopt an ordinance pursuant to 61-8-401(5) that would empower the city attorney to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under such a city ordinance. 42 A.G. Op. 12 (1987).

Jurisdiction of City Court: A City Court may issue an arrest warrant in the name of the state of Montana when a violation of this section is charged. 41 A.G. Op. 95 (1986).

Third Conviction — Time Computation: Only those prior convictions which have occurred within 5 years of a current D.W.I. offense may be counted in determining whether the current prosecution is for a third offense as set forth in 61-8-714. 38 A.G. Op. 63 (1980).

Elements of D.W.I.: In order to sustain a conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol, the State must prove actual physical control of a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol. This section does not require proof that a person is under the influence of alcohol to a degree which renders him incapable of safely driving a motor vehicle. 37 A.G. Op. 120 (1978).

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES

Driving a Privilege, Not Right — Suspension of License Not Illegal Search or Seizure: The defendant refused to give a breath sample at the police station and the defendant's license was suspended by the Department of Justice. The defendant argued that the suspension was an illegal seizure that violated constitutional protections. The Supreme Court held that driving on Montana highways is a privilege and that the suspension of a license is a civil penalty and did not constitute a violation of the defendant's constitutional rights. Nichols v. Dept. of Justice, 2011 MT 33, 359 Mont. 251, 248 P.3d 813.

Breath Test Administered Before Reading of Implied Consent Advisory — Motion to Suppress Properly Denied: Kintli was stopped for suspicion of DUI. She was administered field sobriety tests and was read the preliminary alcohol screen test advisory. At the detention center, she refused to repeat the field sobriety tests and indicated that she wanted to take the breath test. The test was administered and resulted in a BAC of 0.262. Following the test, the officer read Kintli the consent advisory and offered to void the test and administer a new one. Kintli indicated that she did not want to retake the test. Kintli was found guilty of DUI per se in City Court and appealed to District Court for a trial de novo. She moved to suppress the results of the breath test, which was denied. Kintli then pleaded guilty, reserving the right to appeal the suppression denial. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court. Because the right to independent blood testing remains constant regardless of whether the suspect refuses or submits to testing, Kintli's argument that the officer's failure to advise her of this right before she consented invalidates her consent is nonsensical. She was timely advised of her right to obtain independent blood testing, and this was sufficient to safeguard her due process rights. Section 61-8-409 requires an officer to advise a person submitting to a preliminary breath test ("PBT") of the right of refusal and the consequences of refusal. The Supreme Court has held that in order for that statutory section to have meaning, the notice of the right of refusal and the consequences of refusal necessarily must precede the testing. No similar statutory requirement is found as to other BAC tests conducted after arrest. St. v. Kintli, 2004 MT 373, 325 M 53, 103 P3d 1056 (2004).

No Due Process Violation Based on Lack of Requirement Under Implied Consent Statutes to Provide Information Concerning Ramifications of Refusal to Take Breath Test: Turbiville, a North Dakota resident, was stopped in Montana for suspected DUI and was read a preliminary alcohol screening test advisory that outlined the right to refuse a breath test and the license suspension accompanying a refusal. He was provided no additional information concerning other rights regarding the preliminary breath test (PBT), particularly that Turbiville could refuse the test and challenge the license seizure in court. Turbiville took the PBT and an Intoxilyzer test, both of which indicated intoxication, and later moved to suppress the test results on grounds that the Montana implied consent statutes were misleading and inaccurate as applied to nonresidents. The motion was denied, and Turbiville appealed, asserting that if he had been advised of the right to a hearing to challenge the license seizure, he would have refused the PBT and that failure to provide an adequate advisory violated due process. The Supreme Court disagreed. The option to refuse a breath or blood test is not a matter of due process, but rather a matter of grace bestowed by the Legislature, and the Legislature may contour the favor in any manner considered appropriate. The implied consent statutes do not require an officer to provide information to an arrested motorist as to ramifications of the refusal to take a test, nor is a driver even entitled to be informed of the option to refuse the test. Further, by clear definition in 61-1-136 (now repealed — see 61-1-101 for definitions), a driver's license includes a nonresident's driving privilege, so Turbiville's contention that the advisory was misleading on grounds that Montana had no authority to suspend a North Dakota driver's license also failed because the advisory was technically correct and accomplished the purpose of informing Turbiville of the potentially serious consequences of losing Montana driving privileges upon refusal to take a breath test. St. v. Turbiville, 2003 MT 340, 318 M 451, 81 P3d 475 (2003).

Administration of Breath Test Not Mandatory: Beanblossom was arrested for felony DUI and was read an implied consent advisory. When asked if he would consent to a breath test, Beanblossom consented, but the test was never administered. Beanblossom moved to dismiss the charge based on the officer's failure to administer the test, contending that the language of this section mandatorily required administration of the test, and that failure to do so violated his due process rights. The motion was denied, and Beanblossom appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a driver in Montana is presumed to have consented to taking a breath test if an officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the driver is intoxicated. However, the language in subsection (2) of this section merely mandates who must administer a breath test, but does not mandate administration of the test. Thus, denial of Beanblossom's motion to dismiss was not erroneous. St. v. Beanblossom, 2002 MT 351, 313 M 394, 61 P3d 165 (2002). See also St. v. Entzel, 805 P2d 228 (Wash. 1991).

Arresting Officer's Advice Considered Frustration of Due Process Right to Independent Blood Test — Strand Remedy for Violation of Due Process Rights Overruled: Minkoff was arrested for DUI and informed of his right to an independent blood test. Minkoff asked the arresting officer whether he should get a blood test, and the officer initially replied that he could not advise Minkoff, but that the test would only be given at Minkoff's expense. Minkoff then asked whether there was any difference between the blood test and the breath test, and the officer repeatedly stated that the blood test would be more exact and higher than the breath test. Minkoff then took a breath test, which he failed, but did not request a blood test. After being convicted, Minkoff appealed on grounds that his right to an independent blood test was frustrated by the arresting officer's response to the inquiry about whether to get a blood test. The District Court had relied on St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558 (1997), in denying Minkoff's motion to dismiss. Sidmore provides that two criteria must be met to support an allegation of denial of due process rights regarding the right to an independent test: (1) the accused must timely claim the right to an independent blood test; and (2) a law enforcement officer must unreasonably impede the defendant's right to obtain an independent blood test. Here, given the immediacy of the officer's advice, the period within which Minkoff could timely request the test under the first Sidmore criteria had not passed, and to conclude otherwise would permit frustration of a person's due process right to an independent test in advance of the person's reasonable opportunity to request the test. Then, to determine whether the officer unreasonably frustrated Minkoff's right to obtain the blood test, the Supreme Court applied Lau v. St., 896 P2d 825 (Alaska 1995). Under Lau, a government officer having custody of an arrested driver cannot attempt to dissuade the driver from exercising the right to an independent blood test. Here, the officer's repeated statements, albeit well-intentioned, that a blood test would show a higher blood alcohol level, were affirmative acts that would frustrate, if not obliterate, the intention of any rational arrestee to obtain an independent blood test. Regarding the proper remedy for such a due process violation, the Supreme Court previously held in St. v. Strand, 286 M 122, 951 P2d 552 (1997), that suppression of the breath test was an appropriate remedy on the basis that if the state frustrated the right to an independent test, it could not then be allowed to use its own scientific evidence of intoxication against the defendant. On further consideration, the Supreme Court held that the Strand remedy was manifestly incorrect and overruled Strand in that regard, holding that dismissal rather than suppression of the breath test is the appropriate remedy when the right to an independent blood test is frustrated. St. v. Minkoff, 2002 MT 29, 308 M 248, 42 P3d 223 (2002), followed in St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 M 221, 136 P3d 543 (2006), and St. v. Wrzesinski, 2006 MT 263, 334 M 157, 145 P3d 985 (2006).

Admissibility of Proof of Refusal to Take Sobriety Test Not Violative of Separation of Powers Doctrine: Robertson claimed that by enacting 61-8-404, regarding admission of evidence of a person's refusal to take a sobriety test, the Legislature unconstitutionally infringed on the function of courts to determine the admissibility of evidence, in violation of the separation of powers doctrine. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that ultimately, the admissibility of evidence lies with the court pursuant to Rule 104, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Legislature routinely passes laws that determine whether certain kinds of evidence are admissible, without violating the separation of powers doctrine in the process. Further, "admissible" means that evidence may, but is not required, to be admitted. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also St. v. Long, 778 P2d 1027 (Wash. 1989).

Jury Trial Not Statutorily Mandated in Driver's License Suspension Case — Not Violative of Right to Trial by Jury: Section 61-8-403 dictates that the court examine the facts and determine the merits of a petition challenging the suspension or revocation of a license but does not contemplate the role of a jury in the hearing, presuming instead that a jury will not be present, through assignment of tasks to the court. The inviolate right to a trial by jury is not a prospective right that is automatically granted in every new proceeding that may arise. Rather, the right that is constitutionally preserved is that right to a jury trial that existed at the time that the constitution was enacted. There is not and has never been a right to a jury trial in purely equitable actions in Montana. Suspension or revocation of a driver's license pursuant to the implied consent law is a civil administrative sanction, not a criminal penalty, and is intended to protect the public rather than punish the driver. The hearing to determine the propriety of a driver's license suspension is an action in equity because compensatory or punitive damages are not allowed. Further, the reinstatement fee does not constitute a punishment that converts the equitable action into a criminal action because the fee is dedicated to the public purpose of funding county drinking and driving prevention programs. Therefore, a driver is not entitled to a trial by jury in a proceeding to determine the propriety of a driver's license suspension. Supola v. Dept. of Justice, 278 M 421, 925 P2d 480, 53 St. Rep. 984 (1996).

Punishment for Refusal to Take Breathalyzer Test and for Driving Under the Influence Not Double Jeopardy: Danichek argued that he could not be convicted of driving under the influence because he had already been punished when his driver's license was suspended because he refused to take the Breathalyzer test and that to punish him for driving under the influence would constitute multiple punishments for the same offense. The Supreme Court held that Danichek's license was suspended for refusing the test and that it was the refusal that was a violation. That conviction had nothing to do with whether or not the person actually was driving under the influence, and therefore, he was being punished for two separate infractions and was not being placed in double jeopardy. Helena v. Danichek, 277 M 461, 922 P2d 1170, 53 St. Rep. 767 (1996), followed in St. v. Ellenburg, 283 M 136, 938 P2d 1376, 54 St. Rep. 532 (1997). In Ellenburg, the court was asked to overturn Danichek, and the court declined to do so.

Careless Handling of Blood Sample — Deprivation of Due Process and Fair Trial: Defendant was taken to a hospital where a blood sample was drawn; then he was transported back to the Sheriff's office where he was booked and his personal property, including the blood sample, was taken from him. The blood sample was left on the counter in the dispatch room rather than being refrigerated and was not given to defendant upon his release. The Supreme Court held that once the sample was taken from defendant, the authorities had a duty to properly care for it. Since this duty was not performed, the careless handling of the sample deprived defendant of his due process right to gather possible exculpatory evidence, precluding a fair trial. St. v. Swanson, 222

M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), distinguished in St. v. Heth, 230 M 268, 750 P2d 103, 45 St. Rep. 194 (1988), and St. v. Strand, 286 M 122, 951 P2d 552, 54 St. Rep. 1333 (1997).

Refusal to Submit to Blood Alcohol Test Not Self-Incrimination: Use of evidence of a defendant's refusal to submit to a blood alcohol test in a DUI prosecution does not violate the defendant's United States Constitution fifth amendment right against self-incrimination. The language used in Art. II, sec. 25, Mont. Const., is substantially identical to and affords no basis for interpreting it more broadly than its federal counterpart. Montana's constitutional prohibition against self-incrimination is not offended by the admission of defendant's refusal to submit to a Breathalyzer sobriety test. St. v. Jackson, 206 M 338, 672 P2d 255, 40 St. Rep. 1698 (1983).

GENERALLY

Proper Instruction That Jury Could Infer Defendant's Intoxication Based on Refusal to Perform Field Sobriety Tests Without Consulting Attorney: The District Court did not err in instructing the jury that it could infer that Stanczak was under the influence because Stanczak refused to perform field sobriety tests before consulting with an attorney. St. v. Stanczak, 2010 MT 106, 356 Mont. 263, 232 P.3d 896. See also St. v. Hudson, 2005 MT 142, 327 Mont. 286, 114 P.3d 210, and St. v. Miller, 2008 MT 106, 342 Mont. 355, 181 P.3d 625.

Absence of Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Judgment Precluding Review of DUI Case — Remand: Goldsmith was stopped on the University of Montana-Missoula campus and charged with DUI. His license was taken for failure to submit to breath tests, and Goldsmith petitioned the District Court to have the license returned, but the court deferred to the officer's experience and simply denied the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court made no findings of fact or conclusions of law and did not enter judgment on the petition. Because the Supreme Court did not have sufficient information upon which to base a review, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice and the case was remanded for entry of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment as required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Goldsmith v. Dept. of Justice, 2007 MT 221, 339 M 65, 168 P3d 1041 (2007).

DUI Arrest in Restaurant Parking Area — Parking Lot Considered Way of State Open to Public: Hayes was arrested for DUI in the parking area of a restaurant. Following conviction, Hayes appealed on grounds that because the parking lot was privately owned, the implied consent law did not apply and the officer had no right to request a breath sample because Hayes' vehicle was not located on a way of the state open to the public pursuant to 61-8-101. The Supreme Court disagreed. The fact that the lot was unpaved and had potholes was inconsequential. Despite its poor condition, the lot was adapted and fitted for public travel and was in common use by the public. The public was encouraged to use the lot, including parking by restaurant patrons and selling by vendors in the lot. Therefore, the trial court did not err in concluding that the parking lot was within the definition of ways of this state open to the public, and Hayes' conviction was affirmed. Hayes v. St., 2005 MT 148, 327 M 346, 114 P3d 261 (2005).

Failure to Argue Prejudicial Effect of Malfunctioning Breathalyzer Printer — No Error in Denial of Motion to Suppress: When Otto was tested with a Breathalyzer, the machine registered a 0.159 blood alcohol content but failed to print a card with the test results. Otto moved for dismissal of the Breathalyzer results because a complete test, including the printed results, was not accomplished. The dismissal motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Otto failed to argue prejudice based on the admission of the test results. Given ample additional evidence of Otto's intoxicated condition, failure to suppress the Breathalyzer results did not constitute reversible error. St. v. Otto, 2004 MT 338, 324 M 217, 102 P3d 522 (2004).

Defendant Informed of Right to Independent Blood Test After Administration of Portable Breath Test — No Violation of Due Process Rights: After Feldbrugge was stopped for speeding, the investigating officer noticed that Feldbrugge seemed confused, had difficulty removing his driver's license from his wallet and producing proof of registration and insurance, had bloodshot and glassy eyes and slurred speech, and was unsteady on his feet. The officer did not perform field sobriety tests, but did ask Feldbrugge to take a portable breath test (PBT). The officer read a short advisory that did not contain information regarding Feldbrugge's right to obtain an independent blood test to challenge the PBT results. Feldbrugge consented to the PBT, which he failed, and was arrested and taken to the county jail. Before being administered an Intoxilyzer breath test at the jail, Feldbrugge was read the informed consent advisory form, which included a statement regarding Feldbrugge's right to obtain an independent blood test. At trial, Feldbrugge moved to suppress the evidence on grounds that his due process rights were violated because he was not informed of the right to an independent blood test until after the PBT was administered. However, the notion that Feldbrugge had a choice between taking a PBT or obtaining an independent blood test, without penalty, was misguided. Here, it was unnecessary for the officer to inform Feldbrugge of the right to an independent blood test prior to requesting the PBT because even if Feldbrugge had been so informed, his options remained the same: consent to the PBT or refuse and have his driver's license seized. The officer was required to timely inform Feldbrugge that he could obtain an independent blood test in addition to the PBT and Intoxilyzer breath test so that Feldbrugge could gather exculpatory evidence. Informing Feldbrugge after the PBT was timely, so Feldbrugge's due process rights were not violated. Because the PBT results were admissible, Feldbrugge's arrest was supported by probable cause, and the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Feldbrugge, 2002 MT 154, 310 M 368, 50 P3d 1067 (2002), followed in St. v. Kintli, 2004 MT 373, 325 M 53, 103 P3d 1056 (2004).

District Court Proceeding Under Mistake of Law in Determining Whether Implied Consent Statute Applicable to Blood Drawn for Medical Reasons — Supervisory Control Accepted: The District Court suppressed the results of a blood test taken for medical reasons after a DUI suspect declined to give consent for a blood test following a car accident in which the use of alcohol was suspected. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law, and that if the mistake was left uncorrected, the state would be without an adequate remedy on appeal. Given the state's limited ability to appeal an evidentiary ruling, the Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction in the matter to prevent the introduction of evidence when correction of the ruling by a later court decision would be ineffective. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001), following State ex rel. Mazurek v. District Court, 277 M 349, 922 P2d 474 (1996), and Park v. District Court, 1998 MT 164, 289 M 367, 961 P2d 1267 (1998).

No Burden-Shifting in Statute Allowing Evidence of Refusal to Take DUI Test: Relying on St. v. Long, 778 P2d 1027 (Wash. 1989), Robertson argued that 61-8-404(2) allows the prosecution to argue that an inference of guilt could be drawn from the evidence of his refusal to take a Breathalyzer test, impermissibly shifting the burden of proof to him to establish that the refusal was not a reflection of guilt, in violation of 46-16-204. Although the Washington and Montana versions of 61-8-404(2) are virtually identical, the Montana Supreme Court distinguished Long, finding nothing in the statute that inferred a consciousness of guilt arising from the introduction of evidence of the proof of refusal to take the test. The state still must prove the offense of DUI beyond a reasonable doubt. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000).

Failure to Use Different Test Solution Than That Used in Prior Test in Testing Breathalyzer That Failed Prior Certification Test: Administrative rules require the state to use a fresh ethyl alcohol testing solution in retesting and certifying a Breathalyzer when the results of a prior test of the Breathalyzer are outside the range specified by the rules. The state did not do so and used the same solution as that used in the prior test. However, DUI defendant was not prejudiced thereby because the evidence showed that the problem was clearly with the Breathalyzer, not the solution. St. v. Woods, 285 M 124, 947 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 1074 (1997).

Issue of Suspension Absent Sworn Statement — Not Properly Raised: In oral argument following the conclusion of the arresting officer's testimony, Thompson's counsel argued that Thompson's driver's license could not be suspended unless there was a sworn report as required under this section. The District Court properly declined to consider the issue as not having been properly raised or presented because: (1) neither the Department of Justice nor the County Attorney's office was given notice of the filing of the petition to review the license suspension; (2) no notice was given to the state or county that Thompson was raising an issue as to the filing of the proof of the sworn statement; and (3) neither the county nor the Department had an opportunity to present the actual report. Thompson v. Dept. of Justice, 264 M 372, 871 P2d 1333, 51 St. Rep. 272 (1994), followed in Gentry v. St., 282 M 491, 938 P2d 693, 54 St. Rep. 450 (1997).

Burden of Proof on Driver to Prove Invalidity of Revocation: Because there is a presumption of correctness to the state's action of revocation of a driver's license until otherwise shown to be improper, the burden of proof falls on the driver to prove the invalidity of the state's action rather than to require the state to justify its act of revocation. Jess v. St., 255 M 254, 841 P2d 1137, 49 St. Rep. 951 (1992), followed in In re License Revocation of Gildersleeve, 283 M 479, 942 P2d 705, 54 St. Rep. 735 (1997), and Kleinsasser v. St., 2002 MT 36, 308 M 325, 42 P3d 801 (2002).

Officers Unaware of First Refusal to Take Breathalyzer Test — Privileges Reinstated After Ninety Days: The District Court did not err in reinstating after 90 days driving privileges suspended for 1 year, due to a second refusal to take a blood or Breathalyzer test, when officers who were unaware of a first refusal indicated the license would be suspended for only 90 days. In re Orman, 224 M 332, 731 P2d 893, 43 St. Rep. 2228 (1986).

Appeal of Driver's License Suspension — Limited to Three Issues: The appeal under 61-8-403 of a driver's license suspension under 61-8-402 is limited to the following issues: (1) whether a police officer had reasonable grounds to believe the person had been driving or was in actual physical control of a vehicle upon the ways of this state open to the public while under the influence of alcohol; (2) whether the person was placed under arrest; and (3) whether the person refused to submit to the test. The implied consent law is a civil administrative proceeding separate and distinct from the criminal action on the charge of driving while intoxicated. Each proceeds independently of the other. Therefore, it was reversible error in an appeal of a driver's license suspension for the District Court to hold that petitioner's driver's license should not have been suspended because the initial stop of his vehicle was illegal. In re Blake, 220 M 27, 712 P2d 1338, 43 St. Rep. 143 (1986).

Implied Consent Suspension Not Relieved by Guilty Plea: Respondent's license was suspended when he refused to take a breath test. Two weeks after arrest, respondent pleaded guilty to the offense of DUI. The District Court found that the plea of guilty constituted a withdrawal of his refusal to take breath test under the implied consent statute and recommended respondent receive a probationary license. Supreme Court reversed and reinstated suspension of respondent's license. The revocation of a driver's license is a civil sanction, not a criminal penalty, and there is no connection between the DUI statute and the implied consent statute. A violation of both statutes means the suspensions run concurrently. Respondent was not eligible for a probationary license until the 90-day implied consent suspension was completed. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985), followed in In re Blake, 220 M 27, 712 P2d 1338, 43 St. Rep. 143 (1986), and Walker v. St., 229 M 331, 746 P2d 624, 44 St. Rep. 2008 (1987).

No Retroactive Application When Amended Statute Applied to Factual Situation Occurring Prior to Amendment: Section 61-8-402 was amended in 1983 to provide for a 1-year revocation of a driver's license upon the holder's refusal to submit to a chemical test within 5 years of a previous refusal. The court held that application of this provision, when the first refusal had occurred prior to the 1983 amendment, was not a retroactive application of law precluded by 1-2-109. Stiffarm v. Furois, 217 M 335, 704 P2d 75, 42 St. Rep. 1227 (1985).

ARRESTS AND INVESTIGATIVE STOPS

Clarification of Authority of Out-of-Jurisdiction Peace Officer in Making Arrest: The defendant appealed his conviction of DUI, arguing the District Court should have dismissed the charge since his arrest was illegal because the out-of-jurisdiction peace officer who arrested him exceeded her authority under the private person arrest statute by investigating the defendant for DUI. In affirming the defendant's conviction, the Supreme Court revisited its analyses in Maney v. St., 255 Mont. 270, 842 P.2d 704 (1992), St. v. Hendrickson, 283 Mont. 105, 939 P.2d 985 (1997), and St. v. Williamson, 1998 MT 199, 290 Mont. 321, 965 P.2d 231, and concluded that the assumption underlying these cases — that if a peace officer lacks authority to act in the capacity of a peace officer, then the only alternative is that the peace officer acts in the capacity of a private person — is incorrect. The Supreme Court concluded that an out-of-jurisdiction peace officer must meet the arrest standard that applies to a private person in the same circumstances: if probable cause exists to believe that a person is committing or has committed an offense and the existing circumstances require the person's immediate arrest. If this standard is met, the officer may then follow the procedures applicable to peace officers when processing an arrest. St. v. Updegraff, 2011 MT 321, 363 Mont. 123, 267 P.3d 28.

Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative DUI Stop Under Totality of Circumstances: Luckett asserted that the officer who arrested him for DUI did not have sufficient particularized suspicion to make an investigative stop. The Supreme Court disagreed. Luckett contended that the various circumstances surrounding the stop, when considered separately, did not provide adequate suspicion, but the court considers the totality of the circumstances. The officer, who had over 4 years' experience and had completed numerous training courses, including DUI detection, observed Luckett and several other persons drinking beer at a truck stop, watched Luckett enter a vehicle, and followed the vehicle onto the interstate. The driver, who turned out to be Luckett, drove abnormally slow for the conditions, and the vehicle weaved along the highway and crossed the fog line twice. Under the totality of these circumstances, the officer had a reasonable suspicion that Luckett was engaged in wrongdoing, and the District Court's finding that the officer had a particularized suspicion for conducting an investigative stop was not erroneous. St. v. Luckett, 2007 MT 47, 336 M 140, 152 P3d 1279 (2007). See also Muller v. St., 2012 MT 66, 364 Mont. 328, 274 P.3d 737.

Erratic U-Turn Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: After an officer observed Trombley make an erratic U-turn, drift over the fog line, fail to signal when switching lanes, and straddle the center line, Trombley was stopped and cited for DUI. Trombley contended, and the District Court agreed, that state law did not prohibit the U-turn, but under the totality of the circumstances, Trombley's actions rose to the level of particularized suspicion sufficient to warrant the investigative stop. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Trombley's erratic driving was enough for the officer to suspect that Trombley was engaged in wrongdoing and gave the officer a particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop under the totality of the circumstances. Trombley's motion to dismiss was properly denied. St. v. Trombley, 2005 MT 174, 327 M 507, 116 P3d 771 (2005), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004).

Officer's Testimony and Videotape Sufficient Evidence of Reasonable Grounds for DUI Stop: Clark's driver's license was suspended after he refused to take a breath test when arrested for DUI. In petitioning for reinstatement of the license, Clark contended that the arresting officer lacked a particularized suspicion to make a stop and failed to articulate a reason for the stop at the hearing on the license suspension. The Supreme Court applied the reasonable grounds test in St. v. Brander, 2004 MT 150, 321 M 484, 92 P3d 1173 (2004), and held that the trial court properly concluded, on the basis of the officer's testimony that Clark hit a curb and swerved across lanes, coupled with a videotape of the stop, that the officer had reasonable grounds to investigate Clark for DUI. The trial court properly analyzed the factors in 61-8-403, and the analysis was not clearly erroneous. Denial of the petition to reinstate Clark's license was affirmed. Clark v. State ex rel. Driver Improvement Bureau, 2005 MT 65, 326 M 278, 109 P3d 244 (2005), followed in St. v. Rodriguez, 2011 MT 36, 359 Mont. 281, 248 P.3d 850.

Improper Left Turn Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: At about 1:10 a.m., an officer observed Steen make a wide left-hand turn at an intersection and swerve to straddle the center of two eastbound lanes. The officer stopped Steen for violating 61-8-333 and subsequently arrested Steen for DUI. Steen contended that the officer lacked a particularized suspicion to make an investigative stop and moved to suppress the evidence. The motion was denied, and Steen was convicted. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Steen's erratic driving was enough for the officer to suspect that Steen was engaged in wrongdoing and gave the officer a particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop under the totality of the circumstances. Steen's motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004). See also Moore v. St., 2002 MT 315, 313 M 126, 61 P3d 746 (2002).

Sufficient Reasonable Cause to Suspect DUI Following Justified Traffic Stop — Refusal to Reinstate License Proper: Muri was initially stopped for expired license plates and then failed DUI field tests. Upon refusal to submit to a blood alcohol test, Muri's driver's license was seized and suspended. Muri petitioned for reinstatement of the license on grounds that the totality of circumstances occurring after the stop did not support a finding of reasonable cause for the officer to believe that Muri was DUI because the only indication of intoxication was the odor of alcohol emanating from the vehicle and the officer could not state with certainty whether the odor came from Muri or from a passenger. The petition was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Contrary to Muri's assertions, the odor was not the only indication of possible intoxication. Muri swerved in the driving lane at least once; the officer smelled a strong odor of alcohol when speaking with Muri; Muri could not produce a driver's license upon request, and when asked to recite her Social Security number, Muri could not do so at first and then recited it with slurred speech; the stop occurred at the approximate time when bars were closing; and Muri admitted consuming some alcohol. Given the officer's numerous observations, the officer had reasonable grounds to believe, prior to requesting field sobriety tests, that Muri was DUI, and the petition to reinstate Muri's license was properly denied. Muri v. St., 2004 MT 192, 322 M 219, 95 P3d 149 (2004), following Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212 (1996), and distinguishing Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464 (1999). See also Brewer v. St., 2004 MT 193, 322 M 225, 95 P3d 163 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Particularized Suspicion to Justify Investigatory Stop — Petition for Reinstatement of Driver's License Properly Denied: A highway patrol officer observed a vehicle swerve and hit the guardrail. The vehicle did not stop, so the officer followed the vehicle as it exited the freeway. The officer believed, in part, that the driver violated 61-7-108, failing to report an accident causing damage of $500 or more, so the officer stopped the vehicle and subsequently arrested Moore for DUI. When Moore refused a breath test, the officer seized Moore's driver's license. Moore petitioned for reinstatement of the license, arguing that the officer could formulate no suspicion that Moore was involved in wrongdoing that would warrant an investigative stop because the officer could not have known whether Moore was going to report the accident by the quickest means, which was for Moore to drive home and call. The District Court denied the petition, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The officer testified that the damage to the guardrail alone exceeded $500 and that Moore passed up at least two opportunities to stop and use a pay telephone to report the accident before the investigatory stop. Although the evidence conflicted, it was within the province of the District Court to determine the weight of the evidence and credibility of the witnesses. The officer testified credibly, and there was sufficient evidence in the record to indicate that the officer had the requisite particularized suspicion to justify the investigatory stop. Therefore, Moore's petition to reinstate the driver's license was properly denied. Moore v. St., 2002 MT 315, 313 M 126, 61 P3d 746 (2002), followed in St. v. Schulke, 2005 MT 77, 326 M 390, 109 P3d 744 (2005). See also Weer v. St., 2010 MT 232, 358 Mont. 130, 244 P.3d 311.

Authority for Arresting Out-of-Jurisdiction Peace Officer to Act Following Arrival of Officer With Jurisdiction: When a Belgrade police officer stopped a motorcyclist in Bozeman after observing erratic driving and after the stop observed behavior indicative of intoxication, he was acting within his authority as a private citizen under 46-6-502. However, when the Bozeman police, whom he had contacted, arrived, the Belgrade officer's authority to act as a private citizen under 46-6-502 ceased and his performance of tests on the driver, placing him under arrest, transporting him to the jail, requests for a breath test, and writing of a citation, all in the absence of exigent circumstances, exceeded his citizen arrest authority under 46-6-502. Thus, the evidence obtained after the Bozeman police arrived was illegally obtained and must be suppressed in the DUI prosecution. To the extent that Maney v. St., 255 M 270, 842 P2d 704 (1992), suggests a contrary result, it is overruled. St. v. Hendrickson, 283 M 105, 939 P2d 985, 54 St. Rep. 516 (1997).

In St. v. Updegraff, 2011 MT 321, 363 Mont. 123, 267 P.3d 28, the Supreme Court clarified the authority of out-of-jurisdiction peace officers to make arrests, concluding that an out-of-jurisdiction peace officer must meet the arrest standard that applies to a private person in the same circumstances, and if this standard is met, the officer may then follow the procedures applicable to peace officers when processing an arrest.

Intent to Arrest Formed After Person Physically Restrained After Failing to Stop as Requested — Investigative Stop, Not Arrest: An officer had authority to arrest Anderson, whose walking and driving led her to believe that he was DUI. The officer restrained him with a "gooseneck hold" when he failed to stop as requested. She testified without contradiction that it was not until after he resisted her hold and she could clearly identify the odor of intoxicants that she decided to arrest him for DUI. The request to stop and use of the gooseneck hold constituted an investigative stop, not an arrest. Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 125 (1996).

Staggering Walk, Evasive Driving Without Turn Signals, and Failure to Stop When Requested While Later Walking as Grounds for Belief DUI Occurred: An officer observed Anderson shuffling and staggering toward his car in Billings just before the bars closed. She did not see him get into the car. A few minutes later, she saw him driving in what she interpreted as an evasive manner and he failed to use turn signals. She lost track of him but later saw him walking in the same manner as before. He failed to stop when she told him to do so, and he had a strong odor of intoxicants. These circumstances created a particularized suspicion and reasonable grounds to believe that he may have been driving under the influence of alcohol. Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 125 (1996), followed in Seyferth v. St., 277 M 377, 922 P2d 494, 53 St. Rep. 698 (1996).

Reasonable Cause for Arrest — Citizen Informants Considered Presumptively Reliable: Facts and circumstances within an officer's personal knowledge (that plaintiff was in control of the vehicle in the parking lot) and facts imparted to him by three citizen informants (that plaintiff was intoxicated) were sufficient to warrant a reasonable person to believe that plaintiff was driving under the influence of alcohol. Information provided by citizen informants is considered presumptively reliable. Therefore, the officer had probable cause to arrest plaintiff, and the District Court did not err in suspending plaintiff's driver's license for 90 days. Santee v. St., 267 M 304, 883 P2d 829, 51 St. Rep. 1034 (1994), citing St. v. Sharp, 217 M 40, 702 P2d 959, 42 St. Rep. 1009 (1985), and St. v. Lee, 232 M 105, 754 P2d 512, 45 St. Rep. 903 (1988).

Arrest by Peace Officer Outside Officer's Jurisdiction — Applicability of Driving Under the Influence Implied Consent Law:

A peace officer is by statute "any person who by virtue of the person's office or public employment is vested by law with a duty to maintain public order and make arrests for offenses while acting within the scope of the person's authority". Though a city police officer's authority did not extend beyond the city limits and his arrest of a driver beyond the city limits for being under the influence could only be a citizen's arrest, he was within the definition of a peace officer even when outside the geographical area in which he had jurisdiction because he was at the time of the arrest a peace officer in fact and by virtue of holding the particular job. Therefore, the implied consent law applied even though it refers to a person "arrested by a peace officer". Maney v. St., 255 M 270, 842 P2d 704, 49 St. Rep. 980 (1992).

In St. v. Updegraff, 2011 MT 321, 363 Mont. 123, 267 P.3d 28, the Supreme Court clarified the authority of out-of-jurisdiction peace officers to make arrests, concluding that an out-of-jurisdiction peace officer must meet the arrest standard that applies to a private person in the same circumstances, and if this standard is met, the officer may then follow the procedures applicable to peace officers when processing an arrest.

Lack of Formal Custody Transfer by Police Officer Outside Officer's Jurisdiction:

Police officer followed beyond the Chinook city limits a vehicle he believed was driven by a person with a revoked license. He radioed for backup and stopped the vehicle after noticing it was moving slowly and erratically. The driver's breath smelled of alcohol, and after field sobriety maneuvers, the police officer and a Deputy Sheriff who had arrived agreed that the driver was impaired. The police officer then arrested the driver and delivered him to the Sheriff's office in Chinook. The police officer did not have to formally transfer custody to the Deputy Sheriff for the police officer's citizen's arrest to be legal. Maney v. St., 255 M 270, 842 P2d 704, 49 St. Rep. 980 (1992), overruled in St. v. Hendrickson, 283 M 105, 939 P2d 985, 54 St. Rep. 516 (1997).

In St. v. Updegraff, 2011 MT 321, 363 Mont. 123, 267 P.3d 28, the Supreme Court clarified the authority of out-of-jurisdiction peace officers to make arrests, concluding that an out-of-jurisdiction peace officer must meet the arrest standard that applies to a private person in the same circumstances, and if this standard is met, the officer may then follow the procedures applicable to peace officers when processing an arrest.

Lack of Particularized Suspicion of Wrongdoing — Seizure of License Improper: Because deputies who saw no evidence of erratic driving throughout their observation of Grinde's car lacked a particularized suspicion of wrongdoing on his part, the subsequent stop of his vehicle and the resulting arrest were illegal. Given these circumstances, the District Court properly returned Grinde's driver's license. Grinde v. St., 249 M 77, 813 P2d 473, 48 St. Rep. 586 (1991), clarifying Armstrong v. St., 245 M 420, 800 P2d 172, 47 St. Rep. 2057 (1990).

License Suspension Hearing a Civil Proceeding — Requires Only Reasonable Belief That Defendant Under the Influence and in Control of Vehicle: The defendant was asleep in his vehicle with the motor running. The arresting officer smelled alcohol but did not administer any field sobriety tests. At the station house, the defendant refused to take a blood alcohol test. The Supreme Court ruled that a hearing to suspend an individual's driver's license is a civil proceeding and that the arresting officer only needs to show reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant was in control of the vehicle and under the influence of alcohol. Looking at the facts before it, the court ruled that the officer's belief that the defendant was in control of the pickup and under the influence was reasonable. Gebhardt v. St., 238 M 90, 775 P2d 1261, 46 St. Rep. 1114 (1989), followed in In re Turner v. St., 244 M 151, 795 P2d 982, 47 St. Rep. 1576 (1990).

Suspension of License Hearing — Need Only Show Reasonable Belief Vehicle on Highway: A hearing to suspend an individual's license for refusing to take a blood alcohol test is a civil proceeding separate and distinct from the criminal DUI charge. The arresting officer need only show that he had reasonable grounds to believe that the vehicle was on a way of the state open to the public. The Supreme Court ruled that considering statutory language and precedent, the officer had reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant's pickup, located approximately 10 feet from the traveled portion of the roadway, was on a way of the state open to the public. Gebhardt v. St., 238 M 90, 775 P2d 1261, 46 St. Rep. 1114 (1989), followed in Thompson v. Dept. of Justice, 264 M 372, 871 P2d 1333, 51 St. Rep. 272 (1994).

Arrest Required — Capability of Refusal: An arrest is required before a blood sample may be taken pursuant to this section. When the record did not disclose that the defendant was incapable of refusal, a motion to suppress for failure to obtain the consent of the defendant was properly granted. St. v. Mangels, 166 M 190, 531 P2d 1313, 32 St. Rep. 177 (1975).

ADVICE OF RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Admissibility of DUI Suspect's Spontaneous Statements: An officer stopped Damon for investigatory purposes, but the officer failed to recite the advisories for investigative stops. Damon answered several questions and then spontaneously said "Just give me a DUI" and "I'm already drunk." Damon contended that all of his statements should be disallowed because the officer failed to give the advisories. The District Court disallowed all of Damon's statements that were given in response to the officer's questions, but allowed Damon's spontaneous statements. The Supreme Court noted that under St. v. Nelson, 2004 MT 310, 323 M 510, 101 P3d 261 (2004), it is an officer's questioning that triggers the advisories. Damon's spontaneous utterances were not in response to specific questioning and were therefore admissible. St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 M 276, 119 P3d 1194 (2005).

Sufficient Evidence of Voluntary Consent to Draw and Analyze Blood Sample: Following an accident in which DUI was suspected, Zakovi was taken to a hospital where an officer requested a blood sample for DUI analysis. Zakovi questioned the need for a blood test after admitting that he had been drinking prior to the accident. The officer explained that a test was still necessary, and Zakovi was advised of the right to refuse consent. The phlebotomist who took the blood sample testified that her compliance with the officer's request to take the sample was contingent on Zakovi's understanding of the consent form, that she informed Zakovi that his signature on the form authorized the hospital to take a blood sample and deliver it to the officer, that the officer's signature on the form was a request that a sample be drawn for blood alcohol analysis, that she read the form to Zakovi, and that he understood and signed the form. This was ample evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the state established that Zakovi's consent was voluntary. St. v. Zakovi, 2005 MT 91, 326 M 475, 110 P3d 469 (2005).

Breath Test Administered Before Reading of Implied Consent Advisory — Motion to Suppress Properly Denied: Kintli was stopped for suspicion of DUI. She was administered field sobriety tests and was read the preliminary alcohol screen test advisory. At the detention center, she refused to repeat the field sobriety tests and indicated that she wanted to take the breath test. The test was administered and resulted in a BAC of 0.262. Following the test, the officer read Kintli the consent advisory and offered to void the test and administer a new one. Kintli indicated that she did not want to retake the test. Kintli was found guilty of DUI per se in City Court and appealed to District Court for a trial de novo. She moved to suppress the results of the breath test, which was denied. Kintli then pleaded guilty, reserving the right to appeal the suppression denial. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court. Because the right to independent blood testing remains constant regardless of whether the suspect refuses or submits to testing, Kintli's argument that the officer's failure to advise her of this right before she consented invalidates her consent is nonsensical. She was timely advised of her right to obtain independent blood testing, and this was sufficient to safeguard her due process rights. Section 61-8-409 requires an officer to advise a person submitting to a preliminary breath test ("PBT") of the right of refusal and the consequences of refusal. The Supreme Court has held that in order for that statutory section to have meaning, the notice of the right of refusal and the consequences of refusal necessarily must precede the testing. No similar statutory requirement is found as to other BAC tests conducted after arrest. St. v. Kintli, 2004 MT 373, 325 M 53, 103 P3d 1056 (2004).

Requirement That Officer Provide Certain Information to Person Lawfully Stopped for Investigation or Stop and Frisk: Prior to a hearing on his petition for reinstatement of his driver's license, which was revoked after his refusal to take a Breathalyzer test, Krause moved to suppress various statements made to the arresting officer. Krause argued that under Montana's stop and frisk statute, before asking where Krause had been and whether he had been drinking, the officer was required pursuant to 46-5-402(4) (now repealed) to inform Krause that he was a peace officer, that the stop was not an arrest but rather a temporary detention for investigative purposes, and that, unless arrested, Krause would be released upon completion of the investigation. The motion to suppress was denied, and Krause appealed. The state argued that 46-5-402(4) (now repealed) applied only if the officer had reason to suspect that Krause was armed and dangerous, as provided by 46-5-402(1) (now repealed), asserting that this was an investigative stop governed by 46-5-401 rather than a stop and frisk governed by 46-5-402 (now repealed), and that because 46-5-401 does not contain the same information requirement as 46-5-402 (now repealed), it was not necessary that the officer inform Krause as required in 46-5-402(4) (now repealed). The Supreme Court agreed with Krause. By it terms, the stop and frisk statute clearly and unambiguously applies to the investigative stop statute as well. Therefore, a peace officer is also required to give the warning contemplated in 46-5-402(4) (now repealed) when a person is stopped for a DUI investigation, even when there is no intention to frisk, and the District Court erred when it did not suppress statements made by Krause prior to the officer giving the warning St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002).

Allegation of Misinformation in Implied Consent Advisory Form as Applied to Nonresident — Motion to Suppress Results of Breath Test Properly Denied: Fergunson pleaded guilty to driving under the influence of alcohol and driving the wrong way on a one-way street, but reserved his right to appeal the denial of his motion to suppress the evidence of his breath test. On appeal, Fergunson argued that the test results should have been suppressed because the implied consent advisory form misstated the law as it applied to him as a resident of Iowa and that he was thus unlawfully coerced into taking the breath test without having all the correct and relevant information upon which to make an informed decision. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the motion to suppress. The purposes of implied consent advisory forms are to put an apparently intoxicated driver on notice of the potentially serious consequences of refusing a blood alcohol test and to alert the driver of the due process protections germane to independent testing and posttesting hearings. Those purposes were accomplished here. Given that Fergunson's right to operate a motor vehicle faced suspension in both states because he refused to take the breath test and in light of the fact that he was told that his license would be returned to Iowa if he refused to take the test, his argument that he was misled or unlawfully coerced was unpersuasive. Missoula v. Fergunson, 2001 MT 69, 305 M 36, 22 P3d 198 (2001), following St. v. Simmons, 2000 MT 329, 303 M 60, 15 P3d 408 (2000). Fergunson and Simmons were followed in Anderson v. St., 2007 MT 225, 339 M 113, 168 P3d 1042 (2007), as applied to a resident driver who was not specifically informed that failure to submit to a breath test would result in suspension of a Montana driver's license, but was nevertheless informed of the serious consequences of failure to take the test by reference to the consequences to a nonresident driver.

Officer's Suspension of License Advice to Nonresident Driver Refusing Alcohol Testing Not Misleading — Motion to Suppress Test Results Denied: Following an arrest for DUI, Simmons, a Nevada resident, was informed by the arresting officer that failure to comply with a request for a breath sample would result in possible seizure or suspension of his Nevada driver's license. In a motion to suppress the evidence, Simmons argued that the District Court had erred in denying his motion to suppress the breath test results because, since Montana had no authority to seize or suspend a Nevada license, his consent to the test was invalid because the officer provided erroneous and misleading information about the consequences of refusing testing. Simmons cited a Georgia decision, St. v. Coleman, 455 SE 2d 604 (Ga. App. 1995), in which the Georgia court ruled that informing holders of out-of-state driver's licenses that they will lose driving privileges if they refuse blood alcohol testing constituted misinformation that justifies excluding from evidence any subsequent breath test results. Under Georgia law, drivers must be informed that the penalty for refusing a blood alcohol test is the loss of driving privileges "at least on the highways of this state". In affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court adopted the reasoning of the three-judge minority in Coleman, ruling that the advisory read to Simmons was technically correct in informing him that failure to submit to a blood alcohol test would result in the seizure and suspension of his driver's license. If a person refuses a testing request, Montana law specifically authorizes the Department of Justice to suspend or revoke nonresident driving privileges and to forward the seized license, along with a report of the testing refusal, to the licensing authority of the nonresident's home state. Since by definition a driver's license includes "any nonresident's driving privilege", the advisory read to Simmons informing him that his driver's license would be seized and suspended was technically correct. St. v. Simmons, 2000 MT 329, 303 M 60, 15 P3d 408, 57 St. Rep. 1393 (2000).

Due Process Requires Individuals to Be Informed of Right to Independent Blood or Breath Test — Remedy for Failure to Inform Is Suppression of State's BAC Evidence: Strand argued that his due process right to obtain exculpatory evidence had been denied by the Kalispell Police Department's policy to not inform an individual of the right to an independent blood or breath test when the individual consents to the test designated by the arresting officer. The Supreme Court held that due process requires the arresting officer to inform the individual of the right to an independent test regardless of whether the accused consents to the test designated by the officer. The Supreme Court further held that the appropriate remedy for the state's failure to inform Strand of his rights was to suppress the state's BAC evidence because the failure to inform negated the informed consent provisions of state law. St. v. Strand, 286 M 122, 951 P2d 552, 54 St. Rep. 1333 (1997), overruled in St. v. Minkoff, 2002 MT 29, 308 M 248, 42 P3d 223 (2002).

Refusal to Take Breathalyzer Test — Driver Properly Informed of Options and Consequences: Ellenburg contended that his driver's license was improperly suspended because he had been misinformed of the consequences of not taking the breath test and was led to believe that a blood test would satisfy the implied consent statute despite his refusal to take a breath test. However, a review of the videotape of the DUI booking showed that the arresting officer clearly explained that the breath test was being offered as the designated test under the implied consent statute. The officer was not required to request a blood test from Ellenburg because the offered breath test had already been refused. Ellenburg's petition for reinstatement of his driver's license was properly denied. Ellenburg v. Dept. of Justice, 280 M 268, 929 P2d 861, 53 St. Rep. 1398 (1996), distinguishing In re Orman, 224 M 332, 731 P2d 893 (1986).

"Confusion Doctrine" Inapplicable: Stopped for suspicion of driving under the influence, appellant was read the implied consent form and asked to submit to a blood alcohol content (BAC) test. After appellant refused, the officer read appellant's Miranda rights and allowed appellant to call an attorney. Subsequently, appellant's license was suspended for refusing to submit to the BAC test. Appealing the suspension, appellant argued that the BAC test refusal should be excused because the officer's failure to inform appellant that a driver has no right to counsel before deciding whether to submit to the BAC test caused appellant to confuse his Miranda right to counsel with rights under the implied consent law. While not adopting the "confusion doctrine", the Supreme Court ruled that it applies only when Miranda rights are given prior to or contemporaneously with a driver being informed of rights under the implied consent law. Since appellant's Miranda rights were read after the implied consent form was read and after the driver's refusal to submit to the BAC test, it was unlikely that appellant confused the Miranda right to counsel with rights under the implied consent law. St., 282 M 491, 938 P2d 693, 54 St. Rep. 450 (1997), and distinguished in Williams v. St., 1999 MT 5, 293 M 36, 973 P2d 218, 56 St. Rep. 20 (1999).

INDEPENDENT, FORCED, AND REFUSED TESTS

Evidence of Refusal to Take Sobriety Test Not Shift of Proof of Innocence of DUI to Defendant — Jury Instructions as a Whole Adequate Statement of Applicable Law: Miller contended that jury instructions failed to instruct the jury that his refusal to take a DUI sobriety test did not in itself prove that he was under the influence and that the jury was not instructed that the state had to produce other corroborating evidence of DUI, which had the effect of transforming the permissive inference allowed by 61-8-404 into a mandatory presumption that Miller was under the influence. The Supreme Court examined the jury instructions as a whole and disagreed. As stated in St. v. Michaud, 2008 MT 88, 342 M 244, 180 P3d 636 (2008), the inference in 61-8-404 is permissive and does not violate due process because there is a rational connection between driving while intoxicated and refusing to take a sobriety test. Thus, the jury instructions did not unconstitutionally shift the burden to Miller to prove his innocence, and the instructions fully and fairly instructed the jury regarding the applicable law. Miller's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Miller, 2008 MT 106, 342 M 355, 181 P3d 625 (2008), followed in St. v. Larson, 2010 MT 236, 358 Mont. 156, 243 P.3d 1130. See also Great Falls v. Morris, 2006 MT 93, 332 M 85, 134 P3d 692 (2006).

No Clear Discussion Regarding Separate Blood Alcohol Test or Impediment of Request for Independent Test — Due Process Not Violated: As the arresting officer was reading the implied consent law, Wrzesinski stated, "I want a blood test though". The officer then finished reading the implied consent law, explaining that after the requested breath test was complete, Wrzesinski could request an independent test. Wrzesinski refused the breath test and did not request an independent test or raise the topic of other alternatives to the breath test. Wrzesinski subsequently moved to dismiss on grounds that he was not given the blood test that he requested and that his request to receive one was unreasonably impeded. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. An accused has a due process right to be informed of the right to obtain an independent blood alcohol test, but when a due process violation is alleged, the defendant must establish that the test was timely requested and that the arresting officer unreasonably impeded the right to the test. Here, Wrzesinski's statement could reasonably be construed as an expression of a desire to request a blood test as an alternative to the breath test that the officer selected, but could not be construed as a request for an independent blood test, and even if Wrzesinski had done so, the officer did not unreasonably impede Wrzesinski from obtaining one. St. v. Wrzesinski, 2006 MT 263, 334 M 157, 145 P3d 985 (2006).

Jury Instructions Concerning Actual Physical Control and Implied Consent Proper: The trial court instructed the jury that a person has actual physical control of a vehicle when the person is in a position and has the ability to operate a vehicle. The court also instructed the jury regarding the admissibility of Hudson's refusal to submit to field sobriety tests. Hudson appealed on grounds that the definition should be modified to address whether the trier of fact believed that the person under the influence drove the vehicle to the location and intended to operate the vehicle and on grounds that the evidence of a refusal to submit to field sobriety tests was an improper comment on the evidence. The Supreme Court affirmed the jury instructions. The definition of actual physical control was identical to the Model Criminal Jury Instruction and accurately reflected the law as developed by judicial interpretation. Additionally, under the implied consent provisions of this section, evidence of a refusal to submit to field sobriety tests, including the Breathalyzer, remains admissible in any criminal proceeding. The trial court fully and adequately instructed the jury, Hudson had ample opportunity to argue the merits of his defense, and Hudson's DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Hudson, 2005 MT 142, 327 M 286, 114 P3d 210 (2005).

When Right to Obtain Independent Blood Test Unreasonably Impeded — No Due Process Violation — Swanson Rule Clarified: One accused of a crime involving intoxication is entitled to obtain an independent blood test only when: (1) the defendant has timely claimed the right to an independent blood test; and (2) a law enforcement officer has unreasonably impeded the defendant's right to obtain an independent blood test. Both criteria must be satisfied in order to support an allegation of violation of a defendant's due process rights. The rule does not apply either if the defendant fails to timely request the independent blood test or if the independent blood test is unavailable through no unreasonable acts of law enforcement. In the present case, Sidmore's due process rights were not violated because the unavailability of an independent blood test was not caused by an unreasonable act of law enforcement but rather by Sidmore's own failure to act after requesting and being given the opportunity to arrange an independent blood test. St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558, 54 St. Rep. 1381 (1997), clarifying St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155 (1986), and distinguishing St. v. Strand, 286 M 122, 951 P2d 552, 54 St. Rep. 1333 (1997). See also St. v. Minkoff, 2002 MT 29, 308 M 248, 42 P3d 223 (2002), St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 M 221, 136 P3d 543 (2006), and St. v. Wrzesinski, 2006 MT 263, 334 M 157, 145 P3d 985 (2006).

Negligent Vehicular Assault — Blood Sample Evidence Drawn in Violation of Statute Not Admissible: Defendant was arrested for negligent vehicular assault and refused to give a blood sample for determination of blood alcohol content. The sample was forcibly taken. The District Court suppressed the blood alcohol evidence, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the DUI offense set forth in 61-8-401 is a specific element of and is subsumed in the negligent vehicular assault offense, defendant was "arrested by a peace officer for driving or for being in actual physical control of a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol". Therefore, this section prohibited the state from forcibly giving the blood test after refusal to submit to it, and the blood sample evidence was drawn in violation of the statute and was inadmissible. St. v. Stueck, 280 M 38, 929 P2d 829, 53 St. Rep. 1288 (1996), followed in St. v. Schauf, 2009 MT 281, 352 M 186, 216 P3d 740 (2009).

Willing but Unable Participant in Alcohol Test — Meaning of "Test or Tests" as Single Test for Alcohol — Psychological Inability to Perform: Wessell consented to a breath test, but two attempts failed because of the failure of the internal standards check for the test instrument. He was asked to submit to a blood test but immediately refused based on his great fear of needles. He volunteered to take a urine test, but the offer was refused because the police department had no way to preserve the integrity of a test sample. Wessell declined to have an independent test completed because he believed that his driving privileges would be suspended regardless as a result of his failure to submit to a blood test. The officer completed the refusal affidavit and seized Wessell's license. On appeal, Wessell claimed that this section does not expressly authorize more than one test for alcohol to which he gave consent. However, the state claimed that the language "test or tests" in subsection (3) allows consecutive tests for alcohol and that Wessell refused to submit to the alternate blood test. The Supreme Court concluded that the plural language added to the statute refers to the sequential testing for alcohol and then drugs, not for consecutive tests for alcohol alone. However, the alcohol test must be a full and complete analysis. Because the breath test was not completed, it was not valid, so the officer was within the statutory constraints when designating a second method of testing to achieve a valid alcohol test. Although certain uncooperative actions by a motorist may comprise a refusal, Wessell was fully cooperative but was unable to submit to the blood test because of a valid, disabling fear of needles. This psychological inability to perform the test was the equivalent of a physical disability precluding Wessell from completing a valid test regardless of his willingness. The District Court erred in concluding that Wessell's inability to participate in the test regardless of his willingness constituted a refusal warranting license suspension, and thus the case was reversed and remanded. Wessell v. St., 277 M 234, 921 P2d 264, 53 St. Rep. 610 (1996).

Arrest Not Required for Nonconsenual Blood Sample Without Warrant — No Fourth Amendment Violation: While administering first aid to plaintiff injured in a motorcycle accident, rangers noticed telltale signs of alcohol use and requested that plaintiff submit to a Breathalyzer test. After plaintiff refused, park rangers instructed the medic to withdraw a sample of blood while administering an emergency I.V. Based largely on the blood sample, plaintiff was subsequently convicted of drunk driving. On appeal, a three-judge panel reversed the conviction, concluding that under U.S. v. Harvey, the rangers' failure to arrest the plaintiff before or shortly after obtaining the blood sample rendered the seizure unreasonable under the fourth amendment. On review, the Ninth Circuit Court vacated the conviction, holding that the fourth amendment does not require a suspect's arrest for officers to obtain a blood sample without consent or a warrant. U.S. v. Chapel, 55 F3d 1416 (9th Cir. 1995), expressly overruling U.S. v. Harvey, 701 F2d 800 (9th Cir. 1983), which held that the fourth amendment requires authorities to arrest a suspect prior to a nonconsenual taking of blood without a warrant.

Failure of City to Comply With Request for DUI Independent Blood Test — Due Process Violation: Defendant timely requested an independent blood test during the booking procedure on a DUI violation and was told that the test would be obtained, but the test was not obtained. A person accused of a criminal offense has a constitutional right to attempt to obtain exculpatory evidence, and when the offense charged involves intoxication, this right, as set out in St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155 (1986), encompasses the accused's right to obtain an independent blood test to establish sobriety, regardless of whether the accused submitted to a police-designated test. Failure to obtain the test when timely requested was a due process violation warranting reversal and dismissal of the charge. Whitefish v. Pinson, 271 M 170, 895 P2d 610, 52 St. Rep. 384 (1995). See also St. v. Peterson, 227 M 418, 739 P2d 958 (1987), and St. v. Klinkhammer, 256 M 275, 846 P2d 1008 (1993).

Burden on Defendant to Prove Inability to Complete Test — Remedies Available: Hunter was arrested for DUI and asked to take a breath test. She consented but did not blow into the Breathalyzer hard enough to operate the machine. Hunter was then given other sobriety tests and again given a chance to take the breath test, but she stated that she believed she had performed enough tests. Hunter's driver's license was then seized for refusal to take the breath test. The Supreme Court held that Hunter had the burden of proof of showing that the arresting officer erroneously determined that Hunter refused to take the breath test. The statute does not give the driver the right to demand another type of test or require that the officer offer another type. If the driver believes that the officer has erroneously determined that the driver refused to take the breath test, the driver's remedy is to petition for reinstatement of the license. The Supreme Court reviewed the record and determined that Hunter had not met her burden of proof. Hunter v. St., 264 M 84, 869 P2d 787, 51 St. Rep. 158 (1994).

Withdrawal of Former Refusal to Take Breath Test Not Recognized: Hunter was arrested for DUI and asked to take a breath test. She consented but did not blow into the Breathalyzer hard enough to operate the machine. Hunter was then given other sobriety tests and again given a chance to take the breath test, but she stated that she believed she had performed enough tests. When threatened with seizure of her license, Hunter asked if there was anything else she could do. Hunter's driver's license was then seized for refusal to take the breath test. Hunter claimed that she withdrew her refusal to take more tests. The Supreme Court held that in offering generally to do anything else she was required to, Hunter did not clearly withdraw her former refusal. Citing Johnson v. Div. of Motor Vehicles, 219 M 310, 711 P2d 815 (1985), the Supreme Court also held that the arresting officer was not bound to accept a withdrawal of the earlier refusal. Hunter v. St., 264 M 84, 869 P2d 787, 51 St. Rep. 158 (1994).

Independent Sobriety Test — Failure to Obtain Test Not Violation of Due Process if Test Not Requested: When the defendant failed to request an independent sobriety test, even though the defendant at one point stated that he wanted a test to be performed by his own doctor, the District Court was not clearly erroneous in determining that the defendant's due process rights were not violated. The mere fact that an independent sobriety test was not obtained was not a violation of a defendant's due process rights. St. v. Klinkhammer, 256 M 275, 846 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 92 (1993).

Swanson Rule Limited — No Police Duty to Assist in Obtaining Exculpatory Evidence: The rule set out in St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), applies only when: (1) the defendant has timely claimed the right to a blood test; and (2) the officer does not unreasonably impede the defendant's right to a blood test. Police officers have no affirmative duty to assist in gathering exculpatory evidence nor may they frustrate such efforts on the part of the accused. St. v. Clark, 234 M 222, 762 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 1859 (1988).

Officer's Persistence in Obtaining Blood Sample Pursuant to Search Warrant — Within Scope of Employment: Collins was arrested for DUI but refused to submit to a chemical test. Upon learning that Collins was on probation for a prior DUI and for other non-DUI offenses, the arresting officer obtained a search warrant authorizing extraction of a blood sample. Collins later filed an action alleging assault and battery and violation of his constitutional rights. The District Court found the officer acted outside the scope of his employment and that the blood sample was unauthorized and contrary to subsection (3) of this section. The Supreme Court reversed, finding it was clear the officer acted as he did to preserve evidence relating to non-DUI offenses and acted within the scope of his employment. Where law enforcement authorities have probable cause to believe an offense other than an underlying DUI has occurred for which a blood test is required to preserve evidence, a blood sample may be taken pursuant to a search warrant. Collins v. St., 232 M 73, 755 P2d 1373, 45 St. Rep. 878 (1988).

Right to Independent Blood Test in Crime Involving Intoxication: The state interpreted 61-8-405 to mean that the right to an independent blood test arises only after an accused takes a test designated by the arresting officer. The Supreme Court, citing an Arizona Appellate Court interpretation of an identical statute, found that such an interpretation would result in an unconstitutional restraint on the right of a criminal accused to attempt to obtain independent evidence of his innocence and deprive him of due process of law (Smith v. Cada, 562 P2d 390 (Ariz. App. 1977)). Therefore, it was held that a person accused of a crime involving intoxication has a right to obtain an independent blood test to establish his sobriety regardless of whether he submits to a police designated test under 61-8-402. St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), distinguished in Walker v. St., 229 M 331, 746 P2d 624, 44 St. Rep. 2008 (1987), on grounds that defendant Walker was subject to civil penalty under this section, not criminal penalty under 61-8-405.

Taking Test After Refusal of Test — No Cure of Refusal: Police officer informed driver three times that officer was requesting a Breathalyzer test. Each time driver asked if he could have an attorney present and was told he did not have that right. Each time driver failed to take the test. He may have been confused by the apparent conflict between his stated Miranda rights and the lack of a right to have an attorney present during the test, and he did not expressly refuse to submit to a test. About twenty minutes later, a doctor took a blood test at driver's request. Driver's attorney gave the results, showing a 0.20 blood alcohol level, to the prosecution. Driver's license was properly seized on his failure to take the requested test, and the later test did not cure driver's failure to take the requested test. It is refusal to take the test the officer requests that triggers automatic license suspension, and no code section allows a withdrawal or cure of a refusal. The driver's conduct and statements were an implied refusal. Any Miranda-warning confusion on driver's part was irrelevant when the officer told him he had no right to have an attorney present during a blood test. Johnson v. Div. of Motor Vehicles, 219 M 310, 711 P2d 815, 42 St. Rep. 2045 (1985), followed in Meyer v. St., 229 M 199, 745 P2d 694, 44 St. Rep. 1900 (1987), Walker v. St., 229 M 331, 746 P2d 624, 44 St. Rep. 2008 (1987), and In re Suspension of Driver's License of Blomeyer v. St., 264 M 414, 871 P2d 1338, 51 St. Rep. 324 (1994).

Test to Be Designated by Arresting Officer: The District Court did not err in refusing to reinstate appellant's driving privileges that were suspended when appellant refused to take a breath test and insisted on a blood test. If an arrested person chooses to take a chemical test other than the test designated by the arresting officer and will not take the designated test, it is a refusal for which his driver's license will be suspended. (See 1993 amendment.) St. v. Christopherson, 217 M 449, 705 P2d 121, 42 St. Rep. 1320 (1985).

No Choice as to Type of Test — Jurisdiction on Appeal: The District Court did not err in denying appellant's motion to reinstate driving privileges. Appellant's insistence on taking a blood test and refusing breath test constitutes a refusal for purposes of suspending driving privileges. Requiring appellant to take a breath test was not a denial of due process. Appellant's notice of appeal that referred only to the motion to dismiss the criminal matter (the charge of DUI) was sufficient notice of appeal of the civil issue (reinstatement of driving privileges) to confer jurisdiction over the civil matter when both issues were in the same District Court order. St. v. Logan, 217 M 446, 705 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1317 (1985), overruled by St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986). See St. v. Peterson, 227 M 503, 741 P2d 392, 44 St. Rep. 1198 (1987).

Section Not Applicable to Negligent Homicide Prosecutions: This section's prohibition against nonconsensual extractions of blood samples does not apply to prosecutions for negligent homicide under 45-5-104. Therefore, it was proper to admit into evidence at defendant's trial on the charge of negligent homicide the results of a blood test performed without his consent. St. v. Thompson, 207 M 433, 674 P2d 1094, 41 St. Rep. 57 (1984), distinguished in St. v. Stueck, 280 M 38, 929 P2d 829, 53 St. Rep. 1288 (1996).

"In a Condition Rendering Him Incapable of Refusal":

Investigating highway patrolman saw driver at scene of collision in which two persons in another auto were killed, received a blank stare when he questioned driver, saw driver in intensive care in hospital 2 hours later, with his eyes closed, lying on a bed with i.v.s being administered, and was told by a doctor that he could not speak to driver. Even though driver was conscious and apparently coherent, his physical condition was serious enough to render him incapable of refusing to consent to a blood test, and results of test made after the doctor authorized a nurse to draw blood from driver and give it to the patrolman were properly admitted in negligent homicide trial. St. v. Morgan, 198 M 391, 646 P2d 1177, 39 St. Rep. 1072 (1982).

Rumley appealed his conviction for negligent homicide in connection with a motor vehicle accident. A sample of Rumley's blood was taken after the accident, and he filed a motion to suppress the results of a blood alcohol test. There was testimony that Rumley was confused and disoriented after the accident. Rumley suffered a fractured jaw, a broken foot, and numerous other injuries. In light of this evidence of incapacity, the District Court properly denied the motion to suppress, and the officer at the hospital, unable to receive a coherent response from Rumley, properly requested that a blood sample be taken. St. v. Rumley, 194 M 506, 634 P2d 446, 38 St. Rep. 1351A (1981).

Properly Taken Blood Test: Applying the standard in St. v. Mangels, 166 M 190, 531 P2d 1313 (1975), that ". . . incapacity be determined on the basis of the best evidence which is reasonably available to the officer . . .", the Supreme Court found that defendant was in a condition rendering him incapable of refusing to consent to the taking of a blood sample. Thus, it was unnecessary for him to be placed under arrest prior to the blood sample taking. This result was held to be consistent with the implied consent statute and the fourth amendment protection against unlawful searches. The latter issue was addressed in St. v. Deshner, 158 M 188, 489 P2d 1290 (1971). St. v. Campbell, 189 M 107, 615 P2d 190, 37 St. Rep. 1337 (1980).

RIGHT TO COUNSEL

Proper Jury Instruction Regarding Defendant's Lack of Right to Attorney During Field Sobriety Tests: During a traffic stop, Stanczak was asked to perform field sobriety tests. The District Court instructed the jury in Stanczak's DUI trial that because there was no custodial interrogation, Stanczak had no right to counsel before completing the tests. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the instruction as a full and fair instruction on the applicable law. St. v. Stanczak, 2010 MT 106, 356 Mont. 263, 232 P.3d 896.

No Right to Counsel Prior to Taking Breath Test — Implied Consent: A person does not have a right to consult with counsel prior to deciding whether to take an alcohol breath test because consent is considered given as a matter of law pursuant to this section. St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001).

Confusion About Need for BAC Test Once PAST Taken — Refusal to Extend Confusion Doctrine: Williams was stopped by a Deputy Sheriff for driving erratically and consented to a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST), which she failed. The Deputy Sheriff then arrested her and took her to the Eureka police station. There, Williams was read the implied consent advisory form informing her that if she did not submit to a blood alcohol concentration (BAC) test, her driver's license would be confiscated. Williams refused to submit to a BAC test, and the confiscation of her license was upheld by the District Court. Before the Supreme Court, Williams claimed that an extension of the "confusion doctrine" should be held to apply to her case. The Supreme Court held that the confusion doctrine, discussed by the Supreme Court in Blomeyer v. St., 264 M 414, 871 P2d 1338 (1994), and Gentry v. Dept. of Justice, 282 M 491, 938 P2d 693 (1997), and under which refusal to submit to the BAC may be excused if a driver is given a Miranda warning first and is therefore confused as to whether the driver has a right to an attorney before submitting to the BAC, would not be extended to a situation such as Williams's, in which it was claimed that confusion existed as to the necessity for the BAC if the PAST has already been administered. Williams v. St., 1999 MT 5, 293 M 36, 973 P2d 218, 56 St. Rep. 20 (1999).

No Right to Counsel Before Deciding Whether to Submit to Chemical Testing — Blood Alcohol Test Not "Critical Stage" Event, Self-Incriminating Communication, or Denial of Due Process: Defendant was arrested on a charge of driving while under the influence of alcohol. He agreed to a chemical test after being told that he had a right to refuse the test and that he did not have a right to consult an attorney before deciding whether to submit to testing. The District Court granted the defendant's motion to suppress the results of the test on the basis of the 6th and 14th amendments to the U.S. Constitution. The Supreme Court reversed and found that neither the U.S. Constitution nor the Montana Constitution guarantees a defendant the opportunity to seek an attorney's advice before deciding whether to submit to a blood alcohol test, when consent is considered given as a matter of law. A Breathalyzer test is not susceptible to the suggestive manipulation characteristic of the "critical stage" event, the results of the test are not self-incriminating communications, and the statutory procedures for the test meet due process requirements. St. v. Armfield, 214 M 229, 693 P2d 1226, 41 St. Rep. 2430 (1984), followed in Meyer v. St., 229 M 199, 745 P2d 694, 44 St. Rep. 1900 (1987), In re Suspension of Driver's License of Blomeyer v. St., 264 M 414, 871 P2d 1338, 51 St. Rep. 324 (1994), St. v. Van Kirk, 2001

MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), and St. v. Michaud, 2008 MT 88, 342 M 244, 180 P3d 636 (2008).

TEMPORARY LICENSE

Appeal Not Allowing for Reinstatement of License Because of Officer's Failure to Issue Temporary License: An appeal under 61-8-403 does not allow for reinstatement of a driver's license because of an officer's failure to issue a temporary license under subsection (5) of this section. Hawman v. State ex rel. Beckstrom, 1998 MT 218, 290 M 467, 963 P2d 1288, 55 St. Rep. 913 (1998).

LICENSE SUSPENSION

Authority of Deputy Sheriff to Make Arrest Without Completing Training Within One Year of Appointment: Jess asserted that the Deputy Sheriff who arrested her for DUI lacked the authority to make the unsupervised arrest because the deputy had not completed basic law enforcement training as required in 7-32-303 and that because the deputy was unauthorized, Jess's suspended driver's license should be reinstated. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 7-32-303, a deputy must complete basic training within 1 year of appointment. However, the deputy was appointed only 8 months prior to the arrest and was therefore within the 1-year pretraining period. The deputy had completed 280 hours of reserve training and 24 hours of DUI training and had made numerous arrests both with and without supervision and thus was sufficiently experienced to form a particularized suspicion of DUI. The District Court's denial of Jess's motion for license reinstatement was affirmed. Jess v. St. ex rel. Records & Driver Control, 2008 MT 422, 347 M 381, 198 P3d 306 (2008).

Probable Cause and Particularized Suspicion of DUI Based on Flagrant Traffic Violations — Suspension of License Proper: Cybulski drove west in the eastbound lane of an interstate highway for at least 30 minutes, obviously oblivious to the surrounding environment. Cybulski initially refused to stop for a pursuing officer, and when she did stop, she failed to respond to the officer's instructions, and the officer had to forcibly remove her from the car before placing her under arrest. Cybulski failed field sobriety tests and refused to take a breath test, so her license was suspended. Cybulski later petitioned for reinstatement of her license, and the District Court granted the petition on grounds that although the officer had a particularized suspicion to stop Cybulski for driving on the wrong side of the highway, the officer lacked the requisite particularized suspicion to conduct sobriety tests and the probable cause to make a DUI arrest. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. An experienced officer could infer that Cybulski was DUI based on the sheer length of time that Cybulski traveled on the wrong side of the interstate and her apparent obliviousness to oncoming traffic traveling in the same lane. When paired with Cybulski's unusually delayed response to pursuing officers, the officer was entitled to infer that Cybulski was DUI even before she stopped her car. Probable cause existed because there were sufficient facts and circumstances within the officer's personal knowledge to warrant a reasonable belief that Cybulski had committed an offense. Because the officer had both a particularized suspicion to believe that Cybulski was DUI and probable cause for an arrest, Cybulski was lawfully under arrest at the time that she was removed from her car and handcuffed on the interstate and when asked to submit to a breath test, so her license was properly suspended. In re License Suspension of Cybulski, 2008 MT 128, 343 M 56, 183 P3d 39 (2008).

No Reasonable Grounds to Believe Defendant DUI — Sole Testimony of Defendant Sufficient to Prove No DUI Occurred: Eustance drove to the airport to pick up his daughter and grandson who were arriving on a flight. Because of hip pain, it was more comfortable to wait in his car. Eustance parked in the lot of a nearby car rental agency and fell asleep. Eustance was later awakened by a Deputy Sheriff who requested that Eustance perform field sobriety tests and a breath test, but Eustance refused to perform both tests, so his license was seized and suspended. At a hearing on a petition for reinstatement of his license, Eustance was the only witness. He testified that he had been operating his vehicle in a safe and legal manner prior to arrest, that his ability to drive was not impaired, and that he did not believe there was reasonable suspicion or probable cause to justify his arrest. The District Court agreed and granted the petition reinstating the license. On appeal, the state cited Hunter v. St., 264 M 84, 869 P2d 787 (1994), contending that Eustance had not met the burden of establishing that suspension of the license was improper because without the deputy's testimony, Eustance's own testimony was self-serving and insufficient to meet the burden. The Supreme Court disagreed. The testimony of one witness is sufficient to prove any fact. Nowhere in Hunter was it held that a petitioner in a license reinstatement hearing cannot meet the burden of proof without testimony from the arresting officer or that a petitioner's testimony, without more, is insufficient to meet the burden of proof. Thus, the District Court was entitled to accept Eustance's uncontradicted testimony as true. Absent evidence supporting the state's position, Eustance met the burden of proof and his license was properly reinstated. Eustance v. St., 2005 MT 34, 326 M 77, 107 P3d 478 (2005).

Issues for Consideration in Petition for Review of Seizure of Driver's License: As established in Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716 (1998), the three issues to be determined by a District Court in a petition for review of a seizure of a driver's license are whether: (1) the arresting officer had a particularized suspicion that a person was driving or in actual control of a vehicle on the ways of this state while under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (2) the petitioner was lawfully under arrest, including the existence of probable cause; and (3) the petitioner in fact declined to submit to a breath test. In this case, Widdicombe contested the first two determinations, but the Supreme Court affirmed. While leaving town on a two-lane highway, the arresting officer and another officer in the patrol car observed Widdicombe crossing the center lane three times, in violation of 61-8-321, and this fact was corroborated by videotape evidence. Thus, Widdicombe failed to meet the burden of proving a lack of particularized suspicion for the initial stop. Further, it was not necessary for the arresting officer to testify to probable cause when another officer witnessed the event and testified. Thus, Widdicombe failed to prove that the officers did not have probable cause for the arrest. Widdicombe v. State ex rel. LaFond, 2004 MT 49, 320 M 133, 85 P3d 1271 (2004), distinguishing St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998).

Challenge to Driver's License Suspension Considered Special Proceeding — Successful Defendant Entitled to Costs: Neal's driver's license was suspended for failure to take a breath test. Neal challenged the suspension, claiming that he did not refuse to take a breath test, and the District Court agreed. Neal's license was reinstated and Neal was granted costs. The state objected to the award of costs, and the District Court amended the original order and denied costs, so Neal appealed. Neal contended that as the prevailing party, an award of costs was proper under 25-10-101(2) because the license was valued at more than $50 or under 25-10-101(4) because the petition to reinstate the license was a special proceeding. The state contended that the particular provisions of 25-10-711 prevailed over the general provisions of 25-10-101, so 25-10-101 did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding no inconsistency between the statutes. Section 25-10-711 applies to actions in which a party prevails against a government entity and can establish that the government's claim or defense was frivolous or pursued in bad faith, but no such finding is required for recovery of costs under 25-10-101. The court went on to find that Neal's claim that costs were proper based on the license value was unfounded, because no finding of valuation was ever determined. However, the court concluded that a challenge to a driver's license suspension or revocation was a special proceeding pursuant to 27-1-102, and that as the prevailing party in the action, Neal was entitled to costs pursuant to 25-10-101. Neal v. St., 2003 MT 53, 314 M 357, 66 P3d 280 (2003).

DUI Suspension or Revocation Clarified — Law of Case Doctrine and Collateral Estoppel Inapplicable — Contempt Order Refused: Sanders was arrested for a second DUI in a 5-year period and filed an action in District Court seeking review of the facts of the arrest. The District Court and the Supreme Court upheld the arrest and noted that a 6-month suspension of Sanders' license would take place. Later, after the Department of Justice refused to reinstate the license after the 6-month period expired because this section applied and required a revocation of Sanders' license for 1 year, Sanders brought a contempt action in the District Court asking that the Department be held in contempt for failure to reinstate his license after expiration of the 6-month period. Sanders argued that the 6-month period had become the law of the case and that the failure of the Department to follow that law was a contempt of the District Court. After reviewing the records of the District Court and its own record in the previous DUI action, the Supreme Court held that the law of the case doctrine was inapplicable. Citing Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), and Scott v. Scott, 283 M 169, 939 P2d 998 (1997), the Supreme Court explained that the law of the case doctrine applies only to the rulings of a court that are necessary to the decision and, in the case of the District Court's and Supreme Court's prior ruling in Sanders' DUI conviction, a determination that only a 6-month suspension was required under this section was not necessary to either the District Court's or the Supreme Court's prior ruling. Those rulings, the Supreme Court said, concerned only whether the arresting officer had probable cause for the arrest. Thus, the Supreme Court held, the reference to a 6-month suspension in the previous opinions was dicta, there was no law of the case determined concerning the law governing license suspension or revocation, and therefore there could be no contempt for failure to reinstate Sanders' license. The Supreme Court also held that collateral estoppel was likewise inapplicable to require the Department to reinstate the license because collateral estoppel applies only to previously litigated issues and the period of license suspension or revocation of Sanders' license had not been previously litigated. Sanders v. St., 1998 MT 62, 288 M 143, 955 P2d 1356, 55 St. Rep. 272 (1998).

Failure to Seize License — Not Fatal to Enforcement of Statute: When, under this statute, an arresting officer fails to seize an individual's driver's license and fails to issue a 72-hour temporary driving permit to a driver who refuses to take the Breathalyzer test, the state may suspend the driver's license. An arresting officer's error in enforcing certain provisions of the statute does not automatically preclude enforcement of the entire statute. (See 1995 amendment.) In re Vinberg, 216 M 29, 699 P2d 91, 42 St. Rep. 615 (1985).

No Due Process Right to Presuspension Hearing: The defendant was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol. The arresting officer initially seized the defendant's driver's license, then later returned it after the defendant refused to take the Breathalyzer test. The officer failed to issue a 72-hour temporary driving permit. (See 1995 amendment.) The Motor Vehicle Division subsequently suspended the defendant's driver's license. The defendant then petitioned for a hearing on the suspension issue. Although 61-8-402 and 61-8-403 provide a mechanism for a hearing before suspension, in this case the defendant's license was suspended before he had a hearing. Following the decision in Mackey v. Montryn, 443 US 1, 61 L Ed 2d 321, 99 S Ct 2612 (1979), the Montana Supreme Court held that deprivation of a driver's license does not require a presuspension hearing. Due process is satisfied by a prompt postsuspension hearing. In re Vinberg, 216 M 29, 699 P2d 91, 42 St. Rep. 615 (1985).

EVIDENCE ISSUES

Challenge to Intoxilyzer Certification Reports: Rule 803(6), Montana Rules of Evidence, is a foundational rule that allows the state to admit into evidence Intoxilyzer certification reports that would normally be excluded as hearsay, and a defendant's failure to challenge Intoxilyzer certification reports prior to trial does not result in forfeiture of the right to do so at trial. St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

No Notice to Defendant of Testimony of Officer Who Ordered DUI Blood Test — Denial of Motion to Suppress DUI Blood Test Affirmed: Grela was taken to the hospital following a vehicle accident. The officer at the scene noticed several empty and full beer cans and a half-full bottle of whiskey in and around the vehicle. Grela was unconscious, but the officer requested a DUI blood test, and Grela was subsequently charged in Municipal Court with DUI. Grela asserted that the test results should be suppressed because he did not consent to withdrawal of the blood and because the state should have provided notice that the officer would be called as an expert witness. The suppression motion was denied and Grela appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Based on the best evidence available to the officers at the accident scene and at the hospital, the officer's belief that Grela was incapable of refusing the blood test was reasonable, so the blood was legally drawn and the test results were admissible. Additionally, Grela was given a copy of the officer's accident report as requested, so Grela had notice that the officer would testify as to the reasons underlying the officer's belief that Grela was incapable of refusing the blood test, and it was not necessary that the officer be disclosed as an expert. Billings v. Grela, 2009 MT 172, 350 M 511, 209 P3d 222 (2009).

Retrograde Extrapolation of Blood Alcohol Content Not Necessary to Prove Person's Blood Alcohol at Time Person Was Driving: Retrograde extrapolation, a technique through which experts estimate alcohol concentration at some earlier time based on test results at some later time, is not necessary evidence to prove what a person's blood alcohol was at the time that the person was driving. Here, the results of an Intoxilyzer breath test, coupled with defendant's bloodshot and glassy eyes, the smell of alcohol when defendant was stopped, defendant's admission that he had consumed alcohol, and defendant's failure of field sobriety tests, were sufficient to sustain a conviction of DUI per se. St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006), following St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), and followed in St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Breath Test Administered Within Reasonable Time After Alleged DUI Consistent With Per Se Intoxication Statute: McGowan contended that the DUI per se statute required proof that a driver's alcohol concentration was above 0.08 while driving. The Supreme Court disagreed. A preliminary alcohol screening test administered in the field does not satisfy a person's obligation to submit to a breath test pursuant to 61-8-409(2). Reading 61-8-406 to require law enforcement officers to determine a person's alcohol content while driving would lead to an absurd result because it is impossible to administer a test while a person is driving. Therefore, interpreting the DUI per se statute to allow for the admissibility of breath tests administered within a reasonable time after an alleged act of driving under the influence represents a reasonable interpretation of statutory language, comports with legislative intent, and avoids an absurd result. In the present case, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, the state presented the jury with sufficient evidence to determine that McGowan committed the offense of driving with an alcohol concentration above 0.08 in violation of 61-8-406, and McGowan's conviction was affirmed. St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), followed in St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006).

Admission of HGN Test Results Despite Deviation From Four-Second Interval Requirements: Zakovi contended that the officer who administered a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test deviated from the standard 4-second interval requirements established in the national field sobriety training manual, rendering the test results unreliable and subject to exclusion pursuant to Zakovi's motion in limine. The trial court considered the manual provisions and examined a video demonstrating the officer's deviation from the 4-second interval requirement, but the court also considered the testimony of the officer and the officer's extensive DUI test administration and field sobriety teaching experience. The court found the officer credible and accepted the officer's statement that valid HGN test results are obtainable despite deviation from the interval requirements, particularly because nystagmus is more apparent in a more inebriated suspect. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion in limine and affirmed. St. v. Zakovi, 2005 MT 91, 326 M 475, 110 P3d 469 (2005).

Use of Nontestimonial Intoxilyzer Certification Reports in DUI Trial Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses — Crawford Rule: At Carter's DUI trial, the state introduced three certification reports in order to demonstrate that an Intoxilyzer 5000 was working properly when Carter was tested. The officers who prepared the reports did not testify at trial. Carter initially contended that the reports were hearsay, but on appeal, Carter asserted that admission of the reports violated his right to confront witnesses. Although the Supreme Court will generally not address new arguments raised on appeal, the court applied the exception in Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895 (1987), in this case because of the new confrontation clause jurisprudence set out in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), which was decided while Carter's case was pending. In Crawford, the U.S. Supreme Court for the first time distinguished testimonial and nontestimonial out-of-court statements, delineating testimonial statements, at a minimum, as applying to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial as well as to police interrogations. States are allowed flexibility in the development of hearsay law when nontestimonial hearsay is at issue. In Carter's case, the state asserted that the certification reports used at Carter's trial were nontestimonial evidence because they did not fall within the core group of statements that the confrontation clause was meant to address. The Supreme Court held that the certification reports were nontestimonial in that they were not substantive evidence of a particular offense, but rather constituted foundational evidence necessary for the admission of substantive evidence. Thus, Carter's confrontation right was not implicated despite the fact that the authors were not present to testify or be confronted. The court noted that a defendant is always free to subpoena authors of such reports if the defendant's pretrial investigation reveals that the reports are erroneous or are otherwise subject to attack. Therefore, in conformance with the Crawford rule, the Supreme Court exempted the certification reports from confrontation clause scrutiny and affirmed Carter's conviction. St. v. Carter, 2005 MT 87, 326 M 427, 114 P3d 1001 (2005).

Evidence of Blood Alcohol Content of Other Vehicle Occupant Properly Excluded: The trial court excluded evidence regarding the blood alcohol content (BAC) of a passenger in Larson's car on grounds that it was irrelevant and not probative of Larson's BAC or level of impairment at the time of an accident. Larson maintained that admission of the evidence would have supported prospective testimony regarding the parties' drinking activities and countered the state's expert regarding Larson's level of impairment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The passenger's actions were not on trial, nor was there evidence suggesting that both parties consumed alcohol in the same amounts at the same times. Any probative value of the evidence was outweighed by its prejudicial effect, and it was properly excluded. St. v. Larson, 2004 MT 345, 324 M 310, 103 P3d 524 (2004). See also St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002).

Failure to Argue Prejudicial Effect of Malfunctioning Breathalyzer Printer — No Error in Denial of Motion to Suppress: When Otto was tested with a Breathalyzer, the machine registered a 0.159 blood alcohol content but failed to print a card with the test results. Otto moved for dismissal of the Breathalyzer results because a complete test, including the printed results, was not accomplished. The dismissal motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Otto failed to argue prejudice based on the admission of the test results. Given ample additional evidence of Otto's intoxicated condition, failure to suppress the Breathalyzer results did not constitute reversible error. St. v. Otto, 2004 MT 338, 324 M 217, 102 P3d 522 (2004).

Ample Evidence That DUI Suspect Had Been Driving on Public Road Even Though Parked in Private Driveway: Krause was discovered parked in the driveway of a private residence, asleep on the seat of his truck with his feet resting on the floor under the steering wheel. Krause was arrested for DUI but declined to take a Breathalyzer test, so his license was suspended. Krause petitioned for reinstatement of the license, arguing that revocation of the license under the implied consent statute was improper because Krause was not on a way of this state open to the public at the time of his arrest. The District Court denied the petition, finding that the lane or access road providing access to the residence was a way of this state open to the public. Krause appealed, but without reaching the issue of whether the driveway was considered a public way, the Supreme Court affirmed. Krause's truck did not suddenly materialize out of thin air in the driveway; Krause had to have driven it there by way of the highway that was only 20 or 30 feet from the driveway. Because Krause had been parked only a few minutes before the officer arrived, Krause's intoxicated condition had to have occurred prior to Krause's arrival at the residence. Thus, the officer had reasonable grounds to believe that Krause had been driving on the highway while under the influence. St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002), distinguishing St. v. Haws, 869 P2d 849 (Okla. Crim. App. 1994), and followed in St. v. Sirles, 2010 MT 88, 356 Mont. 133, 231 P.3d 1089.

Error in Not Excluding Results of Independent Blood Alcohol Test Taken After DUI Arrestee Released From Custody: When Krause was picked up for DUI, he refused to take a Breathalyzer test and his license was revoked. After booking, Krause was released from custody, went to the hospital, and requested a blood alcohol test. The state subsequently obtained the results of the blood test by investigative subpoena, and the District Court allowed admission of the test results at Krause's trial over his objection. Krause appealed on grounds that the test results should not have been admitted because they were not relevant to any issue in the case. Krause pointed out that the decision as to the validity of an arrest must be based on information that the officer had at the time and cannot be justified bolstered by information obtained after the fact. The state argued that the evidence of the blood test was introduced to substantiate the credibility of the arresting officer's observations and opinion, not to retrospectively validate the officer's belief that Krause had been driving under the influence. The Supreme Court agreed with Krause. The officer's character for truthfulness was not attacked, nor did evidence of Krause's blood test refer to the officer's character for truthfulness. Thus, there was no legitimate purpose for the introduction of the blood test evidence, and the District Court should have excluded it. St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002).

Blood Test Results From Emergency Medical Treatment Admissible as DUI Evidence Notwithstanding Lack of Consent to Blood Test: Llewellyn was involved in an automobile accident, sustaining significant injuries. Llewellyn was asked to submit to a blood test at the accident scene, but refused. While undergoing medical treatment in the emergency room, Llewellyn's blood was drawn on the order of a physician for purposes of diagnosis and treatment. Lab results revealed a blood alcohol level above the legal limit. The state obtained the results pursuant to an investigative subpoena and sought to have the results entered in evidence during Llewellyn's DUI trial, citing St. v. Newill, 285 M 84, 946 P2d 134 (1997), for the holding that blood tests taken for medical diagnosis and treatment are admissible as other competent evidence. Llewellyn moved to suppress the evidence, claiming that the state could not show compliance with the required administrative procedures in the collection of the blood test for evidentiary purposes, and noting that consent had been refused under this section. The District Court granted Llewellyn's motion, distinguishing Newill, because unlike the defendant in that case, Llewellyn had exercised the statutory right to refuse to submit to a blood test for determining blood alcohol content, and concluding that admitting the evidence would allow an end run around the implied consent statutes that the Legislature could not have intended. The state sought and the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control of the evidentiary issue. Notwithstanding subsequent amendments to the implied consent statutes since Newill, the resolution of the issue was still controlled by Newill. The criteria for admissibility under this section relating to blood tests administered under the implied consent statute are inapplicable to diagnostic blood tests taken by a hospital or treating physician. There were additional competency requirements arising from the 1997 amendment to 61-8-404 that were not at issue in Newill. The court applied the foundational requirements of the 1999 versions of 61-8-404 and 61-8-405, concluding that the administration of a blood test for medical treatment purposes need not be conducted at the request of a peace officer as required by 61-8-405, because that requirement applies only to blood tests conducted pursuant to this section. Further, the court found that the administrative rule regarding the collection of blood samples for drug or alcohol analysis should be applied in Llewellyn's case to determine whether the blood test was competent evidence, but the administrative requirement that a blood sample be collected upon written request of a peace officer or officer of the court did not apply to Llewellyn's blood sample collected for medical purposes, because that requirement applies only to blood tests conducted pursuant to the implied consent statute. However, the District Court in Llewellyn's case never determined whether the medical blood test was competent evidence for purposes of admissibility under 61-8-404, so the Supreme Court remanded for a finding as to whether the medical blood test evidence was competent and admissible. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001), followed in St. v. Schauf, 2009 MT 281, 352 M 186, 216 P3d 740 (2009).

Evidence of Reliability of Breathalyzer Irrelevant When Test Refused: Because Robertson refused to take a DUI Breathalyzer test, he lacked grounds to later challenge whether the machine in question produced reliable results; nevertheless, his refusal to take the test was admissible under 61-8-404. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000), following St. v. Jackson, 206 M 338, 672 P2d 255, 40 St. Rep. 1698 (1983).

Hearsay Statement by Witness Not Adopted by Defendant — Requirements for Finding Subpoenaed Witness "Unavailable": After having consumed drinks in Marysville, Widenhofer and Rothschiller were involved in a one-car accident on the Marysville Road. A car picked them up and took them to the closest business, the Silver City Bar. Because Widenhofer was injured, a highway patrol officer was called, who, upon arriving at the Silver City Bar, asked Rothschiller some questions about the accident. When he was in the patrol car with only the officer present, Rothschiller answered one of those questions by stating that Widenhofer was driving the vehicle. The officer then took both Widenhofer and Rothschiller to the hospital in Helena. After Widenhofer's injuries were cared for, the highway patrol officer continued to question Widenhofer; advised him that in the officer's opinion, alcohol was a factor in the accident; asked Widenhofer to submit to a blood-alcohol test; and read Widenhofer the implied consent form. Although Rothschiller was served with a subpoena by the Sheriff the night before a jury trial on Widenhofer's charge of DUI, Rothschiller failed to appear at trial. During the trial, the District Court allowed the highway patrol officer to repeat Rothschiller's answer, that Widenhofer was the driver of the vehicle. The Supreme Court reversed the decision of the District Court allowing the hearsay testimony. The Supreme Court held that the state's reliance on Rule 801(d)(2)(B), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), was misplaced because the District Court did not make an express finding that Rothschiller's statement was adopted by Widenhofer, as the District Court should have under the rationale of U.S. v. Schaff, 948 F2d 501 (9th Cir. 1991), and because the state did not present sufficient evidence that Widenhofer acquiesced in Rothschiller's statement. The Supreme Court noted that Widenhofer could not hear the conversation between the officer and Rothschiller and had no reason to know what Rothschiller was telling the officer. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that Rothschiller's statement as to who was driving the vehicle was not adopted by Widenhofer and that Rothschiller's statement could therefore not be allowed under this exception to the hearsay rule. Widenhofer also objected to the hearsay testimony of the highway patrol officer because it violated Widenhofer's right under the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution and under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., to confront and cross-examine a witness. The Supreme Court held that the "unavailability" exception under Rule 804(a)(5), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), could not be invoked because under the analysis of Ohio v. Roberts, 448 US 56 (1980), that rule requires the prosecution to demonstrate the "unavailability" of a witness before hearsay evidence of the witness's statements may be introduced. The Supreme Court held that the state's "minimal" attempt to procure Rothschiller's testimony by serving a subpoena on him the night before trial did not constitute "reasonable means" of procuring his testimony. St. v. Widenhofer, 286 M 341, 950 P2d 1383, 54 St. Rep. 1438 (1997), followed, with regard to the standard of reasonable means of procuring witness's testimony, in St. v. Diaz, 2006 MT 303, 334 M 479, 148 P3d 628 (2006), and followed in St. v. McCollom, 2009 MT 257, 352 M 10, 214 P3d 1230 (2009).

Expired Manufacturer's Warranty on Breath Test Solution Used to Test Defendant: That the manufacturer's warranty on a solution used for a breath test had expired 10 months before the solution was used in testing defendant did not make the test results inadmissible. The administrative rules regulating testing clearly provide that the approval of the solution is by the Department of Justice's Division of Forensic Sciences, not by the manufacturer, and the solution had been approved by the Division as required by the rules. St. v. Woods, 285 M 124, 947 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 1074 (1997).

Test Results of Blood Drawn for Medical Reasons Admissible — Implied Consent Requirements Inapplicable: When Newill was admitted to the hospital for injuries resulting from an automobile accident, a sample of her blood was drawn for medical diagnostic and treatment purposes. Tests indicated more than twice the allowable level of alcohol. During subsequent questioning, Newill admitted that she had been drinking and authorized the taking of a blood sample to determine her BAC, but a blood sample could not be obtained. Newill sought to suppress the records containing the results of the earlier blood test because the records did not comport with the foundational requirements of this section, the implied consent statute. The District Court denied the motion to suppress. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the blood test taken at the direction of the attending physician was admissible as other competent evidence bearing upon whether Newill was intoxicated. Therefore, the District Court properly held that the blood test conducted by the hospital fell within the "other competent evidence" exclusion of 61-8-404(3). St. v. Newill, 285 M 84, 946 P2d 134, 54 St. Rep. 1055 (1997), followed in State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001).

Blood Alcohol Test Found Voluntary: The admissibility of the results of the blood alcohol test in this case is not based on implied consent to the withdrawal of defendant's blood under this section. Instead, it is bottomed on the actual consent of the defendant which he admits. The issue turns on whether defendant's consent was voluntary or was coerced by psychological means. The court held that there was substantial evidence that defendant's consent was free and voluntary and that the lower court committed no error in denying defendant's motion to suppress the results of the blood alcohol test. St. v. Kirkaldie, 179 M 283, 587 P2d 1298, 35 St. Rep. 1532 (1978).

Disclosure of Investigation Reports: County Attorneys, law enforcement personnel, and Coroners must release reports of accident investigations, autopsies, and related tests to persons specifically listed in statutes. Public access to the results of investigations not covered by statute is left to the discretion of the public official following the guidelines set forth in this opinion and 37 A.G. Op. 107 (1978). 37 A.G. Op. 112 (1978).

Case Notes

Authority of Deputy Sheriff to Make Arrest Without Completing Training Within One Year of Appointment: Jess asserted that the Deputy Sheriff who arrested her for DUI lacked the authority to make the unsupervised arrest because the deputy had not completed basic law enforcement training as required in 7-32-303 and that because the deputy was unauthorized, Jess's suspended driver's license should be reinstated. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 7-32-303, a deputy must complete basic training within 1 year of appointment. However, the deputy was appointed only 8 months prior to the arrest and was therefore within the 1-year pretraining period. The deputy had completed 280 hours of reserve training and 24 hours of DUI training and had made numerous arrests both with and without supervision and thus was sufficiently experienced to form a particularized suspicion of DUI. The District Court's denial of Jess's motion for license reinstatement was affirmed. Jess v. St. ex rel. Records & Driver Control, 2008 MT 422, 347 M 381, 198 P3d 306 (2008).

Probable Cause and Particularized Suspicion of DUI Based on Flagrant Traffic Violations — Suspension of License Proper: Cybulski drove west in the eastbound lane of an interstate highway for at least 30 minutes, obviously oblivious to the surrounding environment. Cybulski initially refused to stop for a pursuing officer, and when she did stop, she failed to respond to the officer's instructions, and the officer had to forcibly remove her from the car before placing her under arrest. Cybulski failed field sobriety tests and refused to take a breath test, so her license was suspended. Cybulski later petitioned for reinstatement of her license, and the District Court granted the petition on grounds that although the officer had a particularized suspicion to stop Cybulski for driving on the wrong side of the highway, the officer lacked the requisite particularized suspicion to conduct sobriety tests and the probable cause to make a DUI arrest. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. An experienced officer could infer that Cybulski was DUI based on the sheer length of time that Cybulski traveled on the wrong side of the interstate and her apparent obliviousness to oncoming traffic traveling in the same lane. When paired with Cybulski's unusually delayed response to pursuing officers, the officer was entitled to infer that Cybulski was DUI even before she stopped her car. Probable cause existed because there were sufficient facts and circumstances within the officer's personal knowledge to warrant a reasonable belief that Cybulski had committed an offense. Because the officer had both a particularized suspicion to believe that Cybulski was DUI and probable cause for an arrest, Cybulski was lawfully under arrest at the time that she was removed from her car and handcuffed on the interstate and when asked to submit to a breath test, so her license was properly suspended. In re License Suspension of Cybulski, 2008 MT 128, 343 M 56, 183 P3d 39 (2008).

Absence of Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Judgment Precluding Review of DUI Case — Remand: Goldsmith was stopped on the University of Montana-Missoula campus and charged with DUI. His license was taken for failure to submit to breath tests, and Goldsmith petitioned the District Court to have the license returned, but the court deferred to the officer's experience and simply denied the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court made no findings of fact or conclusions of law and did not enter judgment on the petition. Because the Supreme Court did not have sufficient information upon which to base a review, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice and the case was remanded for entry of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment as required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Goldsmith v. Dept. of Justice, 2007 MT 221, 339 M 65, 168 P3d 1041 (2007).

Officer's Testimony and Videotape Sufficient Evidence of Reasonable Grounds for DUI Stop: Clark's driver's license was suspended after he refused to take a breath test when arrested for DUI. In petitioning for reinstatement of the license, Clark contended that the arresting officer lacked a particularized suspicion to make a stop and failed to articulate a reason for the stop at the hearing on the license suspension. The Supreme Court applied the reasonable grounds test in St. v. Brander, 2004 MT 150, 321 M 484, 92 P3d 1173 (2004), and held that the trial court properly concluded, on the basis of the officer's testimony that Clark hit a curb and swerved across lanes, coupled with a videotape of the stop, that the officer had reasonable grounds to investigate Clark for DUI. The trial court properly analyzed the factors in this section, and the analysis was not clearly erroneous. Denial of the petition to reinstate Clark's license was affirmed. Clark v. State ex rel. Driver Improvement Bureau, 2005 MT 65, 326 M 278, 109 P3d 244 (2005).

No Reasonable Grounds to Believe Defendant DUI — Sole Testimony of Defendant Sufficient to Prove No DUI Occurred: Eustance drove to the airport to pick up his daughter and grandson who were arriving on a flight. Because of hip pain, it was more comfortable to wait in his car. Eustance parked in the lot of a nearby car rental agency and fell asleep. Eustance was later awakened by a Deputy Sheriff who requested that Eustance perform field sobriety tests and a breath test, but Eustance refused to perform both tests, so his license was seized and suspended. At a hearing on a petition for reinstatement of his license, Eustance was the only witness. He testified that he had been operating his vehicle in a safe and legal manner prior to arrest, that his ability to drive was not impaired, and that he did not believe there was reasonable suspicion or probable cause to justify his arrest. The District Court agreed and granted the petition reinstating the license. On appeal, the state cited Hunter v. St., 264 M 84, 869 P2d 787 (1994), contending that Eustance had not met the burden of establishing that suspension of the license was improper because without the deputy's testimony, Eustance's own testimony was self-serving and insufficient to meet the burden. The Supreme Court disagreed. The testimony of one witness is sufficient to prove any fact. Nowhere in Hunter was it held that a petitioner in a license reinstatement hearing cannot meet the burden of proof without testimony from the arresting officer or that a petitioner's testimony, without more, is insufficient to meet the burden of proof. Thus, the District Court was entitled to accept Eustance's uncontradicted testimony as true. Absent evidence supporting the state's position, Eustance met the burden of proof and his license was properly reinstated. Eustance v. St., 2005 MT 34, 326 M 77, 107 P3d 478 (2005).

Sufficient Reasonable Cause to Suspect DUI Following Justified Traffic Stop — Refusal to Reinstate License Proper: Muri was initially stopped for expired license plates and then failed DUI field tests. Upon refusal to submit to a blood alcohol test, Muri's driver's license was seized and suspended. Muri petitioned for reinstatement of the license on grounds that the totality of circumstances occurring after the stop did not support a finding of reasonable cause for the officer to believe that Muri was DUI because the only indication of intoxication was the odor of alcohol emanating from the vehicle and the officer could not state with certainty whether the odor came from Muri or from a passenger. The petition was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Contrary to Muri's assertions, the odor was not the only indication of possible intoxication. Muri swerved in the driving lane at least once; the officer smelled a strong odor of alcohol when speaking with Muri; Muri could not produce a driver's license upon request, and when asked to recite her Social Security number, Muri could not do so at first and then recited it with slurred speech; the stop occurred at the approximate time when bars were closing; and Muri admitted consuming some alcohol. Given the officer's numerous observations, the officer had reasonable grounds to believe, prior to requesting field sobriety tests, that Muri was DUI, and the petition to reinstate Muri's license was properly denied. Muri v. St., 2004 MT 192, 322 M 219, 95 P3d 149 (2004), following Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212 (1996), and distinguishing Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464 (1999). See also Brewer v. St., 2004 MT 193, 322 M 225, 95 P3d 163 (2004).

Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for DUI Stop Based on Anonymous Tip and Officer's Observations: An officer received an anonymous tip that Brander was driving while intoxicated. The tipster named Brander, described the vehicle, including a license number and model, and gave Brander's direction of travel and suspected destination. The officer encountered a vehicle that mostly matched the description and followed, observing that the vehicle was moving slowly, meandering in its lane, crossing the fog line, partially crossing into the left lane without signaling, and then moving back into the right lane. The officer initiated a stop and noticed a number of cases of beer in the back of the truck that were both opened and unopened. Brander failed field sobriety tests and was arrested. Brander contended that the officer did not have reasonable grounds for making the stop based on the anonymous tip and moved to suppress the DUI evidence. The suppression motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Brander's argument failed because the stop was not based solely on the tip with no independent observation of suspicious activity. In fact, the officer was not even initially sure if the vehicle that he was stopping was the one described in the tip, but based on the officer's training and experience, the erratic driving supported a particularized suspicion that the driver was under the influence sufficient to warrant the stop and the administration of field sobriety tests. St. v. Brander, 2004 MT 150, 321 M 484, 92 P3d 1173 (2004), followed in St. v. Schulke, 2005 MT 77, 326 M 390, 109 P3d 744 (2005). See also Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998).

Issues for Consideration in Petition for Review of Seizure of Driver's License: As established in Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716 (1998), the three issues to be determined by a District Court in a petition for review of a seizure of a driver's license are whether: (1) the arresting officer had a particularized suspicion that a person was driving or in actual control of a vehicle on the ways of this state while under the influence of alcohol or drugs; (2) the petitioner was lawfully under arrest, including the existence of probable cause; and (3) the petitioner in fact declined to submit to a breath test. In this case, Widdicombe contested the first two determinations, but the Supreme Court affirmed. While leaving town on a two-lane highway, the arresting officer and another officer in the patrol car observed Widdicombe crossing the center lane three times, in violation of 61-8-321, and this fact was corroborated by videotape evidence. Thus, Widdicombe failed to meet the burden of proving a lack of particularized suspicion for the initial stop. Further, it was not necessary for the arresting officer to testify to probable cause when another officer witnessed the event and testified. Thus, Widdicombe failed to prove that the officers did not have probable cause for the arrest. Widdicombe v. State ex rel. LaFond, 2004 MT 49, 320 M 133, 85 P3d 1271 (2004), distinguishing St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998).

Particularized Suspicion, Not Probable Cause, Required to Request Breath Sample for Preliminary Analysis: Toth was arrested for DUI but contended that evidence obtained following a request for a preliminary breath test should be suppressed because the officer needed probable cause to request the sample. The Supreme Court held that the probable cause standard refers to the prerequisite for an arrest and does not require that officers establish probable cause prior to initiating preliminary breath test analysis. Rather, an officer needs only a particularized suspicion to request a breath sample for preliminary breath test analysis. St. v. Toth, 2003 MT 208, 317 M 55, 75 P3d 323 (2003), distinguishing Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716 (1998).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Particularized Suspicion to Justify Investigatory Stop — Petition for Reinstatement of Driver's License Properly Denied: A highway patrol officer observed a vehicle swerve and hit the guardrail. The vehicle did not stop, so the officer followed the vehicle as it exited the freeway. The officer believed, in part, that the driver violated 61-7-108, failing to report an accident causing damage of $500 or more, so the officer stopped the vehicle and subsequently arrested Moore for DUI. When Moore refused a breath test, the officer seized Moore's driver's license. Moore petitioned for reinstatement of the license, arguing that the officer could formulate no suspicion that Moore was involved in wrongdoing that would warrant an investigative stop because the officer could not have known whether Moore was going to report the accident by the quickest means, which was for Moore to drive home and call. The District Court denied the petition, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The officer testified that the damage to the guardrail alone exceeded $500 and that Moore passed up at least two opportunities to stop and use a pay telephone to report the accident before the investigatory stop. Although the evidence conflicted, it was within the province of the District Court to determine the weight of the evidence and credibility of the witnesses. The officer testified credibly, and there was sufficient evidence in the record to indicate that the officer had the requisite particularized suspicion to justify the investigatory stop. Therefore, Moore's petition to reinstate the driver's license was properly denied. Moore v. St., 2002 MT 315, 313 M 126, 61 P3d 746

(2002), followed in St. v. Schulke, 2005 MT 77, 326 M 390, 109 P3d 744 (2005). See also Weer v. St., 2010 MT 232, 358 Mont. 130, 244 P.3d 311.

Failure of State to Respond to Discovery Requests During Driver's License Reinstatement Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: Responding to a 9-1-1 emergency dispatch, an officer found Patterson slumped over the steering wheel of a running vehicle, fast asleep. Patterson refused to take a Breathalyzer test, so he was arrested for DUI, and his license was seized. Patterson challenged the suspension of his driver's license pursuant to this section and through discovery requests sought a copy of the 9-1-1 report, but no copy was provided. The hearing was continued twice because of the absence of the report, and the District Court warned the state that if it failed to produce the report, Patterson's license would be reinstated and the suspension would be dismissed. On the day of the hearing, the state informed the court that it was unable to obtain the 9-1-1 report, so Patterson's motion for reinstatement of his driver's license was granted. The state appealed on grounds that the District Court erred by reinstating the license based on the state's failure to comply with an order compelling production of the report. The Supreme Court affirmed. To determine whether the sanction for the discovery abuse constituted an abuse of the District Court's discretion, the Supreme Court applied the factors in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124 (2000). The 9-1-1 report was treated as relevant information absent a timely objection by the state to Patterson's request for production, and the state's failure to produce the report compromised Patterson's ability to prepare and present a defense, suspended the progress of the case, and prejudiced Patterson. The state was warned that reinstatement would result from failure to produce the report, and reinstatement was an appropriate sanction for the state's repeated failure to comply with discovery. Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002).

Insufficient Particularized Suspicion of Crime to Justify Investigative Stop — To Pee or Not to Pee: On the night of November 16, 1999, officers came up behind a vehicle parallel parked legally beside a frontage road. As they passed the vehicle, they noticed a man standing by the passenger door on the side farthest from the road, apparently urinating. The man had taken steps so as not to expose himself to passers-by. The officers proceeded on, but decided to return and warn the man about the impropriety of his conduct. Upon reaching the vehicle, there was no longer anyone standing by it, but Kleinsasser was in the driver's seat making a call on a cell phone, another person was in the passenger seat, and another was lying down on the back seat. All three denied standing by the vehicle and denied knowing who had been doing so. The officers also smelled alcohol emanating from the vehicle, and asked Kleinsasser to perform field sobriety tests, which he failed. Kleinsasser was arrested for DUI, but refused to take a breath test, so his driver's license was seized and suspended. The District Court denied Kleinsasser's petition challenging the license suspension, and Kleinsasser appealed. The only relevant issue for the District Court to consider was whether the officer had reasonable grounds to believe that Kleinsasser was driving under the influence. The reasonable grounds requirement in this section is equivalent to the requirement for particularized suspicion to make an investigative stop in 46-5-401, which requires the state to show objective data from which an experienced officer could make certain inferences, and a resulting suspicion that the occupant of a certain vehicle is or has been engaged in wrongdoing or was a witness to criminal activity. When the totality of the circumstances does not support a particularized suspicion, an investigative stop is not justified. The state argued that the observed activity constituted disorderly conduct. The Supreme Court disagreed. Kleinsasser's act did not create a hazardous condition, and the court found it hard to imagine any act that serves a more legitimate purpose than answering nature's call. Further, the behavior was not considered physically offensive in this case because it occurred at night, in a rural location where there were no overhead lights or other traffic at the time. There was no evidence that the act disturbed anyone other than the officers, and neither officer was so disturbed that he considered giving the individual a citation; therefore, an allegation of disorderly conduct was unfounded. Absent a particularized suspicion to justify an investigative stop, the subsequent seizure of Kleinsasser's driver's license was invalid. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's error in denying Kleinsasser's petition for reinstatement of his license. Kleinsasser v. St., 2002 MT 36, 308 M 325, 42 P3d 801 (2002).

Officer's Informing Suspect of Consequences of Refusing Breath Test When Asking Suspect a Second Time to Submit to Test Cures Failure to Inform Suspect of Consequences of Refusing to Take Test When Suspect First Asked to Submit: Officer McLean failed to inform McKenzie of the consequences of refusing a breath test when he asked McKenzie to submit to the test. The defendant admitted that when the officer asked him a second time to submit to the test, he was informed of the consequences of refusing to submit. Subsequently, at the police station, Officer McLean erroneously informed the defendant that if he also refused to submit to a blood test, his license would be suspended for an additional 6 months along with the 6-month suspension for refusing the breath test. McKenzie's license was suspended for 6 months, and he appealed the denial of his petition for reinstatement. The Supreme Court held that the first refusal was insufficient to support the license suspension because the defendant was not informed of the consequences of refusal but that the second refusal would support the suspension because the defendant was informed of the consequences of refusing the test. The Supreme Court stated that it would not address the merits of McKenzie's claim that Officer McLean stated a greater penalty for refusing both tests than the law allowed in an attempt to coerce the defendant into submitting to a blood test because the refusal to submit to the breath test was sufficient in itself to support the 6-month license suspension. In re Driver's License Suspension of McKenzie, 2001 MT 25, 304 M 153, 19 P3d 221 (2001).

Petitioner's Driver's License Reinstated on Basis That No Grounds Existed to Justify Officer's Particularized Suspicion for Stopping Petitioner's Vehicle: Officer Van Every observed Morris's vehicle drift and touch the fog line. Believing that Morris might be driving under the influence, the officer stopped Morris and ultimately arrested him when he refused to provide a sample of his breath. The lower court reinstated Morris's license on the basis that there was no particularized suspicion for the traffic stop. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision, ruling that merely touching or crossing the fog line while driving is not a traffic infraction and in itself is insufficient to create a particularized suspicion of wrongdoing that would justify a traffic stop. The Supreme Court in dicta clarified that the present case and St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998), were not to be construed as requiring a traffic violation as necessary to create a particularized suspicion prior to a traffic stop. Morris v. St., 2001 MT 13, 304 M 114, 18 P3d 1003 (2001), distinguished in Weer v. St. , 2010 MT 232, 358 Mont. 130, 244 P.3d 311. See also St. v. LeMay, 2011 MT 323, 363 Mont. 172, 266 P.3d 1278, which, following Weer, held that the defendant's illegal U-turn constituted an unusual turn or movement sufficient to establish particularized suspicion.

District Court Exceeding Scope of Appellate Review — Abuse of Discretion in Applying Particularized Suspicion of DUI to Traffic Stop Triggered by Report of Vandalism: Robertson was stopped after a vehicle of the description that he was driving was reported leaving the scene of a vandalism. He was subsequently convicted of DUI in City Court and appealed to District Court on grounds that his right to confront witnesses was denied and that the city had not sustained the necessary burden of proof to support the conviction. The District Court remanded to the City Court for dismissal on grounds that the arresting officer did not have a sufficient particularized suspicion to justify the investigative stop for DUI. However, the issue of a sufficient particularized suspicion was never raised or ruled on in City Court by either Robertson or the city. When a District Court exercises its power of appellate review, it must refrain from deciding issues not properly raised or objected to in the court below; thus, the District Court abused its discretion by exceeding the scope of its appellate review in addressing the issue of particularized suspicion, so the Supreme Court reversed the order of the District Court dismissing the City Court judgment against Robertson. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also Missoula v. Asbury, 265 M 14, 873 P2d 936, 51 St. Rep. 383 (1994), and St. v. Herrera, 1998 MT 173, 289 M 499, 962 P2d 1180 (1998).

Appeal Not Allowing for Reinstatement of License Because of Officer's Failure to Issue Temporary License: An appeal under this section does not allow for reinstatement of a driver's license because of an officer's failure to issue a temporary license under 61-8-402(5). Hawman v. State ex rel. Beckstrom, 1998 MT 218, 290 M 467, 963 P2d 1288, 55 St. Rep. 913 (1998).

Basis for DUI Arrest and Suspension of License for Breath Test Refusal: The officer who testified that he saw defendant drive from a bar at night with no headlights on, that she failed to immediately pull over when he put on his overhead lights and siren, that her eyes were bloodshot, and that she smelled of alcohol, fumbled for her driver's license, and failed two nonscientific field sobriety tests had probable cause to arrest her for DUI. Therefore, improper allowance of his testimony as to the scientific basis for a field sobriety eye test was harmless error. The lower court correctly concluded that her driver's license was lawfully suspended for failure to submit to a breath test and correctly refused to reinstate the license. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999).

DUI Field Sobriety Eye Tests and Admission of General and Novel Scientific Testimony: Not all scientific evidence is subject to the Daubert standard. The Daubert test should be used only to determine the admissibility of novel scientific evidence. In addition, and whether or not the scientific evidence is novel, a court presented with scientific evidence is encouraged to follow the Barmeyer decision and liberally construe the rules of evidence so as to admit all relevant expert testimony, the weight of which may be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Nystagmus is the involuntary jerking of the eyeball resulting from the body's attempt to maintain balance and orientation. It may be aggravated by alcohol. The inability of the eyes to maintain visual fixation (a jerking movement of the eyes) as they are turned to the side is known as horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN). The HGN test is a common field sobriety test. It measures various aspects of these involuntary, jerking eye movements. This is a scientific test in that science, not common knowledge, provides the legitimacy for the test. The HGN evidence could have a disproportionate impact on the jury's decision because of the test's scientific nature and because the jury may not understand the nature of the test or the methodology of its procedure. The test has been used for decades, and it is not novel scientific evidence. Therefore, the Daubert standard does not apply to its admissibility. However, the court must conduct a conventional Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), analysis and adhere to Barmeyer to determine admissibility. An officer testifying as to the results of a test that the officer administered must be shown to have proper training in the test and to have administered the test in accordance with that training (though a proper foundation for testifying as to test results does not constitute an adequate foundation to testify as to the scientific basis for the test). In the present case, the officer testified that he had 40 hours of field sobriety tests (including HGN) training, stated how he administered the test to defendant, and stated that defendant failed. However, there was no evidence establishing that the officer had special training or education or adequate knowledge to qualify him to testify that everyone's eyes exhibit nystagmus at maximum deviation and that with the introduction of alcohol, the nystagmus becomes more prevalent and does not cease. Thus, there was insufficient foundation for that statement, and the lower court abused its discretion by allowing the officer to testify as to the test results. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999), and Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000).

DUI Reasonable Grounds Test Equivalent to Search and Seizure Law Investigative Stop Particularized Suspicion Test: The reasonable grounds test for the issue of whether a peace officer had reasonable grounds to believe that a person was driving or in actual physical control of a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol or drugs is the equivalent of particularized suspicion, as defined in 46-5-401, which provides that in order to verify an account of a person's presence or conduct or to determine whether to arrest the person, a peace officer may stop any person or vehicle that is observed in circumstances that create a particularized suspicion that the person or an occupant of a vehicle has committed, is committing, or is about to commit an offense. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999), and Kleinsasser v. St., 2002 MT 36, 308 M 325, 42 P3d 801 (2002).

Constitutionality of Implied Consent Statutes — General Versus Specific Construction: This section is a general statute concerning appeals of suspensions and revocations of driver's licenses under the implied consent laws, while 61-8-409 is the specific statute on preliminary alcohol screening tests (PAST), including issues that may be discussed at hearings on license suspension or revocation based upon refusal to submit to a PAST. A specific statute prevails over a general statute. Appellant's contention of conflict among Montana's implied consent statutes was not established because the various provisions are clear and specific and give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that the contemplated conduct is forbidden. Smith v. St., 1998 MT 94, 288 M 383, 958 P2d 677, 55 St. Rep. 375 (1998).

"Confusion Doctrine" Properly Considered — Specific Pleading Not Required — Burden of Proof: Gentry was arrested for DUI and raised the "confusion doctrine"—that he was confused over his right to counsel at the time that he was required to submit to a Breathalyzer test (see Blomeyer v. St., 264 M 414, 871 P2d 1338 (1994)). The Supreme Court held that the District Court was limited by this section to consideration of only three issues and that because one of those issues was whether the person refused to take the test, the confusion doctrine was properly considered by the District Court because it relates to whether a true "refusal to submit" to the test was made. The Supreme Court also held that the doctrine need not be specifically pleaded but that the burden remains on the petitioner to prove that the license suspension was invalid. Gentry v. St., 282 M 491, 938 P2d 693, 54 St. Rep. 450 (1997), distinguished in Williams v. St., 1999 MT 5, 293 M 36, 973 P2d 218, 56 St. Rep. 20 (1999).

Jury Trial Not Statutorily Mandated in Driver's License Suspension Case — Not Violative of Right to Trial by Jury: This section dictates that the court examine the facts and determine the merits of a petition challenging the suspension or revocation of a license but does not contemplate the role of a jury in the hearing, presuming instead that a jury will not be present, through assignment of tasks to the court. The inviolate right to a trial by jury is not a prospective right that is automatically granted in every new proceeding that may arise. Rather, the right that is constitutionally preserved is that right to a jury trial that existed at the time that the constitution was enacted. There is not and has never been a right to a jury trial in purely equitable actions in Montana. Suspension or revocation of a driver's license pursuant to the implied consent law is a civil administrative sanction, not a criminal penalty, and is intended to protect the public rather than punish the driver. The hearing to determine the propriety of a driver's license suspension is an action in equity because compensatory or punitive damages are not allowed. Further, the reinstatement fee does not constitute a punishment that converts the equitable action into a criminal action because the fee is dedicated to the public purpose of funding county drinking and driving prevention programs. Therefore, a driver is not entitled to a trial by jury in a proceeding to determine the propriety of a driver's license suspension. Supola v. Dept. of Justice, 278 M 421, 925 P2d 480, 53 St. Rep. 984 (1996).

Petition for Reinstatement of Driver's License — No Due Process Right to Further Notice and Hearing After Recess of Original Hearing on Petition for Reinstatement: Following his arrest for DUI and refusal to take a blood-alcohol test, Seyferth received a letter from the Motor Vehicle Division informing him that his driving privileges were revoked for 1 year. Seyferth petitioned the District Court for reinstatement of his driving privileges and testified at the hearing. The District Court recessed the hearing for 2 weeks, giving Seyferth and the state explicit instructions to inform the court in 2 weeks on the availability of other evidence. Neither Seyferth nor the state had further contact with the court, and 1 year later the District Court denied the petition for reinstatement. The Supreme Court held that Seyferth was not entitled to additional notice and hearing before the District Court denied the petition. Seyferth v. St., 277 M 377, 922 P2d 494, 53 St. Rep. 698 (1996).

Court Discretion to Consider Alcohol Test Participant's Cooperativeness: This section provides for a hearing only to determine whether a motorist refused a test. It does not have a specific provision for inquiry as to why the refusal occurred or for excusing the refusal if there was sufficient cause to refuse. However, the District Court may take testimony and examine the facts to determine whether an officer was wrong in concluding whether a refusal occurred. Therefore, the court has the latitude to consider whether an individual was willing but unable to participate in a test as a result of a disability or whether the individual was simply unwilling to cooperate and refused the test. Wessell v. St., 277 M 234, 921 P2d 264, 53 St. Rep. 610 (1996).

Willing but Unable Participant in Alcohol Test — Meaning of "Test or Tests" as Single Test for Alcohol — Psychological Inability to Perform: Wessell consented to a breath test, but two attempts failed because of the failure of the internal standards check for the test instrument. He was asked to submit to a blood test but immediately refused based on his great fear of needles. He volunteered to take a urine test, but the offer was refused because the police department had no way to preserve the integrity of a test sample. Wessell declined to have an independent test completed because he believed that his driving privileges would be suspended regardless as a result of his failure to submit to a blood test. The officer completed the refusal affidavit and seized Wessell's license. On appeal, Wessell claimed that 61-8-402 does not expressly authorize more than one test for alcohol to which he gave consent. However, the state claimed that the language "test or tests" in subsection (3) allows consecutive tests for alcohol and that Wessell refused to submit to the alternate blood test. The Supreme Court concluded that the plural language added to the statute refers to the sequential testing for alcohol and then drugs, not for consecutive tests for alcohol alone. However, the alcohol test must be a full and complete analysis. Because the breath test was not completed, it was not valid, so the officer was within the statutory constraints when designating a second method of testing to achieve a valid alcohol test. Although certain uncooperative actions by a motorist may comprise a refusal, Wessell was fully cooperative but was unable to submit to the blood test because of a valid, disabling fear of needles. This psychological inability to perform the test was the equivalent of a physical disability precluding Wessell from completing a valid test regardless of his willingness. The District Court erred in concluding that Wessell's inability to participate in the test regardless of his willingness constituted a refusal warranting license suspension, and thus the case was reversed and remanded. Wessell v. St., 277 M 234, 921 P2d 264, 53 St. Rep. 610 (1996).

Intent to Arrest Formed After Person Physically Restrained After Failing to Stop as Requested — Investigative Stop, Not Arrest: An officer had authority to arrest Anderson, whose walking and driving led her to believe that he was DUI. The officer restrained him with a "gooseneck hold" when he failed to stop as requested. She testified without contradiction that it was not until after he resisted her hold and she could clearly identify the odor of intoxicants that she decided to arrest him for DUI. The request to stop and use of the gooseneck hold constituted an investigative stop, not an arrest. Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 125 (1996).

Staggering Walk, Evasive Driving Without Turn Signals, and Failure to Stop When Requested While Later Walking as Grounds for Belief DUI Occurred: An Officer observed Anderson shuffling and staggering toward his car in Billings just before the bars closed. She did not see him get into the car. A few minutes later, she saw him driving in what she interpreted as an evasive manner and he failed to use turn signals. She lost track of him but later saw him walking in the same manner as before. He failed to stop when she told him to do so, and he had a strong odor of intoxicants. These circumstances created a particularized suspicion and reasonable grounds to believe that he may have been driving under the influence of alcohol. Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 125 (1996), followed in Seyferth v. St., 277 M 377, 922 P2d 494, 53 St. Rep. 698 (1996). See also Rupp v. St., 279 M 247, 927 P2d 1, 53 St. Rep. 1136 (1996).

Test for Sufficient Cause for Investigative Stop: Because an investigative stop of a person must be justified by some objective manifestation that the person stopped might be engaged in some criminal activity, the test for determining whether an officer had sufficient cause to stop a person is that the state must show objective data from which an experienced officer could make certain inferences and must show a resulting suspicion that the person is or has been engaged in wrongdoing or was a witness to criminal activity. Anderson v. St., 275 M 259, 912 P2d 212, 53 St. Rep. 125 (1996), followed in Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998). See also Rupp v. St., 279 M 247, 927 P2d 1, 53 St. Rep. 1136 (1996).

Burden on Defendant to Prove Inability to Complete Test — Remedies Available: Hunter was arrested for DUI and asked to take a breath test. She consented but did not blow into the Breathalyzer hard enough to operate the machine. Hunter was then given other sobriety tests and again given a chance to take the breath test, but she stated that she believed she had performed enough tests. Hunter's driver's license was then seized for refusal to take the breath test. The Supreme Court held that Hunter had the burden of proof of showing that the arresting officer erroneously determined that Hunter refused to take the breath test. The statute does not give the driver the right to demand another type of test or require that the officer offer another type. If the driver believes that the officer has erroneously determined that the driver refused to take the breath test, the driver's remedy is to petition for reinstatement of the license. The Supreme Court reviewed the record and determined that Hunter had not met her burden of proof. Hunter v. St., 264 M 84, 869 P2d 787, 51 St. Rep. 158 (1994).

Information Available at Time of Arrest Sufficient to Establish Reasonable Grounds: McCullugh was arrested after officers found his truck off the road, with the front end in the ditch and the rear end up on the road a bit, and found McCullugh, who was obviously under the influence of alcohol, jacking up the back end of the truck. McCullugh asserted that the arresting officers should have ascertained whether he had his keys when he was arrested, whether the hood of the truck was warm, and whether he had been drinking prior to or after the accident. Although these facts would have supported the story McCullugh asserted later at trial (but not at the time of arrest), that he had become stuck when he lost his brakes, went to a friend's house where he began drinking, and later became concerned that the truck was in the road and returned to push it out of the roadway after leaving the keys on his friend's counter, that story was not the first or most natural conclusion a reasonable person would reach after observing a person obviously under the influence trying to move a vehicle stuck on the side of the road. The information available to the officers at the time of arrest was sufficient to warrant a reasonable person to believe that McCullugh was in physical control of the truck. McCullugh v. St., 259 M 406, 856 P2d 958, 50 St. Rep. 854 (1993), distinguished in Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716, 55 St. Rep. 1118 (1998).

Test for Review of Propriety of Suspension for Refusal to Take Test: Judicial review of the propriety of the suspension of a license for failure to take a blood alcohol test is limited to: (1) whether the arresting officer had reasonable grounds to believe that appellant had been driving or was in actual physical control of a vehicle, that the vehicle was on a way of this state open to the public, and that appellant was under the influence of alcohol; (2) whether appellant was placed under arrest; and (3) whether appellant refused to submit to a test. Maney v. St., 255 M 270, 842 P2d 704, 49 St. Rep. 980 (1992).

Burden of Proof on Driver to Prove Invalidity of Revocation: Because there is a presumption of correctness to the state's action of revocation of a driver's license until otherwise shown to be improper, the burden of proof falls on the driver to prove the invalidity of the state's action rather than to require the state to justify its act of revocation. Jess v. St., 255 M 254, 841 P2d 1137, 49

St. Rep. 951 (1992), followed in In re License Revocation of Gildersleeve, 283 M 479, 942 P2d 705, 54 St. Rep. 735 (1997), and Kleinsasser v. St., 2002 MT 36, 308 M 325, 42 P3d 801 (2002).

Element of Identity of Issues Not Present on Question of Collateral Estoppel — Partial Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Anderson sought judicial review of the seizure and suspension of his driver's license pursuant to this section, which limits review to three underlying issues. The District Court's findings on these issues served as the bases for making the ultimate determination of whether Anderson was entitled to a license or whether his license was subject to suspension. After the District Court found that Anderson was entitled to a license, Anderson moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of the state's civil liability based on the doctrine of collateral estoppel. However, the question of liability was never considered as part of the judicial review proceeding, so denial of the partial summary judgment motion was proper on the grounds that the crucial estoppel element of identity of issues did not exist. Anderson v. St., 250 M 18, 817 P2d 699, 48 St. Rep. 871 (1991), distinguished in Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Lack of Particularized Suspicion of Wrongdoing — Seizure of License Improper: Because deputies who saw no evidence of erratic driving throughout their observation of Grinde's car lacked a particularized suspicion of wrongdoing on his part, the subsequent stop of his vehicle and the resulting arrest were illegal. Given these circumstances, the District Court properly returned Grinde's driver's license. Grinde v. St., 249 M 77, 813 P2d 473, 48 St. Rep. 586 (1991), clarifying Armstrong v. St., 245 M 420, 800 P2d 172, 47 St. Rep. 2057 (1990). However, see Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716, 55 St. Rep. 1118 (1998), expressly overruling the Grinde interpretation that particularized suspicion as used in this section is synonymous with the probable cause standard for warrantless searches.

Reinstatement of Driver's License of Person Stopped Without Probable Cause: The arresting officer stopped the defendant without probable cause. After stopping him, the officer suspected that the defendant was under the influence of alcohol. The defendant refused to take the Breathalyzer test. Subsequently, the case against him for DUI was dismissed, but the lower court upheld the suspension of the defendant's license. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the statute was clear in requiring a showing of probable cause for stopping an individual before his license could be suspended for refusing to take the Breathalyzer test. Armstrong v. St. 245 M 420, 800 P2d 172, 47 St. Rep. 2057 (1990).

Probable Cause Based on Observations of Third Party: The petitioner brought a motion before the District Court to have his driver's license restored on the grounds that the arresting officer did not have probable cause to stop him. The officer had not observed anything in the petitioner's driving that indicated he was under the influence. The arresting officer had relied on the observations of another officer who had been unable to continue his surveillance because he was transporting a prisoner. The District Court ordered the petitioner's driver's license to be restored. On appeal by the state, the Supreme Court ruled that an arresting officer can rely on information relayed by a reliable third person in determining if probable cause for arrest exists. Boland v. St., 242 M 520, 792 P2d 1, 47 St. Rep. 829 (1990), followed in Jess v. St., 255 M 254, 841 P2d 1137, 49 St. Rep. 951 (1992), and St. v. Williams, 273 M 459, 904 P2d 1019, 52 St. Rep. 1085 (1995). Boland was followed, with regard to the legality of an investigative stop upon a directive or request for action from a third-party officer, in St. v. Gouras, 2004 MT 329, 324 M 130, 102 P3d 27 (2004). However, see Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716, 55 St. Rep. 1118 (1998), expressly overruling the Boland and Jess interpretation that reasonable grounds as used in this section is synonymous with the probable cause standard for warrantless searches.

No Authority to Consider Hardship as Mitigating Factor or to Grant Restricted License: This section does not grant authority to the trial judge to consider the issue of hardship as a mitigating factor and does not give the judge authority to grant a restricted or probationary driver's license. In re Blake v. St., 226 M 193, 735 P2d 262, 44 St. Rep. 580 (1987).

Officers Unaware of First Refusal to Take Breathalyzer Test — Privileges Reinstated After Ninety Days: The District Court did not err in reinstating after 90 days driving privileges suspended for 1 year, due to a second refusal to take a blood or Breathalyzer test, when officers who were unaware of a first refusal indicated the license would be suspended for only 90 days. In re Orman, 224 M 332, 731 P2d 893, 43 St. Rep. 2228 (1986).

Appeal of Driver's License Suspension — Limited to Three Issues: The appeal under 61-8-403 of a driver's license suspension under 61-8-402 is limited to the following issues: (1) whether a police officer had reasonable grounds to believe the person had been driving or was in actual physical control of a vehicle upon the ways of this state open to the public while under the influence of alcohol; (2) whether the person was placed under arrest; and (3) whether the person refused to submit to the test. The implied consent law is a civil administrative proceeding separate and distinct from the criminal action on the charge of driving while intoxicated. Each proceeds independently of the other. Therefore, it was reversible error in an appeal of a driver's license suspension for the District Court to hold that petitioner's driver's license should not have been suspended because the initial stop of his vehicle was illegal. In re Blake, 220 M 27, 712 P2d 1338, 43 St. Rep. 143 (1986), followed in Thompson v. Dept. of Justice, 264 M 372, 871 P2d 1333, 51 St. Rep. 272 (1994).

Written Notice to County Attorney: The phrase "it shall be its duty to set the matter for hearing upon 30 days' written notice to the county attorney" requires the District Court to give 30 days' written notice to the County Attorney before the hearing is held, rather than requiring a hearing to be set within 30 days of the filing of a petition. St. v. Johnson, 182 M 24, 594 P2d 333, 36 St. Rep. 893 (1979).

1981 Amendment: Substituted "alcohol" for "intoxicating liquor" throughout.

Case Notes

Miranda Warning Not Required Before Gathering of Nontestimonial Evidence: The District Court concluded that the officer's failure to give the defendant a Miranda warning immediately after her arrest required the suppression of all evidence subsequently obtained, including results of the HGN test, field sobriety tests, and the Intoxilyzer test and other nontestimonial evidence gathered at the jail. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that a Miranda warning is required only prior to a custodial interrogation and that the nontestimonial evidence should not have been suppressed because that evidence is real and objective and is not protected by the right against self-incrimination. St. v. Kelm, 2013 MT 115, 370 Mont. 61, 300 P.3d 687.

Video of Defendant Taking Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Inadmissible — Expert Testimony Required: After being convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol, the defendant claimed on appeal that the District Court abused its discretion by admitting a police video that showed the defendant participating in a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST) and then being placed under arrest. The sound from the video was muted and the results of the PAST were not presented to the jury. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, reasoning that the video showing administration of the PAST, followed by an arrest, raised a compelling inference that the defendant was over the legal blood alcohol limit. Consequently, the Supreme Court determined that the video was impermissibly used as substantive evidence of intoxication without the state satisfying the requirement of St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 Mont. 276, 119 P.3d 1194, and Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), to call an expert witness to testify regarding the reliability and accuracy of the PAST. St. v. Lozon, 2012 MT 303, 367 Mont. 424, 291 P.3d 1135.

Admissibility of Intoxilyzer Certification Documents — District Court to Determine Adequate Foundation Regardless of Hearsay Rules — White Overruled: The defendant was charged with felony DUI after a breath test revealed his blood alcohol content exceeded the legal limit. At trial, in the course of the charging police officer's testimony, the state offered into evidence two field certification documents for the Intoxilyzer 8000. The defendant objected to the documents, claiming that because the officer was not the author or custodian of the documents, they were inadmissible hearsay under Rule 803(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The District Court admitted the documents and the defendant appealed his subsequent conviction. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the admissibility of certification documents is also subject to Rule 104(a), M.R.Ev., (Title 26, ch. 10). This rule allows a court to determine whether there is an adequate foundation for a document without regard to whether it is hearsay. In so ruling, the Supreme Court overruled St. v. White, 2009 MT 26, 349 Mont. 109, 201 P.3d 808, to the extent it is inconsistent with St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 Mont. 263, 991 P.2d 461. St. v. Jenkins, 2011 MT 287, 362 Mont. 481, 265 P.3d 643.

Proper Instruction That Jury Could Infer Defendant's Intoxication Based on Refusal to Perform Field Sobriety Tests Without Consulting Attorney: The District Court did not err in instructing the jury that it could infer that Stanczak was under the influence because Stanczak refused to perform field sobriety tests before consulting with an attorney. St. v. Stanczak, 2010 MT 106, 356 Mont. 263, 232 P.3d 896. See also St. v. Hudson, 2005 MT 142, 327 Mont. 286, 114 P.3d 210, and St. v. Miller, 2008 MT 106, 342 Mont. 355, 181 P.3d 625.

Proper Jury Instruction Regarding Defendant's Lack of Right to Attorney During Field Sobriety Tests: During a traffic stop, Stanczak was asked to perform field sobriety tests. The District Court instructed the jury in Stanczak's DUI trial that because there was no custodial interrogation, Stanczak had no right to counsel before completing the tests. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the instruction as a full and fair instruction on the applicable law. St. v. Stanczak, 2010 MT 106, 356 Mont. 263, 232 P.3d 896.

No Unconstitutional Burden Shifting in Court's Instructing Jury on Rebuttable Presumption When Arrested Driver Refuses Breath Test: Well-settled case law, plus the trial court's admonition to the jury that the statutory inference that a driver is under the influence of alcohol if the driver refuses a blood alcohol concentration test can be countered by evidence presented by the driver, showed no abuse of discretion by the judge. St. v. Slade, 2008 MT 341, 346 M 271, 194 P3d 677, (2008).

Presumption That Person Who Refuses to Take Blood Test May Be Intoxicated Considered Permissive Inference: Michaud asserted that the presumption in this section, that a person who refuses to take a blood test may be considered to be intoxicated, was an impermissible presumption and that because only permissive presumptions are allowed in criminal cases, his DUI conviction should be reversed. The Supreme Court disagreed. The presumption is in fact a permissive presumption inasmuch as a trier of fact is free to accept or reject the presumption from a given set of facts. In addition, as a permissive presumption, it does not violate due process because there is a rational connection between driving while intoxicated and refusing to take a sobriety test. St. v. Michaud, 2008 MT 88, 342 M 244, 180 P3d 636 (2008), applying Leary v. U.S., 395 US 6 (1969).

Observation of Traffic Violation Constituting Objective Data of Wrongdoing — Investigative Stop Justified: Thompson contended that because an officer did not observe Thompson speeding, driving erratically, or causing an accident or near accident and because the officer did not charge Thompson with any driving offense other than DUI, the officer did not have reasonable cause to justify an investigative stop. The Supreme Court disagreed. The officer testified that Thompson's vehicle made a wide turn and crossed over the centerline into the oncoming lane of traffic and that after Thompson overcorrected, Thompson continued to swerve in his own driving lane, rode the centerline, and swerved off the right side of the road, which led the officer to believe that Thompson might be intoxicated. The officer's observations constituted objective data from which an experienced officer could infer that the occupant of the vehicle was engaged in wrongdoing that was sufficient to justify the investigative stop. St. v. Thompson, 2006 MT 274, 334 M 226, 146 P3d 756 (2006), following St. v. Steen, 2004 MT 343, 324 M 272, 102 P3d 1251 (2004), and distinguishing St. v. Lafferty, 1998 MT 247, 291 M 157, 967 P2d 363 (1998), and Morris v. St., 2001 MT 13, 304 M 114, 18 P3d 1003 (2001).

Retrograde Extrapolation of Blood Alcohol Content Not Necessary to Prove Person's Blood Alcohol at Time Person Was Driving: Retrograde extrapolation, a technique through which experts estimate alcohol concentration at some earlier time based on test results at some later time, is not necessary evidence to prove what a person's blood alcohol was at the time that the person was driving. Here, the results of an Intoxilyzer breath test, coupled with defendant's bloodshot and glassy eyes, the smell of alcohol when defendant was stopped, defendant's admission that he had consumed alcohol, and defendant's failure of field sobriety tests, were sufficient to sustain a conviction of DUI per se. St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006), following St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), and followed in St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Breath Test Administered Within Reasonable Time After Alleged DUI Consistent With Per Se Intoxication Statute: McGowan contended that the DUI per se statute required proof that a driver's alcohol concentration was above 0.08 while driving. The Supreme Court disagreed. A preliminary alcohol screening test administered in the field does not satisfy a person's obligation to submit to a breath test pursuant to 61-8-409(2). Reading 61-8-406 to require law enforcement officers to determine a person's alcohol content while driving would lead to an absurd result because it is impossible to administer a test while a person is driving. Therefore, interpreting the DUI per se statute to allow for the admissibility of breath tests administered within a reasonable time after an alleged act of driving under the influence represents a reasonable interpretation of statutory language, comports with legislative intent, and avoids an absurd result. In the present case, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, the state presented the jury with sufficient evidence to determine that McGowan committed the offense of driving with an alcohol concentration above 0.08 in violation of 61-8-406, and McGowan's conviction was affirmed. St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), followed in St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006).

Annual Intoxilyzer Calibration Requirement: Under ARM 23.4.214, all breath analysis instruments must be laboratory-certified on an annual basis. The plain meaning of "annual" means once every 365 days. The Supreme Court reversed a DUOS conviction based on a breath test conducted on an Intoxilyzer 5000 that had not been certified during the previous 13 months. St. v. Frac, 2006 MT 122, 332 M 255, 136 P3d 558 (2006).

Inference of Intoxication From Refusal to Take Sobriety Test — Burden of Proof Not Unfairly Shifted to Defendant: Morris contended that the provision in subsection (2) of this section that allows a jury to infer a defendant's intoxication based on the refusal to take a sobriety test unconstitutionally shifted the burden of proof to a defendant by providing that the state produce no other evidence of guilt. Analyzing this section as a whole, the Supreme Court concluded that subsection (2) requires corroborating evidence of DUI and that admissibility of a defendant's refusal to take a sobriety test presupposes other competent evidence in the form of probable cause to make an arrest in the first place. The trial court properly instructed the jury on the statutory requirements regarding the state's burden of proving that Morris was intoxicated and, given the jury instructions and the statutory requirements as a whole, the burden of proof did not impermissibly shift to Morris. Great Falls v. Morris, 2006 MT 93, 332 M 85, 134 P3d 692 (2006), followed in St. v. Michaud, 2008 MT 88, 342 M 244, 180 P3d 636 (2008), and St. v. Anderson, 2008 MT 116, 342 M 485, 182 P3d 80 (2008).

Jury Instruction That Evidence of DUI Be Viewed With Distrust Properly Denied When Video Evidence of Driving Not Extant: The officer who stopped Morris for careless driving and subsequent DUI did not videotape Morris's driving prior to the actual stop. Morris sought to offer a jury instruction that the evidence that was offered at trial should be viewed with distrust because the state failed to offer stronger, videotape evidence that Morris was DUI. The proposed instruction was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Section 26-1-602(6) presumes the existence of actual and identifiable stronger evidence, which did not exist in this case. Morris failed to provide any legal authority for the argument, and the proposed instruction on distrusting weaker evidence was properly refused. Great Falls v. Morris, 2006 MT 93, 332 M 85, 134 P3d 692 (2006).

Accuracy and Reliability of Preliminary Blood Test Established — Test Results Properly Admitted in Evidence: An officer measured Damon's blood alcohol content at 0.274, using an Alco-Sensor III preliminary breath test (PBT). The state and Damon both presented expert testimony as to whether the PBT was reliable and accurate as an evidentiary tool. Both experts testified that when administered according to protocols, the Alco-Sensor III had a margin of error in the range of 10%. The trial court held that the PBT was sufficiently reliable and accurate and admitted the PBT results. Damon appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although holding that PBT evidence is not necessarily admissible or inadmissible as a matter of law, the court reaffirmed the holding in Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594 (1983), that it is better to admit relevant scientific evidence in the same manner as other expert testimony and allow the weight of the evidence to be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Applying the 10% margin of error to Damon's test results, Damon's blood alcohol content was in the range of 0.247 to 0.301, more than twice the legal limit of intoxication. Thus, the state met its burden in establishing that Damon's intoxication exceeded the legal limit, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the results of Damon's PBT. St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 M 276, 119 P3d 1194 (2005), followed, with regard to the requirement that a party must establish that a defendant's preliminary alcohol screening test result is accurate and reliable before the test result may be admitted as evidence of a defendant's blood alcohol content, in St. v. Reavely, 2007 MT 168, 338 M 151, 164 P3d 890 (2007).

Motion to Suppress Intoxilyzer Results Based on Alleged Failure to Observe Defendant for Proper Period Prior to Test Properly Denied: Flaherty contended that the results of an Intoxilyzer test should have been disallowed because he was not under observation for the 15-minute period prior to testing as required by the operational checklist referenced in ARM 23.4.212 and by St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68 (1998). The District Court concluded that the entire time from the stop until Flaherty took the breath test was well in excess of 15 minutes and that Flaherty was under direct observation either by an officer or by video surveillance the entire time, so Flaherty's motion to suppress was denied. The Supreme Court noted that the operational checklist was changed since Fenton and that the checklist currently requires no oral ingestion of any material rather than a 15-minute observation period. It was undisputed that Flaherty did not ingest anything during the 15 minutes prior to testing. Thus, although the District Court based its conclusion on the premise that a 15-minute observation was required, the court's conclusion was nevertheless correct in light of the current requirement that a suspect not ingest any material, so denial of the motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Flaherty, 2005 MT 122, 327 M 168, 112 P3d 1033 (2005). See also Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Admission of HGN Test Results Despite Deviation From Four-Second Interval Requirements: Zakovi contended that the officer who administered a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test deviated from the standard 4-second interval requirements established in the national field sobriety training manual, rendering the test results unreliable and subject to exclusion pursuant to Zakovi's motion in limine. The trial court considered the manual provisions and examined a video demonstrating the officer's deviation from the 4-second interval requirement, but the court also considered the testimony of the officer and the officer's extensive DUI test administration and field sobriety teaching experience. The court found the officer credible and accepted the officer's statement that valid HGN test results are obtainable despite deviation from the interval requirements, particularly because nystagmus is more apparent in a more inebriated suspect. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion in limine and affirmed. St. v. Zakovi, 2005 MT 91, 326 M 475, 110 P3d 469 (2005).

Use of Nontestimonial Intoxilyzer Certification Reports in DUI Trial Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses — Crawford Rule: At Carter's DUI trial, the state introduced three certification reports in order to demonstrate that an Intoxilyzer 5000 was working properly when Carter was tested. The officers who prepared the reports did not testify at trial. Carter initially contended that the reports were hearsay, but on appeal, Carter asserted that admission of the reports violated his right to confront witnesses. Although the Supreme Court will generally not address new arguments raised on appeal, the court applied the exception in Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895 (1987), in this case because of the new confrontation clause jurisprudence set out in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), which was decided while Carter's case was pending. In Crawford, the U.S. Supreme Court for the first time distinguished testimonial and nontestimonial out-of-court statements, delineating testimonial statements, at a minimum, as applying to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial as well as to police interrogations. States are allowed flexibility in the development of hearsay law when nontestimonial hearsay is at issue. In Carter's case, the state asserted that the certification reports used at Carter's trial were nontestimonial evidence because they did not fall within the core group of statements that the confrontation clause was meant to address. The Supreme Court held that the certification reports were nontestimonial in that they were not substantive evidence of a particular offense, but rather constituted foundational evidence necessary for the admission of substantive evidence. Thus, Carter's confrontation right was not implicated despite the fact that the authors were not present to testify or be confronted. The court noted that a defendant is always free to subpoena authors of such reports if the defendant's pretrial investigation reveals that the reports are erroneous or are otherwise subject to attack. Therefore, in conformance with the Crawford rule, the Supreme Court exempted the certification reports from confrontation clause scrutiny and affirmed Carter's conviction. St. v. Carter, 2005 MT 87, 326 M 427, 114 P3d 1001 (2005).

Prior DUI Convictions Affirmed in Absence of Direct Evidence of Irregularity — Presumption of Regularity of Prior Convictions: Snell contended that it was improper for the state to use two prior DUI convictions to elevate a new DUI charge to a felony based on the fact that the prior convictions were invalid because Snell was not informed of the right to counsel. Although the state may not use a constitutionally infirm conviction to support an enhanced punishment, a defendant must overcome the presumption of the regularity of the prior convictions with direct evidence of irregularity. However, Snell was unable to recall facts about the judges involved in both prior DUI cases, casting considerable doubt on his ability to recall other critical details in those cases. The District Court correctly held that Snell's testimony was not sufficient to overcome the presumption of regularity through direct evidence and that the prior convictions were therefore constitutionally firm. Denial of the dismissal motion was affirmed. St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 M 173, 103 P3d 503 (2004). See also St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856 (1999), St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003), and St. v. Chaussee, 2011 MT 203, 361 Mont. 433, 259 P.3d 783.

Fifteen-Minute Period of Direct Observation No Longer Part of Checklist for Administration of Intoxilyzer 5000 Blood Alcohol Test: In St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68 (1998), it was noted that ARM 23.4.212 requires a 15-minute observation period prior to administration of an Intoxilyzer 5000 blood alcohol test. Lyons contended that that test was not properly administered in this case because Lyons used the bathroom during the 15 minutes prior to the test and was not under the officer's observation during the entire time. However, the administrative rule was revised after Fenton and now requires that the test administrator ensure that: (1) there was no oral ingestion of any material in the 15 minutes prior to testing; (2) the subject was instructed to deliver a proper sample; (3) the subject was observed during the sample delivery; and (4) nothing occurred that could affect the results. Direct line-of-sight observation of the subject for 15 minutes prior to testing is not required. The officer did follow the applicable checklist in this case, so Lyons' motion to suppress the test results was properly dismissed. Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Limitation on Use of State Pamphlet Concerning Blood Alcohol Content Not Erroneous: In a pretrial order, the District Court ruled that a pamphlet called BAC and You, published by the Department of Transportation and describing the effect of alcohol on blood levels, was admissible in a DUI case as a public document, but not for the truth or accuracy of the information in the pamphlet. Defense counsel further stipulated that the pamphlet would not provide a basis for substantive evidence regarding intoxication. Nevertheless, defense counsel attempted several times to use the pamphlet as proof that defendant was not intoxicated, based on the amount of alcohol that defendant admitted consuming prior to arrest. The court then limited further use of the pamphlet, and defendant contended on appeal that it was error for the court to limit use of a document that had been allowed into evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed. The trial court's limit on use of the pamphlet was not considered a reversal of its previous ruling admitting the pamphlet, but rather an underscoring of the pretrial ruling. Defense counsel's attempt to argue the substantive text of the pamphlet clearly exceeded the original intent and parameters of the pretrial order, so the trial court did not err in limiting its use. Helena v. Kortum, 2003 MT 290, 318 M 77, 78 P3d 882 (2003).

No Requirement of Quantifiable Blood Alcohol Content to Prove DUI — Other Competent Evidence Allowed: Kortum was stopped for DUI after an officer observed him driving poorly. Kortum admitted drinking earlier in the day, but refused to take a breath test and failed standard field sobriety tests (SFST). Following presentation of the state's case, Kortum moved for a directed verdict, asserting that the SFST were improperly administered, which, coupled with the lack of blood alcohol test results, constituted insufficient evidence of DUI. The motion was denied, and Kortum was convicted and appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Evidence bearing on the issue of DUI is not limited to blood and breath samples or SFST. Rather, a full range of competent evidence is sufficient, including the manner in which a vehicle is driven and the fact that a driver refused to submit to a breath test. Here, the jury heard evidence of Kortum's refusal to take the test, heard the officer's testimony and saw a videotape showing Kortum's erratic driving, and heard Kortum's own admission that he had been drinking. Even assuming that the SFST were flawed, there was sufficient competent evidence for the jury to find Kortum guilty of DUI. Helena v. Kortum, 2003 MT 290, 318 M 77, 78 P3d 882 (2003).

Witness Without Adequate Knowledge of Intoxilyzer Test Properly Precluded From Testifying as to Validity of Test Results: Russette was arrested for DUI and attempted at trial to introduce as an expert witness a chemistry professor who would testify that an Intoxilyzer analysis constituted a scientific test that was not valid or reliable unless at least two scientific tests had been performed pursuant to the scientific method. The District Court did not allow the professor to testify because he had no specific knowledge regarding the Intoxilyzer, so the testimony would not help the jury to understand the evidence or determine a fact in issue. Russette appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The party presenting a witness as an expert must establish to the satisfaction of the trial court that the witness possesses the requisite knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education to testify to the issue in question. Russette failed to lay any foundation that the professor had adequate knowledge upon which to challenge the validity of the Intoxilyzer, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in precluding the witness from testifying. St. v. Russette, 2002 MT 200, 311 M 188, 53 P3d 1256 (2002).

Blood Test Results From Emergency Medical Treatment Admissible as DUI Evidence Notwithstanding Lack of Consent to Blood Test: Llewellyn was involved in an automobile accident, sustaining significant injuries. Llewellyn was asked to submit to a blood test at the accident scene, but refused. While undergoing medical treatment in the emergency room, Llewellyn's blood was drawn on the order of a physician for purposes of diagnosis and treatment. Lab results revealed a blood alcohol level above the legal limit. The state obtained the results pursuant to an investigative subpoena and sought to have the results entered in evidence during Llewellyn's DUI trial, citing St. v. Newill, 285 M 84, 946 P2d 134 (1997), for the holding that blood tests taken for medical diagnosis and treatment are admissible as other competent evidence. Llewellyn moved to suppress the evidence, claiming that the state could not show compliance with the required administrative procedures in the collection of the blood test for evidentiary purposes, and noting that consent had been refused under 61-8-402. The District Court granted Llewellyn's motion, distinguishing Newill, because unlike the defendant in that case, Llewellyn had exercised the statutory right to refuse to submit to a blood test for determining blood alcohol content, and concluding that admitting the evidence would allow an end run around the implied consent statutes that the Legislature could not have intended. The state sought and the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control of the evidentiary issue. Notwithstanding subsequent amendments to the implied consent statutes since Newill, the resolution of the issue was still controlled by Newill. The criteria for admissibility under 61-8-402 relating to blood tests administered under the implied consent statute are inapplicable to diagnostic blood tests taken by a hospital or treating physician. There were additional competency requirements arising from the 1997 amendment to this section that were not at issue in Newill. The court applied the foundational requirements of the 1999 versions of 61-8-405 and this section, concluding that the administration of a blood test for medical treatment purposes need not be conducted at the request of a peace officer as required by 61-8-405, because that requirement applies only to blood tests conducted pursuant to 61-8-402. Further, the court found that the administrative rule regarding the collection of blood samples for drug or alcohol analysis should be applied in Llewellyn's case to determine whether the blood test was competent evidence, but the administrative requirement that a blood sample be collected upon written request of a peace officer or officer of the court did not apply to Llewellyn's blood sample collected for medical purposes, because that requirement applies only to blood tests conducted pursuant to the implied consent statute. However, the District Court in Llewellyn's case never determined whether the medical blood test was competent evidence for purposes of admissibility under this section, so the Supreme Court remanded for a finding as to whether the medical blood test evidence was competent and admissible. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001).

Admissibility of Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Results — Administrative Rule Limiting Test Results to Probable Cause Evidence Superseded — Proper Foundation for Use of Training Manual as Model for Screening Test: Harrington raised several objections concerning the use of results from a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST) at trial, contending first that the PAST results should have been excluded because ARM 23.4.201(7)(b) allows PAST results to be considered as probable cause evidence only. The Supreme Court noted that the 1997 Legislature amended this section to allow admission of a report of a blood or breath test if a breath test or PAST was performed by a person certified by the Forensic Sciences Division of the Department of Justice. The administrative rule was inconsistent with the statute, and the statute prevailed, so the PAST results could not be disallowed pursuant to the rule. Harrington also argued that a proper foundation was not laid for admission of the PAST results. The Supreme Court disagreed. The arresting officer testified that the specific make and model of equipment used for Harrington's PAST was on the approved list in the training manual distributed by the Department and that the equipment was field tested prior to use. It was within the trial court's discretion to consider the training manual pursuant to Rule 104, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), in determining whether an adequate foundation existed for introduction of the PAST results. Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P3d 937 (2001).

Consumption of Alcohol Following Accident Not Considered Tampering With Evidence: Peplow drove his truck off of a country road, then got a ride home, where he consumed three double shots of whiskey, allegedly for pain from the accident. After walking his dog, he went to a nearby bar and ordered a beer. He was found at the bar by the highway patrol officer who was investigating the accident. Peplow failed all sobriety tests and was charged with and convicted of DUI, driving with a suspended or revoked license, driving without insurance, failing to report an accident, and tampering with evidence. Following the state's case at trial, Peplow moved for a directed verdict on the tampering charge, arguing that a person's blood alcohol content does not fit the definition of a record, document, or thing, as required in 45-7-207, and also that the state failed to present evidence that Peplow knew or had reason to believe that an official proceeding or an investigation was pending or about to be instituted, as required by the statute. The motion was denied, and Peplow appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, evidence of a person's blood alcohol content must be shown by an analysis of blood or breath for it to be admissible, but the section does not contemplate that potentially measurable amounts of alcohol, still within the body, constitute evidence. Until one's breath or blood has been collected for analysis, it cannot be considered physical evidence. Thus, the court held that a person's blood alcohol content, as it exists within the person's body and control, does not constitute physical evidence, as required in 45-7-207, or a thing presented to the senses, as explained in 26-1-101, so a person who consumes alcohol following a motor vehicle accident cannot be convicted of tampering with physical evidence under 45-7-207, with respect to that person's blood, breath, or urine still within the person's body. Peplow's tampering conviction was reversed. St. v. Peplow, 2001 MT 253, 307 M 172, 36 P3d 922 (2001).

Admissibility of Proof of Refusal to Take Sobriety Test Not Violative of Separation of Powers Doctrine: Robertson claimed that by enacting this section, regarding admission of evidence of a person's refusal to take a sobriety test, the Legislature unconstitutionally infringed on the function of courts to determine the admissibility of evidence, in violation of the separation of powers doctrine. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that ultimately, the admissibility of evidence lies with the court pursuant to Rule 104, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Legislature routinely passes laws that determine whether certain kinds of evidence are admissible, without violating the separation of powers doctrine in the process. Further, "admissible" means that evidence may, but is not required, to be admitted. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also St. v. Long, 778 P2d 1027 (Wash. 1989).

Evidence of Reliability of Breathalyzer Irrelevant When Test Refused: Because Robertson refused to take a DUI Breathalyzer test, he lacked grounds to later challenge whether the machine in question produced reliable results; nevertheless, his refusal to take the test was admissible under this section. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000), following St. v. Jackson, 206 M 338, 672 P2d 255, 40 St. Rep. 1698 (1983).

What Form of Compliance of Instrument Used in Breath Test Required as Foundation for Breath Test Results: ARM 23.4.214 requires that all breath analysis equipment be sent to the state Forensic Sciences Division annually for laboratory certification. A person charged with an alcohol-related offense is entitled to the procedural safeguards contained in the administrative rule, so in order for the results of a defendant's breath test to be admissible, the state must lay a proper foundation by establishing that the instrument complied with ARM 23.4.214. During pretrial discovery, Delaney requested documentation that the instrument used to test his breath had been certified, and the state provided a copy of the laboratory certification form. At trial, Delaney moved to dismiss the results of the breath test, contending that the form was inadmissible hearsay that could not be used to lay the requisite foundation, and also maintained that failure to call the custodian of the annual certification records violated Delaney's right to confront witnesses. The state contended that it was not required to have the form admitted in order to lay a foundation for admissibility and that, consequently, it did not matter that the document was hearsay, but rather that all that was necessary was to establish to the satisfaction of the court that the certification had been performed. The District Court sided with the state and admitted the breath test results. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the determination of whether adequate foundation exists is within the discretion of the District Court and that that determination is made pursuant to Rule 104(a), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), which authorizes the examination of any proffered evidence, regardless of its admissibility, in determining the admissibility of challenged evidence. Under the identical federal Rule of Evidence, federal courts have found that the plain language of the rule extends to consideration of hearsay and other evidence normally inadmissible at trial. (See Bourjaily v. U.S., 483 US 171, 97 L Ed 2d 144, 107 S Ct 1775 (1987), and its progeny.) Thus, the District Court was allowed to consider the certification form in determining whether an adequate foundation existed without regard to whether the form itself was hearsay, and consequently, the state was not required to call the records custodian to testify. St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 M 263, 991 P2d 461, 56 St. Rep. 1267 (1999), distinguishing St. v. Woods, 272 M 220, 900 P2d 320, 52 St. Rep. 762 (1995), and St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998), and followed in St. v. White, 2009 MT 26, 349 M 109, 201 P3d 808 (2009), with regard to necessity of proper foundation for admission of results of alcohol concentration breath analysis. White was overruled, to the extent it is inconsistent with Delaney, in St. v. Jenkins, 2011 MT 287, 362 Mont. 481, 265 P.3d 643. See also St. v. Johnston, 2011 MT 184, 361 Mont. 301, 258 P.3d 417 (holding that a breath analysis instrument must be inspected and calibrated at least every 31 days pursuant to ARM 23.4.213, not every 7 days, or its results may be suppressed).

Results of Prior Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test Improperly Admitted — Harmless Error: At Berosik's DUI trial, he argued that because his eyes had been injured in his youth, the horizontal gaze nystagmus test (HGN) was not valid. The District Court concluded that Berosik opened the door to evidence of a prior DUI incident in testifying on direct examination about the eye condition and admitted evidence of the results of the prior HGN, which Berosik had also failed. The Supreme Court decided on appeal that the court abused its discretion in admitting the evidence because it did not rebut Berosik's suggestion that he scored high on the test due to the injuries and because the prior test results had, at most, a negligible probative value that was substantially outweighed by the risk of confusion of the issues. However, the error was harmless because Berosik failed to show that any of his substantive rights were prejudiced or that his right to a fair trial was impaired. Even without the prior test results, there was overwhelming evidence that Berosik was guilty of DUI, so the conviction was affirmed. St. v. Berosik, 1999 MT 238, 296 M 165, 988 P2d 775, 56 St. Rep. 938 (1999), applying St. v. Partin, 287 M 12, 951 P2d 1002, 54 St. Rep. 1474 (1997).

Character of Independent Evidence Tending to Establish Commission of Crime — Confession of DUI Admissible: Over Martinosky's objection, the District Court admitted a tape recording of his confession as evidence of DUI. On appeal, Martinosky contended that there was insufficient independent evidence to establish the offense, so the confession should not have been allowed as evidence, pursuant to 46-16-215. However, independent evidence tending to establish commission of a crime before a defendant's confession may be admitted need not be evidence establishing the crime beyond a reasonable doubt or even evidence establishing a prima facie case that the offense was committed. Citing St. v. Palmer, 247 M 210, 805 P2d 580, 48 St. Rep. 166 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the manner in which a vehicle is operated, including excessive speed and failing to stop when signaled to stop by a law enforcement officer, can be evidence that the driver was under the influence of alcohol. The fact that Martinosky spent several hours drinking in a bar, smelled of alcohol, left the scene of an accident, failed to stop for pursuing police, failed to stop at two stop signs and a stoplight, and was traveling at a high rate of speed in a residential area before crashing into a house was sufficient to establish DUI, so the confession was properly allowed. St. v. Martinosky, 1999 MT 122, 294 M 427, 982 P2d 440, 56 St. Rep. 495 (1999).

Discrepancy Between Time of Report and Time Recorded on Intoxilyzer: The arresting officer adjusted the time recorded on an Intoxilyzer 5000 printout to correspond to the highway patrol time that was used when documenting defendant's arrest and processing. The corrected time, indicating a 17-minute observation period prior to administration of the test, was sufficiently explained and properly accepted as competent evidence of compliance with ARM 23.4.212, which requires a 15-minute observation period. St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68, 55 St. Rep. 389 (1998).

Test Results of Blood Drawn for Medical Reasons Admissible — Implied Consent Requirements Inapplicable: When Newill was admitted to the hospital for injuries resulting from an automobile accident, a sample of her blood was drawn for medical diagnostic and treatment purposes. Tests indicated more than twice the allowable level of alcohol. During subsequent questioning, Newill admitted that she had been drinking and authorized the taking of a blood sample to determine her BAC, but a blood sample could not be obtained. Newill sought to suppress the records containing the results of the earlier blood test because the records did not comport with the foundational requirements of 61-8-402, the implied consent statute. The District Court denied the motion to suppress. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the blood test taken at the direction of the attending physician was admissible as other competent evidence bearing upon whether Newill was intoxicated. Therefore, the District Court properly held that the blood test conducted by the hospital fell within the "other competent evidence" exclusion of subsection (3) of this section. St. v. Newill, 285 M 84, 946 P2d 134, 54 St. Rep. 1055 (1997), followed in State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001).

Discovery Exception Inapplicable — Blood Sample Admissible Under Other Law: After Henning's motion in limine for suppression of a voluntarily given blood sample was denied, he entered a plea of DUI upon the condition that the plea could be withdrawn if the District Court ruled his blood sample inadmissible. The District Court found that the state had a compelling state interest that outweighed Henning's privacy interest under 50-16-535. The Supreme Court held that 50-16-535(1)(i) is inapplicable because it applies only to discovery of health care information, and Henning did not contend that his blood test was not subject to discovery. The Supreme Court found the results of the test admissible under subsection (1)(a) of this section and admissible under the rationale of St. v. Kirkaldie, 179 M 283, 587 P2d 1298 (1978). St. v. Henning, 258 M 488, 853 P2d 1223, 50 St. Rep. 626 (1993).

Sufficient Foundation in Admission of Breath Test Results: Defendant contended that the state failed to lay a proper foundation proving that an Intoxilyzer was properly tested and certified prior to administration of a breath test, as required by ARM 23.4.209. However, the admission of test results was within the court's discretion in light of the facts that the arresting officer was certified to administer the test and that the Intoxilyzer was properly calibrated, had been inspected, and met Division requirements at the time of installation. St. v. West, 252 M 83, 826 P2d 940, 49 St. Rep. 170 (1992).

Admissibility of Evidence Regarding Breathalyzer Printout — Present Sense Impression: An officer who had experienced problems with a Breathalyzer printer prior to testing defendant copied the numerical results of the calibration and test result from the display screen to the printout card. Defendant averred that it was error to admit the officer's testimony regarding the numbers observed on the screen and subsequently recorded on the printout, contending the testimony was inadmissible hearsay that did not fall within any recognized exceptions. However, the numbers were a present sense impression under Rule 803, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), constituting a written assertion describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, and as such they fell within the statutory hearsay exception in this section. Hoy v. Helena, 248 M 128, 809 P2d 1255, 48 St. Rep. 344 (1991), followed in St. v. Berosik, 1999 MT 238, 296 M 165, 988 P2d 775, 56 St. Rep. 938 (1999).

Manner in Which Vehicle Driven as Evidence of DUI: The Supreme Court cited St. v. Peterson, 236 M 247, 769 P2d 1221 (1989), for the proposition that the manner in which a vehicle is driven can be evidence of driving under the influence of alcohol. Therefore, driving at speeds over 100 miles an hour under wet road conditions, swerving off the road, plunging over two embankments, driving down ditches and across fields, smashing through the interstate fence, and failing to stop even though signaled to stop by three police officers demonstrated a manner of driving that would not be undertaken by a sober individual. Coupled with the detection of the odor of alcohol by an experienced officer following the crash, evidence was sufficient to suggest that the driver was intoxicated. St. v. Palmer, 247 M 210, 805 P2d 580, 48 St. Rep. 166 (1991), followed in St. v. Martinosky, 1999 MT 122, 294 M 427, 982 P2d 440, 56 St. Rep. 495 (1999).

Breathalyzer Test — Defendant's Refusal Made Prior to Miranda Warning Admissible: Under the holding of St. v. Jackson, 206 M 338, 672 P2d 255, 40 St. Rep. 1698 (1983), neither the results of the Breathalyzer test nor a defendant's refusal to submit to the test are communications protected by the fifth amendment of the U.S. Constitution or by Montana's constitutional prohibition against self-incrimination. Thus, a refusal to submit to a Breathalyzer test made prior to Miranda warnings is not subject to suppression because the Miranda warning does not apply to such nontestimonial conduct. Missoula v. Forest, 236 M 129, 769 P2d 699, 46 St. Rep. 237 (1989), followed in Helena v. Barrett, 245 M 35, 798 P2d 544, 47 St. Rep. 1865 (1990).

Admissibility of "HGN" Test: The Supreme Court adopted the position of several out-of-state courts in holding that results of the horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test are admissible in Montana as one method of indicating impairment. St. v. Clark, 234 M 222, 762 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 1859 (1988).

Swanson Rule Limited — No Police Duty to Assist in Obtaining Exculpatory Evidence: The rule set out in St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), applies only when: (1) the defendant has timely claimed the right to a blood test; and (2) the officer does not unreasonably impede the defendant's right to a blood test. Police officers have no affirmative duty to assist in gathering exculpatory evidence nor may they frustrate such efforts on the part of the accused. St. v. Clark, 234 M 222, 762 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 1859 (1988).

Careless Handling of Blood Sample — Deprivation of Due Process and Fair Trial: Defendant was taken to a hospital where a blood sample was drawn; then he was transported back to the Sheriff's office where he was booked and his personal property, including the blood sample, was taken from him. The blood sample was left on the counter in the dispatch room rather than being refrigerated and was not given to defendant upon his release. The Supreme Court held that once the sample was taken from defendant, the authorities had a duty to properly care for it. Since this duty was not performed, the careless handling of the sample deprived defendant of his due process right to gather possible exculpatory evidence, precluding a fair trial. St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), distinguished in St. v. Heth, 230 M 268, 750 P2d 103, 45 St. Rep. 194 (1988).

Foundation Required for Admissibility of Blood Test Results: Defendant on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs in violation of 61-8-401 is entitled to the procedural safeguards of the Administrative Rules of Montana. To admit evidence of blood alcohol content and a test report, the state must lay a foundation pursuant to 61-8-404 which incorporates ARM 23.3.931. The laboratory analysis must be done in a laboratory qualified under the rules of the Department of Justice. The report must be prepared in accordance with the rules of the Department. If a blood sample is taken, the person withdrawing the blood must be demonstrably qualified to do so. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985), cited in St. v. Decker, 251 M 339, 828 P2d 1342, 48 St. Rep. 1046 (1991).

Refusal to Submit to Blood Alcohol Test Not Self-Incrimination: Use of evidence of a defendant's refusal to submit to a blood alcohol test in a DUI prosecution does not violate the defendant's United States Constitution fifth amendment right against self-incrimination. The language used in Art. II, sec. 25, Mont. Const., is substantially identical to and affords no basis for interpreting it more broadly than its federal counterpart. Montana's constitutional prohibition against self-incrimination is not offended by the admission of defendant's refusal to submit to a Breathalyzer sobriety test. St. v. Jackson, 206 M 338, 672 P2d 255, 40 St. Rep. 1698 (1983).

Intensive Care Patient — Incapability of Refusing Found: Investigating highway patrolman saw driver at scene of collision in which two persons in another auto were killed, received a blank stare when he questioned driver, saw driver in intensive care in hospital 2 hours later, with his eyes closed, lying on a bed with i.v.s being administered, and was told by a doctor that he could not speak to driver. Even though driver was conscious and apparently coherent, his physical condition was serious enough to render him incapable of refusing to consent to a blood test, and results of test made after the doctor authorized a nurse to draw blood from driver and give it to the patrolman were properly admitted in negligent homicide trial. St. v. Morgan, 198 M 391, 646 P2d 1177, 39 St. Rep. 1072 (1982).

Prosecutorial Comment on Presumption of Intoxication: In negligent homicide trial of defendant involved in auto collision while he was driving after drinking, a forensic scientist testified that blood taken from defendant 2 hours after the accident had a .17 blood alcohol content and that at that level one's driving ability would be obviously impaired and speech, hearing, balance, judgment, reaction time, and other motor skills would be affected. The trial judge ruled that because the charge was negligent homicide he would not instruct the jury on the statutory presumption that one with a .10 blood alcohol content level is under the influence. Prosecutor twice disregarded the ruling, stating in the cross-examination of a witness and in his closing argument that .10 is the legal level of intoxication. Prosecutor used an improper and unacceptable tactic, but defendant was not prejudiced as there was already sufficient evidence as to what a .17 blood alcohol content level meant. St. v. Morgan, 198 M 391, 646 P2d 1177, 39 St. Rep. 1072 (1982).

No Supervisory Control Power in District Court: Relator was arrested for driving while intoxicated. He refused to take a blood alcohol test and subsequently applied to the District Court for a Writ of Supervisory Control on the issue of the admissibility of evidence of the refusal, arguing that the nonlawyer Justice of the Peace was ill-equipped to handle the constitutional aspects of his case. Relator appealed from the District Court's ruling against him after hearing the Writ on the merits. The Supreme Court found no power in the District Courts to exercise supervisory control and stated that a Writ of Supervisory Control was not to be used as a means to circumvent the appeal process. Only in the most extenuating circumstances will a Writ be granted. State ex rel. Ward v. Schmall, 190 M 1, 617 P2d 140, 37 St. Rep. 1720 (1980).

1989 Amendment: In (5) inserted "or 61-8-806"; and made minor changes in style and grammar.

1985 Amendment: In (6) substituted reference to department of justice for references to division of motor vehicles and division of forensic sciences.

1981 Amendment: Added "or other qualified person under the supervision and direction of a physician or registered nurse" near the beginning of (1) and (4); substituted "division of forensic sciences" for "state board of health and environmental sciences" and "rules" for "standards" in (6).

Administrative Rules

Title 23, chapter 4, subchapter 2, ARM Drug and/or alcohol analysis.

Case Notes

Motion to Suppress Breath Test Results Improperly Granted — 31-Day Field Inspection and Calibration Applies — District Court Reversed: A defendant charged with his fourth DUI filed a motion to suppress the results of his breath test on the grounds that the machine had not been inspected and calibrated within the week prior to its use as, he alleged, is required by St. v. Gieser, 2011 MT 2, 359 Mont. 95, 248 P.3d 300. The District Court granted the motion, ignoring an Administrative Rule providing that breath analysis instruments must be inspected and calibrated at least every 31 days instead of every 7 days. The state appealed and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, ruling that the language relied upon by both the defendant and the District Court was dicta and that the Administrative Rule applied. Therefore, the District Court erred in granting the motion to suppress the results of the breath test. St. v. Johnston, 2011 MT 184, 361 Mont. 301, 258 P.3d 417.

Independently Obtained Blood Alcohol Test Result Admissible in Prosecution of Negligent Vehicular Assault, Negligent Homicide, and Criminal Endangerment: Following a vehicle accident in which a person was killed, Schauf was charged with and convicted of negligent homicide, negligent vehicular assault, and criminal endangerment, but Schauf was not charged with DUI. At the hospital, a blood alcohol sample was taken at the direction of the investigating officer under the implied consent law and without advising Schauf of the right to an independent blood test. A second blood sample was drawn at the request of Schauf's treating physician in the emergency room. Schauf moved for suppression of the sample results, which showed that Schauf was intoxicated at the time of the accident. The District Court dismissed the results of the first test but admitted the results of the second test, and Schauf appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court noted that the implied consent law applies when a person is charged with negligent vehicular assault, because that offense specifically relates to statutes governing DUI. However, proof of DUI is not an element of negligent homicide or criminal endangerment, so failure to advise Schauf of the right to an independent blood test provided no basis for dismissal of those charges. Additionally, to the extent that the negligent vehicular assault conviction rested upon the results of the second blood test, those results were obtained independently of state action and of the implied consent law. Thus, suppression of the law enforcement test was proper, but dismissal of all charges would have been an extreme measure given additional substantial evidence of Schauf's intoxication before and after the accident. St. v. Schauf, 2009 MT 281, 352 M 186, 216 P3d 740 (2009).

Offsite or On-Call Supervision Sufficient to Satisfy Requirement for Supervision and Direction of Person Who Draws Blood for DUI Test: After Merry was picked up for suspected DUI in the early morning hours, he was taken to a rural health center for a blood draw. There was no physician or registered nurse present to take blood, so a licensed practical nurse took the blood sample, which indicated Merry's intoxication. At trial, Merry asserted that results of the blood test should be suppressed on grounds that the nurse was not acting under the supervision and direction of a physician or registered nurse as required by this section, because there was no physician or registered nurse physically present. The District Court denied the motion to suppress, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. This section does not require the physical presence of a physician or registered nurse when a qualified person such as a licensed practical nurse takes a blood sample for DUI testing purposes. Offsite or on-call supervision can satisfy the statutory requirement that the qualified person be acting under the supervision and direction of a physician or registered nurse. St. v. Merry, 2008 MT 288, 345 M 390, 191 P3d 428 (2008).

No Clear Discussion Regarding Separate Blood Alcohol Test or Impediment of Request for Independent Test — Due Process Not Violated: As the arresting officer was reading the implied consent law, Wrzesinski stated, "I want a blood test though". The officer then finished reading the implied consent law, explaining that after the requested breath test was complete, Wrzesinski could request an independent test. Wrzesinski refused the breath test and did not request an independent test or raise the topic of other alternatives to the breath test. Wrzesinski subsequently moved to dismiss on grounds that he was not given the blood test that he requested and that his request to receive one was unreasonably impeded. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. An accused has a due process right to be informed of the right to obtain an independent blood alcohol test, but when a due process violation is alleged, the defendant must establish that the test was timely requested and that the arresting officer unreasonably impeded the right to the test. Here, Wrzesinski's statement could reasonably be construed as an expression of a desire to request a blood test as an alternative to the breath test that the officer selected, but could not be construed as a request for an independent blood test, and even if Wrzesinski had done so, the officer did not unreasonably impede Wrzesinski from obtaining one. St. v. Wrzesinski, 2006 MT 263, 334 M 157, 145 P3d 985 (2006).

Motion to Suppress Intoxilyzer Results Based on Alleged Failure to Observe Defendant for Proper Period Prior to Test Properly Denied: Flaherty contended that the results of an Intoxilyzer test should have been disallowed because he was not under observation for the 15-minute period prior to testing as required by the operational checklist referenced in ARM 23.4.212 and by St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68 (1998). The District Court concluded that the entire time from the stop until Flaherty took the breath test was well in excess of 15 minutes and that Flaherty was under direct observation either by an officer or by video surveillance the entire time, so Flaherty's motion to suppress was denied. The Supreme Court noted that the operational checklist was changed since Fenton and that the checklist currently requires no oral ingestion of any material rather than a 15-minute observation period. It was undisputed that Flaherty did not ingest anything during the 15 minutes prior to testing. Thus, although the District Court based its conclusion on the premise that a 15-minute observation was required, the court's conclusion was nevertheless correct in light of the current requirement that a suspect not ingest any material, so denial of the motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Flaherty, 2005 MT 122, 327 M 168, 112 P3d 1033 (2005). See also Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Admission of HGN Test Results Despite Deviation From Four-Second Interval Requirements: Zakovi contended that the officer who administered a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test deviated from the standard 4-second interval requirements established in the national field sobriety training manual, rendering the test results unreliable and subject to exclusion pursuant to Zakovi's motion in limine. The trial court considered the manual provisions and examined a video demonstrating the officer's deviation from the 4-second interval requirement, but the court also considered the testimony of the officer and the officer's extensive DUI test administration and field sobriety teaching experience. The court found the officer credible and accepted the officer's statement that valid HGN test results are obtainable despite deviation from the interval requirements, particularly because nystagmus is more apparent in a more inebriated suspect. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion in limine and affirmed. St. v. Zakovi, 2005 MT 91, 326 M 475, 110 P3d 469 (2005).

Blood Sample Taken by Phlebotomist Under Supervision of Registered Nurse — No Error: Zakovi asserted that evidence from a blood alcohol sample withdrawn at a hospital by a phlebotomist should be suppressed because the sample was not withdrawn by a physician or registered nurse. However, the phlebotomist was continuously under the supervision of a registered nurse on duty in the emergency room, so the requirement that a blood sample be withdrawn by a physician, registered nurse, or other qualified person acting under the supervision of a physician or registered nurse was met, and Zakovi's motion to suppress the blood sample evidence was properly denied. St. v. Zakovi, 2005 MT 91, 326 M 475, 110 P3d 469 (2005).

Fifteen-Minute Period of Direct Observation No Longer Part of Checklist for Administration of Intoxilyzer 5000 Blood Alcohol Test: In St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68 (1998), it was noted that ARM 23.4.212 requires a 15-minute observation period prior to administration of an Intoxilyzer 5000 blood alcohol test. Lyons contended that that test was not properly administered in this case because Lyons used the bathroom during the 15 minutes prior to the test and was not under the officer's observation during the entire time. However, the administrative rule was revised after Fenton and now requires that the test administrator ensure that: (1) there was no oral ingestion of any material in the 15 minutes prior to testing; (2) the subject was instructed to deliver a proper sample; (3) the subject was observed during the sample delivery; and (4) nothing occurred that could affect the results. Direct line-of-sight observation of the subject for 15 minutes prior to testing is not required. The officer did follow the applicable checklist in this case, so Lyons' motion to suppress the test results was properly dismissed. Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

No Violation of Due Process Rights Upon Failure to Request Independent Blood Test: When an alleged crime involves intoxication, the accused has the right under this section to obtain, upon request, a sobriety test independent of that offered by the arresting officer. Beanblossom contended that failure to administer an independent blood test was violative of his due process rights. However, a due process violation arises only when an accused requests but is then denied an independent sobriety test. Beanblossom did not request an independent test, so no due process violation occurred. St. v. Beanblossom, 2002 MT 351, 313 M 394, 61 P3d 165 (2002).

Defendant Informed of Right to Independent Blood Test After Administration of Portable Breath Test — No Violation of Due Process Rights: After Feldbrugge was stopped for speeding, the investigating officer noticed that Feldbrugge seemed confused, had difficulty removing his driver's license from his wallet and producing proof of registration and insurance, had bloodshot and glassy eyes and slurred speech, and was unsteady on his feet. The officer did not perform field sobriety tests, but did ask Feldbrugge to take a portable breath test (PBT). The officer read a short advisory that did not contain information regarding Feldbrugge's right to obtain an independent blood test to challenge the PBT results. Feldbrugge consented to the PBT, which he failed, and was arrested and taken to the county jail. Before being administered an Intoxilyzer breath test at the jail, Feldbrugge was read the informed consent advisory form, which included a statement regarding Feldbrugge's right to obtain an independent blood test. At trial, Feldbrugge moved to suppress the evidence on grounds that his due process rights were violated because he was not informed of the right to an independent blood test until after the PBT was administered. However, the notion that Feldbrugge had a choice between taking a PBT or obtaining an independent blood test, without penalty, was misguided. Here, it was unnecessary for the officer to inform Feldbrugge of the right to an independent blood test prior to requesting the PBT because even if Feldbrugge had been so informed, his options remained the same: consent to the PBT or refuse and have his driver's license seized. The officer was required to timely inform Feldbrugge that he could obtain an independent blood test in addition to the PBT and Intoxilyzer breath test so that Feldbrugge could gather exculpatory evidence. Informing Feldbrugge after the PBT was timely, so Feldbrugge's due process rights were not violated. Because the PBT results were admissible, Feldbrugge's arrest was supported by probable cause, and the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Feldbrugge, 2002 MT 154, 310 M 368, 50 P3d 1067 (2002).

Arresting Officer's Advice Considered Frustration of Due Process Right to Independent Blood Test — Strand Remedy for Violation of Due Process Rights Overruled: Minkoff was arrested for DUI and informed of his right to an independent blood test. Minkoff asked the arresting officer whether he should get a blood test, and the officer initially replied that he could not advise Minkoff, but that the test would only be given at Minkoff's expense. Minkoff then asked whether there was any difference between the blood test and the breath test, and the officer repeatedly stated that the blood test would be more exact and higher than the breath test. Minkoff then took a breath test, which he failed, but did not request a blood test. After being convicted, Minkoff appealed on grounds that his right to an independent blood test was frustrated by the arresting officer's response to the inquiry about whether to get a blood test. The District Court had relied on St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558 (1997), in denying Minkoff's motion to dismiss. Sidmore provides that two criteria must be met to support an allegation of denial of due process rights regarding the right to an independent test: (1) the accused must timely claim the right to an independent blood test; and (2) a law enforcement officer must unreasonably impede the defendant's right to obtain an independent blood test. Here, given the immediacy of the officer's advice, the period within which Minkoff could timely request the test under the first Sidmore criteria had not passed, and to conclude otherwise would permit frustration of a person's due process right to an independent test in advance of the person's reasonable opportunity to request the test. Then, to determine whether the officer unreasonably frustrated Minkoff's right to obtain the blood test, the Supreme Court applied Lau v. St., 896 P2d 825 (Alaska 1995). Under Lau, a government officer having custody of an arrested driver cannot attempt to dissuade the driver from exercising the right to an independent blood test. Here, the officer's repeated statements, albeit well-intentioned, that a blood test would show a higher blood alcohol level, were affirmative acts that would frustrate, if not obliterate, the intention of any rational arrestee to obtain an independent blood test. Regarding the proper remedy for such a due process violation, the Supreme Court previously held in St. v. Strand, 286 M 122, 951 P2d 552 (1997), that suppression of the breath test was an appropriate remedy on the basis that if the state frustrated the right to an independent test, it could not then be allowed to use its own scientific evidence of intoxication against the defendant. On further consideration, the Supreme Court held that the Strand remedy was manifestly incorrect and overruled Strand in that regard, holding that dismissal rather than suppression of the breath test is the appropriate remedy when the right to an independent blood test is frustrated. St. v. Minkoff, 2002 MT 29, 308 M 248, 42 P3d 223 (2002), followed in St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 M 221, 136 P3d 543 (2006), and St. v. Wrzesinski, 2006 MT 263, 334 M 157, 145 P3d 985 (2006).

Blood Test Results From Emergency Medical Treatment Admissible as DUI Evidence Notwithstanding Lack of Consent to Blood Test: Llewellyn was involved in an automobile accident, sustaining significant injuries. Llewellyn was asked to submit to a blood test at the accident scene, but refused. While undergoing medical treatment in the emergency room, Llewellyn's blood was drawn on the order of a physician for purposes of diagnosis and treatment. Lab results revealed a blood alcohol level above the legal limit. The state obtained the results pursuant to an investigative subpoena and sought to have the results entered in evidence during Llewellyn's DUI trial, citing St. v. Newill, 285 M 84, 946 P2d 134 (1997), for the holding that blood tests taken for medical diagnosis and treatment are admissible as other competent evidence. Llewellyn moved to suppress the evidence, claiming that the state could not show compliance with the required administrative procedures in the collection of the blood test for evidentiary purposes, and noting that consent had been refused under 61-8-402. The District Court granted Llewellyn's motion, distinguishing Newill, because unlike the defendant in that case, Llewellyn had exercised the statutory right to refuse to submit to a blood test for determining blood alcohol content, and concluding that admitting the evidence would allow an end run around the implied consent statutes that the Legislature could not have intended. The state sought and the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control of the evidentiary issue. Notwithstanding subsequent amendments to the implied consent statutes since Newill, the resolution of the issue was still controlled by Newill. The criteria for admissibility under 61-8-402 relating to blood tests administered under the implied consent statute are inapplicable to diagnostic blood tests taken by a hospital or treating physician. There were additional competency requirements arising from the 1997 amendment to 61-8-404 that were not at issue in Newill. The court applied the foundational requirements of the 1999 versions of 61-8-404 and this section, concluding that the administration of a blood test for medical treatment purposes need not be conducted at the request of a peace officer as required by this section, because that requirement applies only to blood tests conducted pursuant to 61-8-402. Further, the court found that the administrative rule regarding the collection of blood samples for drug or alcohol analysis should be applied in Llewellyn's case to determine whether the blood test was competent evidence, but the administrative requirement that a blood sample be collected upon written request of a peace officer or officer of the court did not apply to Llewellyn's blood sample collected for medical purposes, because that requirement applies only to blood tests conducted pursuant to the implied consent statute. However, the District Court in Llewellyn's case never determined whether the medical blood test was competent evidence for purposes of admissibility under 61-8-404, so the Supreme Court remanded for a finding as to whether the medical blood test evidence was competent and admissible. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 2001 MT 305, 307 M 491, 38 P3d 820 (2001), followed in St. v. Schauf, 2009 MT 281, 352 M 186, 216 P3d 740 (2009).

Allegation of Misinformation in Implied Consent Advisory Form as Applied to Nonresident — Motion to Suppress Results of Breath Test Properly Denied: Fergunson pleaded guilty to driving under the influence of alcohol and driving the wrong way on a one-way street, but reserved his right to appeal the denial of his motion to suppress the evidence of his breath test. On appeal, Fergunson argued that the test results should have been suppressed because the implied consent advisory form misstated the law as it applied to him as a resident of Iowa and that he was thus unlawfully coerced into taking the breath test without having all the correct and relevant information upon which to make an informed decision. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the motion to suppress. The purposes of implied consent advisory forms are to put an apparently intoxicated driver on notice of the potentially serious consequences of refusing a blood alcohol test and to alert the driver of the due process protections germane to independent testing and posttesting hearings. Those purposes were accomplished here. Given that Fergunson's right to operate a motor vehicle faced suspension in both states because he refused to take the breath test and in light of the fact that he was told that his license would be returned to Iowa if he refused to take the test, his argument that he was misled or unlawfully coerced was unpersuasive. Missoula v. Fergunson, 2001 MT 69, 305 M 36, 22 P3d 198 (2001), following St. v. Simmons, 2000 MT 329, 303 M 60, 15 P3d 408 (2000). Fergunson and Simmons were followed in Anderson v. St., 2007 MT 225, 339 M 113, 168 P3d 1042 (2007), as applied to a resident driver who was not specifically informed that failure to submit to a breath test would result in suspension of a Montana driver's license, but was nevertheless informed of the serious consequences of failure to take the test by reference to the consequences to a nonresident driver.

Laying Proper Foundation for Breath Test Information: Incashola was granted a motion in limine, effectively suppressing breath test information, on grounds that the state had not laid a proper foundation for admission of the test result by performing a proper field certification on the Intoxilyzer following the test, implied as required under ARM 23.4.213(1)(i). The state had opposed the motion, arguing that the field certification performed 4 days before Incashola's arrest fell within the 7-day test validity provided for in ARM 23.4.213(1)(j), thus establishing the proper foundation for admission of the test results. The Supreme Court noted that a defendant charged with driving under the influence is entitled to the procedural safeguards contained in the administrative rule and that if a proper foundation is not laid through state compliance with the safeguards, the results of the breath test analysis are inadmissible. ARM 23.4.213(1)(i) is not a foundational requirement for the admissibility of breath test results. Rather, the trier of fact uses the inference created by ARM 23.4.213(1)(i) to determine whether the testing instrument was in proper working order. In other words, if evidence establishes that proper field certifications were performed both before and after the breath test at issue, the trier of fact must infer that the test instrument was in working order. ARM 23.4.213(1)(j) is a foundational requirement for admissibility of breath test results because a proper field certification performed within 7 days of the test at issue constitutes an adequate foundation for admissibility. The proper field certification having been timely made and an adequate foundation laid, the trial court abused its discretion in granting Incashola's motion in limine. The case was reversed and remanded, with a reminder that both parties were still free to offer other evidence at trial with regard to whether the instrument was in proper working order on the day of Incashola's breath test. St. v. Incashola, 1998 MT 184, 289 M 399, 961 P2d 745, 55 St. Rep. 742 (1998), followed in St. v. Frickey, 2006 MT 122, 332 M 255, 136 P3d 558 (2006), and distinguished in St. v. Pol, 2008 MT 352, 346 M 322, 195 P3d 807 (2008), in which broad general objections did not preserve the issue for appeal.

Discrepancy Between Time of Report and Time Recorded on Intoxilyzer: The arresting officer adjusted the time recorded on an Intoxilyzer 5000 printout to correspond to the highway patrol time that was used when documenting defendant's arrest and processing. The corrected time, indicating a 17-minute observation period prior to administration of the test, was sufficiently explained and properly accepted as competent evidence of compliance with ARM 23.4.212, which requires a 15-minute observation period. St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68, 55 St. Rep. 389 (1998).

When Right to Obtain Independent Blood Test Unreasonably Impeded — No Due Process Violation — Swanson Rule Clarified: One accused of a crime involving intoxication is entitled to obtain an independent blood test only when: (1) the defendant has timely claimed the right to an independent blood test; and (2) a law enforcement officer has unreasonably impeded the defendant's right to obtain an independent blood test. Both criteria must be satisfied in order to support an allegation of violation of a defendant's due process rights. The rule does not apply either if the defendant fails to timely request the independent blood test or if the independent blood test is unavailable through no unreasonable acts of law enforcement. In the present case, Sidmore's due process rights were not violated because the unavailability of an independent blood test was not caused by an unreasonable act of law enforcement but rather by Sidmore's own failure to act after requesting and being given the opportunity to arrange an independent blood test. St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558, 54 St. Rep. 1381 (1997), clarifying St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155 (1986), and distinguishing St. v. Strand, 286 M 122, 951 P2d 552, 54 St. Rep. 1333 (1997). See also St. v. Minkoff, 2002 MT 29, 308 M 248, 42 P3d 223 (2002), St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 M 221, 136 P3d 543 (2006), and St. v. Wrzesinski, 2006 MT 263, 334 M 157, 145 P3d 985 (2006).

Breathalyzer Tested Twelve Minutes After Mandated Seven-Day Period Between Tests — Breath Test Admissible: ARM 23.4.213 requires Breathalyzers to be tested and certified for accuracy every 7 days. The Breathalyzer used on the defendant on August 23 had been tested that day at 8:59 a.m. and on August 16 at 8:47 a.m., a time difference of 7 days and 12 minutes. Section 1-1-305 provides that fractions of a day are disregarded in computations that include more than a day and involve no questions of priority. For most purposes, the law regards a day as an indivisible unit. Neither the administrative rule nor other law supported defendant's argument that the test results were inadmissible because more than 7 days had passed between the two tests. St. v. Fitzgerald, 283 M 162, 940 P2d 108, 54 St. Rep. 545 (1997).

Compliance With Administrative Rules of Montana — Criminal Actions: Prior to administering the Intoxilyzer 5000 test to the defendant, the calibration checks read 0.060 and 0.062 for a simulator solution that was supposed to have had a known alcohol concentration of 0.10. The Administrative Rules of Montana require a calibration check to fall within a plus or minus one-tenth range of the known alcohol concentration of the reference solution to guarantee the instrument's accuracy prior to administering the test. The Supreme Court held that the evidence showed that the low calibration readings were not indicative of a faulty instrument but only of a gradually diminished alcohol content in the simulator solution. The court further held that the District Court did not err in holding that the test was administered in substantial compliance with the Administrative Rules of Montana. O'Brian v. St., 236 M 227, 770 P2d 507, 46 St. Rep. 316 (1989), followed in St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Admissibility of "HGN" Test: The Supreme Court adopted the position of several out-of-state courts in holding that results of the horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test are admissible in Montana as one method of indicating impairment. St. v. Clark, 234 M 222, 762 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 1859 (1988).

Retroactive Application of Swanson Rule: Following arrest on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, defendant refused to take a breath test requested by the arresting officer and demanded to make a telephone call to an attorney and to obtain a blood test. Police told defendant that if he did not take the breath test, neither the telephone call nor the blood test would be permitted. Police then placed defendant in a holding cell, denying him the call and blood test for 10 hours. Upon conviction, defendant appealed, alleging police refusal denied him due process of law. Applying the Swanson rule, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), which established the right to obtain an independent blood test when accused of crime involving intoxication, the court reversed the conviction, ruling that Swanson should be retroactively applied. The 10-hour delay constituted an interference with defendant's right to obtain exculpatory evidence, which is the type of due process denial against which Swanson was designed to protect. St. v. Peterson, 227 M 418, 739 P2d 958, 44 St. Rep. 1198 (1987).

Careless Handling of Blood Sample — Deprivation of Due Process and Fair Trial: Defendant was taken to a hospital where a blood sample was drawn; then he was transported back to the Sheriff's office where he was booked and his personal property, including the blood sample, was taken from him. The blood sample was left on the counter in the dispatch room rather than being refrigerated and was not given to defendant upon his release. The Supreme Court held that once the sample was taken from defendant, the authorities had a duty to properly care for it. Since this duty was not performed, the careless handling of the sample deprived defendant of his due process right to gather possible exculpatory evidence, precluding a fair trial. St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), distinguished in St. v. Heth, 230 M 268, 750 P2d 103, 45 St. Rep. 194 (1988).

Right to Independent Blood Test in Crime Involving Intoxication: The state interpreted 61-8-405 to mean that the right to an independent blood test arises only after an accused takes a test designated by the arresting officer. The Supreme Court, citing an Arizona Appellate Court interpretation of an identical statute, found that such an interpretation would result in an unconstitutional restraint on the right of a criminal accused to attempt to obtain independent evidence of his innocence and deprive him of due process of law (Smith v. Cada, 562 P2d 390 (Ariz. App. 1977)). Therefore, it was held that a person accused of a crime involving intoxication has a right to obtain an independent blood test to establish his sobriety regardless of whether he submits to a police designated test under 61-8-402. St. v. Swanson, 222 M 357, 722 P2d 1155, 43 St. Rep. 1329 (1986), distinguished in Walker v. St., 229 M 331, 746 P2d 624, 44 St. Rep. 2008 (1987), on grounds that defendant Walker was subject to civil penalty under 61-8-402, not criminal penalty under this section.

Foundation Required for Admissibility of Blood Test Results: Defendant on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs in violation of 61-8-401 is entitled to the procedural safeguards of the Administrative Rules of Montana. To admit evidence of blood alcohol content and a test report, the state must lay a foundation pursuant to 61-8-404 which incorporates ARM 23.3.931. The laboratory analysis must be done in a laboratory qualified under the rules of the Department of Justice. The report must be prepared in accordance with the rules of the Department. If a blood sample is taken, the person withdrawing the blood must be demonstrably qualified to do so. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985), cited in St. v. Decker, 251 M 339, 828 P2d 1342, 48 St. Rep. 1046 (1991).

Compliance With Administrative Rules: Although a criminal defendant is entitled to the safeguards of an administrative rule setting out blood testing procedures and implementing the statute providing for blood alcohol tests of drivers arrested for driving while under the influence before the presumption of being under the influence can arise from a certain blood alcohol level, it does not follow that the same procedural safeguards must be applied when blood test results are used in a civil proceeding, especially when the statutory presumption used in criminal cases is not relied upon. Therefore, where testimony in civil action established that witnesses for parties introducing test results followed good practice in the testing field, it was not error to fail, on a foundation for admitting test results, to prove compliance with the administrative rule. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Case Notes

Admissibility of Intoxilyzer Certification Documents — District Court to Determine Adequate Foundation Regardless of Hearsay Rules — White Overruled: The defendant was charged with felony DUI after a breath test revealed his blood alcohol content exceeded the legal limit. At trial, in the course of the charging police officer's testimony, the state offered into evidence two field certification documents for the Intoxilyzer 8000. The defendant objected to the documents, claiming that because the officer was not the author or custodian of the documents, they were inadmissible hearsay under Rule 803(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The District Court admitted the documents and the defendant appealed his subsequent conviction. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the admissibility of certification documents is also subject to Rule 104(a), M.R.Ev., (Title 26, ch. 10). This rule allows a court to determine whether there is an adequate foundation for a document without regard to whether it is hearsay. In so ruling, the Supreme Court overruled St. v. White, 2009 MT 26, 349 Mont. 109, 201 P.3d 808, to the extent it is inconsistent with St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 Mont. 263, 991 P.2d 461. St. v. Jenkins, 2011 MT 287, 362 Mont. 481, 265 P.3d 643.

No Reason to View With Distrust Failure of Officer to Record Events Creating Particularized Suspicion for Traffic Stop: An officer observed Deines drive through two red lights without stopping, but the officer failed to record either act. Deines was subsequently stopped for a traffic violation and was then arrested for DUI as a result of the traffic stop. Following conviction, Deines appealed on grounds that because the officer failed to record the events that created a particularized suspicion for the traffic stop, the officer's testimony should be viewed with distrust in the judicial assessment of particularized suspicion. The Supreme Court noted a line of cases that "view with distrust" the failure of law enforcement officers to preserve a record of particular evidentiary matters, but the court declined to extend those cases to the circumstances of this case. The prior cases were related primarily to officers gathering evidence in the controlled environment of a police station, and the court recognized that circumstances in the field may preclude the creation of a tangible record. Additionally, the court noted the passage of HB 534 (Ch. 214, L. 2009), which requires the electronic recording of custodial interrogations in most felony cases and essentially renders the "view with distrust" line of cases moot, so future application of the view with distrust precedent is doubtful. Therefore, there is no reason to view with distrust the failure of a police officer to record events creating particularized suspicion for a traffic stop. St. v. Deines, 2009 MT 179, 351 M 1, 208 P3d 857 (2009).

Waiver of Right to Raise Issue of Unreasonable Delay — Failure to Move Court for Ruling at or Before Omnibus Hearing: Approximately 4 hours after Kummerfeldt was involved in a single-vehicle accident, his blood was drawn for a BAC test, which produced a 0.14% result. At trial, he moved for a judgment of acquittal on the DUI per se charge, based on the state's failure to prove his BAC result was 0.08 or greater at the time he was driving and because under St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), 4 hours was an unreasonable delay between the driving and the drawing of blood. However, not only did Kummerfeldt fail to raise this objection at the omnibus hearing, he also entered into a pretrial stipulation as to the admissibility of the BAC report. Therefore, Kummerfeldt waived his arguments. St. v. Kummerfeldt, 2008 MT 333, 346 M 187, 194 P3d 662 (2008).

Retrograde Extrapolation of Blood Alcohol Content Not Necessary to Prove Person's Blood Alcohol at Time Person Was Driving: Retrograde extrapolation, a technique through which experts estimate alcohol concentration at some earlier time based on test results at some later time, is not necessary evidence to prove what a person's blood alcohol was at the time that the person was driving. Here, the results of an Intoxilyzer breath test, coupled with defendant's bloodshot and glassy eyes, the smell of alcohol when defendant was stopped, defendant's admission that he had consumed alcohol, and defendant's failure of field sobriety tests, were sufficient to sustain a conviction of DUI per se. St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006), following St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), and followed in St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Breath Test Administered Within Reasonable Time After Alleged DUI Consistent With Per Se Intoxication Statute: McGowan contended that the DUI per se statute required proof that a driver's alcohol concentration was above 0.08 while driving. The Supreme Court disagreed. A preliminary alcohol screening test administered in the field does not satisfy a person's obligation to submit to a breath test pursuant to 61-8-409(2). Reading this section to require law enforcement officers to determine a person's alcohol content while driving would lead to an absurd result because it is impossible to administer a test while a person is driving. Therefore, interpreting the DUI per se statute to allow for the admissibility of breath tests administered within a reasonable time after an alleged act of driving under the influence represents a reasonable interpretation of statutory language, comports with legislative intent, and avoids an absurd result. In the present case, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, the state presented the jury with sufficient evidence to determine that McGowan committed the offense of driving with an alcohol concentration above 0.08 in violation of 61-8-406, and McGowan's conviction was affirmed. St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), followed in St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006).

Motion to Suppress Intoxilyzer Results Based on Alleged Failure to Observe Defendant for Proper Period Prior to Test Properly Denied: Flaherty contended that the results of an Intoxilyzer test should have been disallowed because he was not under observation for the 15-minute period prior to testing as required by the operational checklist referenced in ARM 23.4.212 and by St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68 (1998). The District Court concluded that the entire time from the stop until Flaherty took the breath test was well in excess of 15 minutes and that Flaherty was under direct observation either by an officer or by video surveillance the entire time, so Flaherty's motion to suppress was denied. The Supreme Court noted that the operational checklist was changed since Fenton and that the checklist currently requires no oral ingestion of any material rather than a 15-minute observation period. It was undisputed that Flaherty did not ingest anything during the 15 minutes prior to testing. Thus, although the District Court based its conclusion on the premise that a 15-minute observation was required, the court's conclusion was nevertheless correct in light of the current requirement that a suspect not ingest any material, so denial of the motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Flaherty, 2005 MT 122, 327 M 168, 112 P3d 1033 (2005). See also Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Similarity of Montana and California DUI Convictions Warranting Felony DUI Conviction in Montana: Polaski claimed that his felony fifth offense DUI charge in Montana was erroneous because it was based on four prior convictions in California. However, under 61-8-734, the grounds for a felony DUI charge are based on final convictions in Montana or violations of a similar statute or regulation in another state, and if the offense is the offender's fourth or subsequent offense, all previous convictions must be used. The Supreme Court compared Montana and California DUI statutes and determined that both states' laws similarly prohibited driving under the influence and that Polaski could have been convicted under the laws of either state. All of Polaski's prior convictions remained on his record regardless of the years that they were acquired and were therefore properly used for enhanced sentencing purposes. The felony DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Polaski, 2005 MT 13, 325 M 351, 106 P3d 538 (2005). See also St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002), and St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Failure to Argue Prejudicial Effect of Malfunctioning Breathalyzer Printer — No Error in Denial of Motion to Suppress: When Otto was tested with a Breathalyzer, the machine registered a 0.159 blood alcohol content but failed to print a card with the test results. Otto moved for dismissal of the Breathalyzer results because a complete test, including the printed results, was not accomplished. The dismissal motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Otto failed to argue prejudice based on the admission of the test results. Given ample additional evidence of Otto's intoxicated condition, failure to suppress the Breathalyzer results did not constitute reversible error. St. v. Otto, 2004 MT 338, 324 M 217, 102 P3d 522 (2004).

Fifteen-Minute Period of Direct Observation No Longer Part of Checklist for Administration of Intoxilyzer 5000 Blood Alcohol Test: In St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68 (1998), it was noted that ARM 23.4.212 requires a 15-minute observation period prior to administration of an Intoxilyzer 5000 blood alcohol test. Lyons contended that that test was not properly administered in this case because Lyons used the bathroom during the 15 minutes prior to the test and was not under the officer's observation during the entire time. However, the administrative rule was revised after Fenton and now requires that the test administrator ensure that: (1) there was no oral ingestion of any material in the 15 minutes prior to testing; (2) the subject was instructed to deliver a proper sample; (3) the subject was observed during the sample delivery; and (4) nothing occurred that could affect the results. Direct line-of-sight observation of the subject for 15 minutes prior to testing is not required. The officer did follow the applicable checklist in this case, so Lyons' motion to suppress the test results was properly dismissed. Missoula v. Lyons, 2004 MT 255, 323 M 67, 97 P3d 1120 (2004).

Use of Prior DUI Convictions in Washington to Enhance Montana DUI to Felony: The District Court used Hall's three prior DUI convictions in Washington to enhance Hall's Montana conviction to a felony. Hall appealed on grounds that Montana and Washington laws were too dissimilar to allow enhancement of Hall's Montana DUI. The Supreme Court examined both states' statutes and concluded that a person convicted of violating the Washington law committed an offense for which each subsection of the Washington statute had an analogous statute in Montana. The laws were held to be sufficiently similar to allow felony enhancement in this case, and Hall's fourth offense Montana conviction was affirmed. St. v. Hall, 2004 MT 106, 321 M 78, 88 P3d 1273 (2004).

Carport Not Considered Part of Home — Privacy Standard Inapplicable to DUI Search of Condominium Carport: Large was arrested for misdemeanor DUI while seated in her running car that was parked in the carport outside her condominium. Large moved to suppress the evidence because she was arrested at night at her home for a misdemeanor committed elsewhere, in violation of 46-6-105. She also contended that the arrest was in violation of her right to privacy. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a carport may be structurally contiguous with the rest of a private house or dwelling, presence in a carport does not equate to presence in the home, and although lot lines do convey certain concrete ownership rights, the right to be free from misdemeanor arrest at night is reserved for the home, not coterminous property appurtenant to the home. Further, under 61-8-101, ways of the state open to the public include parking areas and other public or private places adapted for public travel that are in common use by the public. Large could not be considered to be in her home while sitting in a car parked in the common-area parking lot in her condominium complex where officers could see what was readily visible to any visitor without being overly intrusive. Thus, Large had no reasonable expectation of privacy that prohibited her arrest in her own carport, nor did a violation of 46-6-105 occur. Whitefish v. Large, 2003 MT 322, 318 M 310, 80 P3d 427 (2003). See also St. v. Hubbel, 286 M 200, 951 P2d 971 (1997).

Driving While Ability Impaired in Colorado Not Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — Felony DUI Sentence Reversed — Montanye Reversed: The District Court found that Colorado law was substantially similar to Montana's DUI statute, and based on McNally's four prior DWAI convictions in Colorado, the court sentenced McNally for felony DUI. McNally appealed on grounds that the Colorado convictions did not constitute previous convictions under a similar statute for purposes of determining the number of prior DUI convictions under Montana law. The Supreme Court examined Colorado law and agreed with McNally. Colorado law allows a person to be convicted for DUI if the person's ability is impaired to the slightest degree, which is a lower standard than Montana law. Therefore, McNally's prior Colorado convictions did not qualify as convictions for purposes of enhancing McNally's conviction to a felony, and McNally's felony conviction was reversed. St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002), following Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224 (1986), and overruling Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234 (1993). However, see St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110, ruling that Montana and Idaho DUI statutes were sufficiently similar to uphold felony sentence.

What Form of Compliance of Instrument Used in Breath Test Required as Foundation for Breath Test Results: ARM 23.4.214 requires that all breath analysis equipment be sent to the state Forensic Sciences Division annually for laboratory certification. A person charged with an alcohol-related offense is entitled to the procedural safeguards contained in the administrative rule, so in order for the results of a defendant's breath test to be admissible, the state must lay a proper foundation by establishing that the instrument complied with ARM 23.4.214. During pretrial discovery, Delaney requested documentation that the instrument used to test his breath had been certified, and the state provided a copy of the laboratory certification form. At trial, Delaney moved to dismiss the results of the breath test, contending that the form was inadmissible hearsay that could not be used to lay the requisite foundation, and also maintained that failure to call the custodian of the annual certification records violated Delaney's right to confront witnesses. The state contended that it was not required to have the form admitted in order to lay a foundation for admissibility and that, consequently, it did not matter that the document was hearsay, but rather that all that was necessary was to establish to the satisfaction of the court that the certification had been performed. The District Court sided with the state and admitted the breath test results. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the determination of whether adequate foundation exists is within the discretion of the District Court and that that determination is made pursuant to Rule 104(a), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), which authorizes the examination of any proffered evidence, regardless of its admissibility, in determining the admissibility of challenged evidence. Under the identical federal Rule of Evidence, federal courts have found that the plain language of the rule extends to consideration of hearsay and other evidence normally inadmissible at trial. (See Bourjaily v. U.S., 483 US 171, 97 L Ed 2d 144, 107 S Ct 1775 (1987), and its progeny.) Thus, the District Court was allowed to consider the certification form in determining whether an adequate foundation existed without regard to whether the form itself was hearsay, and consequently, the state was not required to call the records custodian to testify. St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 M 263, 991 P2d 461, 56 St. Rep. 1267 (1999), distinguishing St. v. Woods, 272 M 220, 900 P2d 320, 52 St. Rep. 762 (1995), and St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998), and followed in St. v. White, 2009 MT 26, 349 M 109, 201 P3d 808 (2009), with regard to necessity of proper foundation for admission of results of alcohol concentration breath analysis. White was overruled, to the extent it is inconsistent with Delaney, in St. v. Jenkins, 2011 MT 287, 362 Mont. 481, 265 P.3d 643. See also St. v. Johnston, 2011 MT 184, 361 Mont. 301, 258 P.3d 417 (holding that a breath analysis instrument must be inspected and calibrated at least every 31 days pursuant to ARM 23.4.213, not every 7 days, or its results may be suppressed).

Discrepancy Between Time of Report and Time Recorded on Intoxilyzer: The arresting officer adjusted the time recorded on an Intoxilyzer 5000 printout to correspond to the highway patrol time that was used when documenting defendant's arrest and processing. The corrected time, indicating a 17-minute observation period prior to administration of the test, was sufficiently explained and properly accepted as competent evidence of compliance with ARM 23.4.212, which requires a 15-minute observation period. St. v. Fenton, 1998 MT 99, 288 M 415, 958 P2d 68, 55 St. Rep. 389 (1998).

Expired Manufacturer's Warranty on Breath Test Solution Used to Test Defendant: That the manufacturer's warranty on a solution used for a breath test had expired 10 months before the solution was used in testing defendant did not make the test results inadmissible. The administrative rules regulating testing clearly provide that the approval of the solution is by the Department of Justice's Division of Forensic Sciences, not by the manufacturer, and the solution had been approved by the Division as required by the rules. St. v. Woods, 285 M 124, 947 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 1074 (1997).

Failure to Use Different Test Solution Than That Used in Prior Test in Testing Breathalyzer That Failed Prior Certification Test: Administrative rules require the state to use a fresh ethyl alcohol testing solution in retesting and certifying a Breathalyzer when the results of a prior test of the Breathalyzer are outside the range specified by the rules. The state did not do so and used the same solution as that used in the prior test. However, DUI defendant was not prejudiced thereby because the evidence showed that the problem was clearly with the Breathalyzer, not the solution. St. v. Woods, 285 M 124, 947 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 1074 (1997).

Error in Admitting Breath Test Evidence — Dismissal of Charge: When the state conceded that it did not lay a proper foundation for the admission of blood alcohol concentration test results and no evidence was introduced that the testing instrument had been properly and timely calibrated, the District Court abused its discretion in admitting the breath test evidence, necessitating dismissal of the charge for failure of proof. St. v. Woods, 272 M 220, 900 P2d 320, 52 St. Rep. 762 (1995), distinguished in St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 M 263, 991 P2d 461, 56 St. Rep. 1267 (1999).

Compliance With Administrative Rules of Montana — Criminal Actions: Prior to administering the Intoxilyzer 5000 test to the defendant, the calibration checks read 0.060 and 0.062 for a simulator solution that was supposed to have had a known alcohol concentration of 0.10. The Administrative Rules of Montana require a calibration check to fall within a plus or minus one-tenth range of the known alcohol concentration of the reference solution to guarantee the instrument's accuracy prior to administering the test. The Supreme Court held that the evidence showed that the low calibration readings were not indicative of a faulty instrument but only of a gradually diminished alcohol content in the simulator solution. The court further held that the District Court did not err in holding that the test was administered in substantial compliance with the Administrative Rules of Montana. O'Brian v. St., 236 M 227, 770 P2d 507, 46 St. Rep. 316 (1989), followed in St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Incorrect Statutory Reference — Charge Not Invalid: A complaint which used the statutory language of 61-8-401 to describe the offense but which listed a citation to 61-8-406 was not made defective by the incorrect reference since the complaint adequately described and gave notice of the offense. The District Court did not err in granting a motion to amend the complaint to correct the statutory reference. St. v. Handy, 221 M 365, 719 P2d 766, 43 St. Rep. 897 (1986).

Motion to Suppress Results of Breathalyzer Test Denied — Affirmed on Appeal — No Transcript Forwarded: Charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, defendant moved to suppress results of Breathalyzer test. The Justice of the Peace denied the motion. In a bench trial the Justice Court found defendant guilty. On appeal to the District Court, defendant renewed his suppression motion on a set of stipulated facts. Motion was denied and defendant was convicted by a jury of violating 61-8-406, but was acquitted of charges under 61-8-401. On appeal to the Supreme Court, defendant stated that no trial transcript was being forwarded since the appeal of the denial of the suppression motion could be reviewed upon the face of the stipulated facts. The state included excerpts of the trial transcript that buttressed the lower court's decision on the suppression motion. The Supreme Court approved the state's approach since the suppression motion denial was not final and could be reversed at any time. St. v. Sharp, 217 M 40, 702 P2d 959, 42 St. Rep. 1009 (1985).

City Attorney — No Authority to Prosecute Third DUI or Per Se Violations Without Ordinance: A city attorney has no authority to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under 61-8-401 and 61-8-406. However, a city may adopt an ordinance pursuant to 61-8-401(5) that would empower the city attorney to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under such a city ordinance. 42 A.G. Case Notes

Video of Defendant Taking Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Inadmissible — Expert Testimony Required: After being convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol, the defendant claimed on appeal that the District Court abused its discretion by admitting a police video that showed the defendant participating in a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST) and then being placed under arrest. The sound from the video was muted and the results of the PAST were not presented to the jury. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, reasoning that the video showing administration of the PAST, followed by an arrest, raised a compelling inference that the defendant was over the legal blood alcohol limit. Consequently, the Supreme Court determined that the video was impermissibly used as substantive evidence of intoxication without the state satisfying the requirement of St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 Mont. 276, 119 P.3d 1194, and Rule 702, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), to call an expert witness to testify regarding the reliability and accuracy of the PAST. St. v. Lozon, 2012 MT 303, 367 Mont. 424, 291 P.3d 1135.

Motion to Suppress Breath Test Results Improperly Granted — 31-Day Field Inspection and Calibration Applies — District Court Reversed: A defendant charged with his fourth DUI filed a motion to suppress the results of his breath test on the grounds that the machine had not been inspected and calibrated within the week prior to its use as, he alleged, is required by St. v. Gieser, 2011 MT 2, 359 Mont. 95, 248 P.3d 300. The District Court granted the motion, ignoring an Administrative Rule providing that breath analysis instruments must be inspected and calibrated at least every 31 days instead of every 7 days. The state appealed and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, ruling that the language relied upon by both the defendant and the District Court was dicta and that the Administrative Rule applied. Therefore, the District Court erred in granting the motion to suppress the results of the breath test. St. v. Johnston, 2011 MT 184, 361 Mont. 301, 258 P.3d 417.

Retrograde Extrapolation of Blood Alcohol Content Not Necessary to Prove Person's Blood Alcohol at Time Person Was Driving: Retrograde extrapolation, a technique through which experts estimate alcohol concentration at some earlier time based on test results at some later time, is not necessary evidence to prove what a person's blood alcohol was at the time that the person was driving. Here, the results of an Intoxilyzer breath test, coupled with defendant's bloodshot and glassy eyes, the smell of alcohol when defendant was stopped, defendant's admission that he had consumed alcohol, and defendant's failure of field sobriety tests, were sufficient to sustain a conviction of DUI per se. St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006), following St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), and followed in St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Breath Test Administered Within Reasonable Time After Alleged DUI Consistent With Per Se Intoxication Statute: McGowan contended that the DUI per se statute required proof that a driver's alcohol concentration was above 0.08 while driving. The Supreme Court disagreed. A preliminary alcohol screening test administered in the field does not satisfy a person's obligation to submit to a breath test pursuant to subsection (2) of this section. Reading 61-8-406 to require law enforcement officers to determine a person's alcohol content while driving would lead to an absurd result because it is impossible to administer a test while a person is driving. Therefore, interpreting the DUI per se statute to allow for the admissibility of breath tests administered within a reasonable time after an alleged act of driving under the influence represents a reasonable interpretation of statutory language, comports with legislative intent, and avoids an absurd result. In the present case, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, the state presented the jury with sufficient evidence to determine that McGowan committed the offense of driving with an alcohol concentration above 0.08 in violation of 61-8-406, and McGowan's conviction was affirmed. St. v. McGowan, 2006 MT 163, 332 M 490, 139 P3d 841 (2006), followed in St. v. Weitzel, 2006 MT 167, 332 M 523, 140 P3d 1062 (2006).

Particularized Suspicion, Not Probable Cause, Required to Request Breath Sample for Preliminary Analysis: Toth was arrested for DUI but contended that evidence obtained following a request for a preliminary breath test should be suppressed because the officer needed probable cause to request the sample. The Supreme Court held that the probable cause standard refers to the prerequisite for an arrest and does not require that officers establish probable cause prior to initiating preliminary breath test analysis. Rather, an officer needs only a particularized suspicion to request a breath sample for preliminary breath test analysis. St. v. Toth, 2003 MT 208, 317 M 55, 75 P3d 323 (2003), distinguishing Bush v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 270, 291 M 359, 968 P2d 716 (1998).

Officer's Informing Suspect of Consequences of Refusing Breath Test When Asking Suspect a Second Time to Submit to Test Cures Failure to Inform Suspect of Consequences of Refusing to Take Test When Suspect First Asked to Submit: Officer McLean failed to inform McKenzie of the consequences of refusing a breath test when he asked McKenzie to submit to the test. The defendant admitted that when the officer asked him a second time to submit to the test, he was informed of the consequences of refusing to submit. Subsequently, at the police station, Officer McLean erroneously informed the defendant that if he also refused to submit to a blood test, his license would be suspended for an additional 6 months along with the 6-month suspension for refusing the breath test. McKenzie's license was suspended for 6 months, and he appealed the denial of his petition for reinstatement. The Supreme Court held that the first refusal was insufficient to support the license suspension because the defendant was not informed of the consequences of refusal but that the second refusal would support the suspension because the defendant was informed of the consequences of refusing the test. The Supreme Court stated that it would not address the merits of McKenzie's claim that Officer McLean stated a greater penalty for refusing both tests than the law allowed in an attempt to coerce the defendant into submitting to a blood test because the refusal to submit to the breath test was sufficient in itself to support the 6-month license suspension. In re Driver's License Suspension of McKenzie, 2001 MT 25, 304 M 153, 19 P3d 221 (2001).

Confusion About Need for BAC Test Once PAST Taken — Refusal to Extend Confusion Doctrine: Williams was stopped by a Deputy Sheriff for driving erratically and consented to a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST), which she failed. The Deputy Sheriff then arrested her and took her to the Eureka police station. There, Williams was read the implied consent advisory form informing her that if she did not submit to a blood alcohol concentration (BAC) test, her driver's license would be confiscated. Williams refused to submit to a BAC test, and the confiscation of her license was upheld by the District Court. Before the Supreme Court, Williams claimed that an extension of the "confusion doctrine" should be held to apply to her case. The Supreme Court held that the confusion doctrine, discussed by the Supreme Court in Blomeyer v. St., 264 M 414, 871 P2d 1338 (1994), and Gentry v. Dept. of Justice, 282 M 491, 938 P2d 693 (1997), and under which refusal to submit to the BAC may be excused if a driver is given a Miranda warning first and is therefore confused as to whether the driver has a right to an attorney before submitting to the BAC, would not be extended to a situation such as Williams's, in which it was claimed that confusion existed as to the necessity for the BAC if the PAST has already been administered. Williams v. St., 1999 MT 5, 293 M 36, 973 P2d 218, 56 St. Rep. 20 (1999).

Constitutionality of Implied Consent Statutes — General Versus Specific Construction: Section 61-8-403 is a general statute concerning appeals of suspensions and revocations of driver's licenses under the implied consent laws, while this section is the specific statute on preliminary alcohol screening tests (PAST), including issues that may be discussed at hearings on license suspension or revocation based upon refusal to submit to a PAST. A specific statute prevails over a general statute. Appellant's contention of conflict among Montana's implied consent statutes was not established because the various provisions are clear and specific and give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that the contemplated conduct is forbidden. Smith v. St., 1998 MT 94, 288 M 383, 958 P2d 677, 55 St. Rep. 375 (1998).

Admissibility of Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Results for Probable Cause Purposes Only — Clarification and Effect of Orders Suppressing Evidence — Grant of Motion to Exclude Inadmissible Evidence Not Considered Order Suppressing Evidence: The state sought to have the results of a preliminary alcohol screening test admitted into evidence in a DUI case. The City Court denied the motion, and the state immediately appealed to District Court, contending that in denying the motion, the City Court had suppressed evidence and that the statutory 6-month limit on trial of misdemeanors in 46-13-401 was thus exhausted. The Supreme Court noted that the results of a preliminary alcohol screening test pursuant to this section are not substantive evidence of the amount of alcohol present in a person's body but instead are an estimate of alcohol concentration only for the purpose of establishing probable cause to believe that a person is under the influence of alcohol prior to making an arrest. An order that suppresses evidence is an order that excludes evidence on the grounds that the evidence was illegally obtained and does not include a pretrial order that excludes evidence based on rules of evidence, such as relevancy, probative value, or statutory inadmissibility. Thus, the City Court order excluding preliminary alcohol screening test results was not an order suppressing evidence but rather an order determining that the results were not substantive evidence at all; therefore, there was no statutory basis under 46-20-103(2)(e) for appeal to District Court. Because City Court jurisdiction was not exhausted by some action authorizing appeal to the District Court, 46-13-401(2) was not satisfied and defendant, who made no move to postpone, was entitled to dismissal of the DUI charge with prejudice pursuant to 46-13-401(2) on grounds that he had not received a timely trial. St. v. Strizich, 286 M 1, 952 P2d 1365, 54 St. Rep. 1241 (1997), following St. v. Carney, 219 M 412, 714 P2d 532 (1986), and St. v. Bullock, 272 M 361, 901 P2d 61 (1995), overruling inconsistent holdings in St. v. T.W., 220 M 280, 715 P2d 428 (1986), and St. v. Yarns, 252 M 45, 826 P2d 543 (1992), and followed, with regard to limited admissibility of preliminary breath test evidence, in St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003). See also St. v. Crawford, 2003 MT 118, 315 M 480, 68 P3d 848 (2003), and St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 M 173, 103 P3d 503 (2004).

Statute Prohibiting Operation of Vehicle by Person Under Twenty-One Years of Age With Alcohol Concentration of 0.02 or More Not Violative of Right to Equal Protection — Sandstrom Not Contravened: Twenty-year-old Luchau was convicted in Justice's Court of a violation of this section. On appeal to the District Court, Luchau contended that this section was an unconstitutional violation of his right to equal protection, creating a conclusive presumption of guilt. Unlike 61-8-401, which requires the state to prove diminished ability as an element of the crime, this section imposes a strict liability for operation of a vehicle by a person under 21 years of age with an alcohol concentration of 0.02 or more, regardless of whether the accused's ability to drive safely is diminished. Although an alcohol concentration of 0.02 is an element of the crime, nothing in this section creates a factual presumption with respect to when such a concentration is present. Rather, the defendant's alcohol concentration is an element that the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt, so this section contains no presumption relating to an element of the offense. The Supreme Court found that this section does not run afoul of Sandstrom v. Mont., 442 US 510, 61 L Ed 2d 39, 99 S Ct 2450 (1979), because the burden-shifting that gives rise to the concern in Sandstrom becomes relevant only when the state requires the accused to prove that which, by virtue of the statutory definition of the crime, the prosecution is required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt. Further, there is no equal protection violation because persons targeted by the statute are legally forbidden to consume alcohol, which, coupled with the fact that there is a high correlation of injury and death between underage drinking and driving, forms more than an adequate rational basis for treating underage drivers differently from adult drivers. St. v. Luchau, 1999 MT 336, 297 M 415, 992 P2d 840, 56 St. Rep. 1340 (1999).

WHEREAS, despite the progress that has been made in the battle against drunken driving, there remain on Montana's roads and highways a small group of hard-core drinkers who regularly drink to high levels of intoxication (over 0.15%) and still drive; and

WHEREAS, on a weekend night, these hard-core drunk drivers make up only 1% of all drivers, yet account for almost half of the driving fatalities; and

WHEREAS, approximately 80% of all drunk drivers killed on the nation's highways in 1995 had a blood alcohol concentration of 0.15% or higher, and to get to that level, a 160-pound man would have to consume more than six drinks in 1 hour; and

WHEREAS, approximately 50% of all fatally injured drunk drivers in 1995 had a blood alcohol concentration of 0.20% or higher, more than twice the legal limit in Montana; and

WHEREAS, these hard-core drinkers continue to drive even after steps have been taken, including license suspensions, fines, and incarceration, to remove them from the road; and

WHEREAS, proven technological approaches, such as court-ordered ignition interlocks, exist for limiting the opportunity of hard-core drinkers to drink and drive; and

WHEREAS, ignition interlock devices prevent a car from starting if the driver fails a car-mounted Breathalyzer test, and ignition interlock devices are a reliable, fair, and effective means of reducing repeat driving under the influence (DUI) offenses; and

WHEREAS, reduction of repeat DUI offenses will, over time, reduce one of the growing pressures for increased incarceration expenses impacting our local and state corrections systems; and

WHEREAS, the incidence of recidivism is lower among offenders with ignition interlock devices in their vehicles; and

WHEREAS, the device serves as a constant reminder to a driver of the driver's drinking problem and the difficulties that have arisen from it; and

WHEREAS, having an ignition interlock device installed forces a driver to develop and practice strategies to avoid drinking and driving; and

WHEREAS, the device allows an offender to re-enter the driver licensing system legally, sober, and with insurance; and

WHEREAS, ignition interlock devices allow more offenders the opportunity to maintain employment; and

WHEREAS, regular maintenance of the ignition interlock device facilitates the monitoring of offenders and allows for periodic checks on attempts to circumvent the device; and 2005 Amendment: Chapter 233 inserted (5) providing that, with certain exceptions, persons in wheelchairs are considered to be pedestrians for purposes of traffic regulations. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 374 inserted (1) requiring pedestrians to obey traffic control devices; in (2) after "traffic control signals" inserted "and pedestrian control signals", after "61-8-207" deleted "unless required by local ordinance to comply strictly with such signals, but", and inserted "and 61-8-208"; in (4) after "authorities" deleted "are hereby empowered by ordinance to require that pedestrians shall strictly comply with the directions of any official traffic control signal and", after "roadway" deleted "in a business district or any designated highways" and inserted "within a local government's jurisdiction", before "crosswalk" inserted "marked", and after "crosswalk" inserted "or in an unmarked crosswalk at an intersection"; and made minor changes in style. Case Notes

Street Crossing Accident — Responsibilities of Parties: Plaintiff was crossing the street at the corner during the night. When he reached the middle of the street he observed an automobile approaching from about 50 feet distant at a rate of 30 miles an hour. The speed limit was 15 miles an hour. Plaintiff hastened towards the opposite corner but was struck by defendant's automobile about 5 feet from the curb. Plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Pedestrians and automobilists have equal rights in the use of streets or highways, in the exercise of which pedestrians are required to use ordinary care for their own safety. The driver must operate his automobile in a careful, prudent manner, and at a rate of speed no greater than is reasonable and proper under existing traffic and road conditions and the requirements of city ordinances. McKeon v. Kilduff, 85 M 562, 281 P 345 (1929).

61-8-502. Pedestrians' right-of-way in crosswalk — school children.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 374 throughout section substituted reference to operator or operation of vehicle for reference to driver or driver of vehicle; in (3) before "vehicle" deleted "motor", in two places substituted "roadway" for "street or highway", in three places substituted references to school crossing guard or crossing guard for references to school safety patrol members, and near end after "official" substituted "sign" for "signal"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 484 at beginning of (1)(a) inserted exception clause and near middle of first sentence substituted "within a marked crosswalk or within an unmarked crosswalk at an intersection" for "within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is upon the half of the roadway upon which the vehicle is traveling or when the pedestrian is approaching so closely from the opposite half of the roadway as to be in danger"; inserted (1)(b) allowing the driver of a vehicle stopped at a crosswalk or intersection to make a right-hand turn if the pedestrian is in the opposite half of the roadway and not in danger; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Failure to Yield to Pedestrian Negligence as Matter of Law Despite No Injury: Five months after being injured by a vehicle driven by Karns, plaintiff was struck while crossing the roadway in an unmarked intersection crosswalk by a vehicle driven by Gondeiro. Plaintiff filed suit, alleging that because her injuries from the two accidents were indivisible, both Karns and Gondeiro were liable for her injuries. Although the jury concluded that Gondeiro's vehicle did not strike plaintiff, the District Court granted plaintiff's motion for judgment against Gondeiro as a matter of law. Gondeiro appealed, claiming that the evidence showed that his vehicle did not strike plaintiff. However, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that whether Gondeiro's vehicle actually struck plaintiff was irrelevant. Gondeiro's failure to yield to a pedestrian crossing the roadway within a crosswalk at an intersection violated this section and constituted negligence as a matter of law. Armstrong v. Gondeiro, 2000 MT 326, 303 M 37, 15 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 1381 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Heightened Standard of Care of Driver in Vicinity of Children: Fifteen-year-old Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection near a school. The intersection had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist operating in an area in which children are known to likely be present has a heightened standard of care, relying on Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302 (1993). The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a person's duty of care varies depending on the circumstances at the time and place in question, so in this case, as in Okland, the standard negligence instruction permitted Hanson to argue that the circumstances required a heightened standard and was thus considered adequate. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Motorist's Affirmative Duty to Ascertain Whether Intersection Clear and to Anticipate Presence of Pedestrians: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist has an affirmative duty to ascertain whether an intersection is clear before proceeding and a duty to anticipate that pedestrians may be present in the intersection. The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the instruction that was given, which clarified a driver's obligation to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk and a pedestrian's obligation to avoid moving into the path of a vehicle that is too close for the driver to yield, was a proper statement of law under 61-8-504 and that the trial court did not err in refusing to give Hanson's proposed instruction regarding a driver's affirmative duties. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed — see 61-8-102 for definitions). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed) in pari materia with this section, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Attorney General's Opinions

City Council — Lack of Authority to Regulate Crosswalk on Federal-Aid Highway in Manner Inconsistent With State Law: A city council may not enact an ordinance requiring a driver of a motor vehicle on a federal-aid or state highway to stop for a pedestrian within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is not on the half of the roadway on which the vehicle is traveling and when the pedestrian is not close enough to be in danger. 41 A.G. Op. 10 (1985).

61-8-503. Crossing at other than crosswalks.

Case Notes

Capacity of Children — Contributory Negligence: Although this section makes no express exceptions for children, if the child lacked the capacity for compliance with the statute, the statutory violation may be excused and there is no contributory negligence. Ranard v. O'Neil, 166 M 1000, 531 P2d 1000, 32 St. Rep. 138 (1975).

Care Required of Pedestrian: Pedestrian must use ordinary care for his own safety in attempting to cross highway. Hightower v. Alley, 132 M 349, 318 P2d 243 (1957).

Last Clear Chance: Decedent, who was killed while crossing highway, did not come into a position of peril any appreciable length of time before the injury. Had he stood still, defendant would have avoided striking him. The evidence showed that it was the sudden running of deceased into the moving automobile that produced his injuries and death. Under the evidence defendant had no reasonable opportunity to avoid striking decedent after he took the perilous step. Under such circumstances an instruction on last clear chance had no place in the case. Hightower v. Alley, 132 M 349, 318 P2d 243 (1957).

Crossing in Middle of Street: The fact that a pedestrian is crossing the street between crossings does not absolve a motorist from the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him. This is especially true where plaintiff's stooped posture and bearing showed that he was oblivious to approaching traffic. Sorrels v. Ryan, 129 M 29, 281 P2d 1028 (1955).

Questions of Fact: Under the evidence presented, it was a jury question as to whether defendant acted as a reasonably prudent person would have acted under all the circumstances in traveling at the point of collision at the speed of 18 or 20 miles per hour, as she admitted, even though the streetcar had not come to a full stop when defendant met it. Whether, in the exercise of reasonable care, she should have seen plaintiff in time to avoid the collision, was for the jury. Hill v. Haller, 108 M 251, 90 P2d 977 (1939).

Duty of Drivers: Pedestrians and automobiles have equal rights in the use of streets or highways. Pedestrians are required to use ordinary care for their own safety. The driver of an automobile must operate it in a careful, prudent manner, and at a rate of speed no greater than is reasonable and proper under existing traffic and road conditions and the requirements of city ordinances. McKeon v. Kilduff, 85 M 562, 281 P 345 (1929). See also Green v. Bohm, 65 M 399, 211 P 320 (1922).

Care Required of Pedestrian: In an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident on a city street, it appeared that plaintiff was struck while attempting to cross a business street between crossings. The court erred in refusing defendant's offered instruction to the effect that greater caution is required of a pedestrian where he crosses between crossings than at crossings, and that automobiles must be more cautious at crossings than between crossings, although ordinary caution must be observed by drivers and pedestrians at and between crossings. Such instruction was in harmony with the law declared by subsection (1) of section 32-1102, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and applicable to the conditions presented. Carey v. Guest, 78 M 415, 258 P 236 (1927).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 374 after "Notwithstanding" substituted "61-8-501 through 61-8-503" for "the foregoing provisions of this part", substituted reference to operator for reference to driver, after "person" substituted "propelling a human-powered vehicle or using an assistive mobility device" for "operating a bicycle", before "confused" inserted "obviously", and after "incapacitated" inserted "or intoxicated"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1983 Amendment: Near middle of section, after "pedestrian" inserted "or with any person operating a bicycle".

Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Materiality of Facts in Negligence Action — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: In an action for damages caused by the wrongful death of the plaintiff's son as a result of the negligent operation of the defendant's automobile, the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The affidavits submitted by the parties show discrepancies in whether there were other children on the highway where the decedent was struck and as to the location where the decedent, a 5-year-old boy, ran onto the highway. Contrary to defendant's assertions, these facts are material to the case as they bear upon the defendant's ability and duty to exercise due care. Because material facts are in dispute, the motion was improperly granted. Big Man v. St., 192 M 29, 626 P2d 235, 38 St. Rep. 362 (1981).

Motorist's Duty to See: A motorist is negligent in either not looking or looking and not seeing if the object is so visible that all reasonable minds would agree that a person must see the object if he were to look with reasonable diligence. In this case, all reasonable minds could not agree that Payne was visible. He was wearing dark clothing on a coal black, rainy night and was walking in the travel portion of a wet highway with his back to the oncoming traffic. This court will not disturb the jury's determination if the evidence in the record furnishes reasonable grounds for different conclusions. Payne v. Sorenson, 183 M 323, 599 P2d 362, 36 St. Rep. 1610 (1979), followed in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993), and Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Crossing in Middle of Street: The fact that a pedestrian is crossing the street between crossings does not absolve a motorist from the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring him. This is especially true where plaintiff's stooped posture and bearing showed that he was oblivious to approaching traffic. Sorrels v. Ryan, 129 M 29, 281 P2d 1028 (1955).

Care at Crossing — Pedestrian and Driver: At a street crossing a pedestrian need only exercise such reasonable care as the case requires, for he has the right to assume that a driver will also exercise due care and approach the crossing with his vehicle under proper control. Both are required to exercise the degree of care that conditions demand. Webster v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel. Co., 108 M 188, 89 P2d 602 (1939).

Children in Street — Measure of Caution Required: Plaintiff's son was struck and injured by an automobile driven by an employee of defendant. The driver observed the child playing football in the street while about 200 feet away. He sounded his horn, but testified that it did not appear that the child heard it. As he approached, the child dashed across the street and was struck by the automobile. Defendant was found negligent in the operation of his automobile. The Supreme Court affirmed saying that a driver is charged with knowledge of childish traits, and though not an insurer of a child's safety, must exercise a higher degree of care upon observing a child. The driver must proceed with such measure of caution as a reasonably prudent man faced with such a situation would exercise. LeSage v. Largey Lumber Co., 99 M 372, 43 P2d 896 (1935).

Failure to Anticipate Child's Actions: A driver on a city street seeing a child in a place of apparent safety is not called upon to presume that the child will suddenly dart from the side of the street in front of his car. The driver does have the duty to be vigilant commensurate with the surrounding conditions, and by failure to anticipate the child's action he risks being held negligent by a jury. Autio v. Miller, 92 M 150, 11 P2d 1039 (1932).

Street Crossing Accident — Responsibilities of Parties: Plaintiff was crossing the street at the corner during the night. When he reached the middle of the street he observed an automobile approaching from about 50 feet distant at a rate of 30 miles an hour. The speed limit was 15 miles an hour. Pedestrian — Auto Collision — Negligence: A 13-year-old boy walking with others on the unpaved portion of a highway could not be held guilty of contributory negligence in stepping on the paved portion directly in front of an approaching truck. This was true even though he was warned by one of his companions of the danger of walking on the pavement, where it was in evidence that he had no knowledge of the proximity of the approaching truck. No Repeal by Implication: Section 53-24-106 did not repeal this section by implication. The two statutes are not irreconcilable with each other. Failure of Bicyclist to Wear Helmet — Evidence Inadmissible on Question of Negligence or Damages: Applying the rationale set out in Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), the Supreme Court held that because Montana law does not require a bicyclist to wear a helmet, the bicyclist's failure to wear a helmet ordinarily does not constitute negligence on the part of the state. Therefore, the jury was properly instructed that the bicyclist's failure to wear a helmet was not a legal cause of the accident and did not constitute negligence on the part of the state. The evidence was not admissible on the question of damages under the Kopischke rationale. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991).

1991 Amendment: In (1) inserted definition of roadway; deleted former (4) that read: "(4) Whenever a usable path for bicycles has been provided adjacent to a roadway, bicycle riders shall use such path and shall not use the roadway. A person riding a bicycle defined in 61-1-123(2) is excluded from the provisions of this subsection when such bicycle is prohibited from using such paths"; in (5) changed subsection references; and made minor change in style.

1983 Amendment: In (1) through (3) substituted language relating to proper operation of a bicycle on a roadway for former (1) and (2), which read: "(1) Every person operating a bicycle upon a roadway shall ride as near to the right side of the roadway as practicable, exercising due care when passing a standing vehicle or one proceeding in the same direction.

(2) Persons riding bicycles upon a roadway shall ride in single file except on paths or parts of roadways set aside for the exclusive use of bicycles. A person riding a bicycle may overtake and pass another bicycle when safe to do so and when other traffic is not obstructed by so doing.".

Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Probable Cause to Stop for Speeding — No Infringement of Liberty Interest: Defendant was stopped and charged by a highway patrol officer with speeding and operating a motor vehicle without a valid driver's license following the officer's visual observation of the speed of defendant's vehicle, confirmed by a radar reading. Defendant refuses to procure and carry a driver's license on various constitutional grounds. His right to liberty was not violated when the officer stopped and detained him because the officer had probable cause to believe defendant was speeding. Defendant's further contention that his liberty interest was infringed because he was not engaged in commercial travel when he was stopped is baseless in law. St. v. Case Notes

Duty to Maintain Safe Crossings: The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1973 represents an effort by the federal government to improve the safety of grade crossings and to provide funding for the same. That Act does not lessen in any degree the duty, statutory or common-law, of a railroad to maintain a good and safe crossing. The Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices promulgated by the Montana Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) may be considered as a standard or norm to be used for traffic-control devices. It does not have the force and effect of law in determining the duties and responsibilities of a railroad with respect to the safety of grade crossings. The railroad is not absolved of its common-law duty to provide a good and safe crossing. It was a jury question whether, under the circumstances known to the railroad at and before this accident, the railroad itself should have reduced the speed of its trains at this crossing. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

1991 Amendment: In (3) increased basis of fine for 1 day of incarceration from $10 to $25.

1987 Amendment: In (3) increased amount of fine credited for a day's incarceration from $2 to $10.

Attorney General's Opinions

30-Day Incarceration for Careless Driving Unlawful: Since the penalty for careless driving is a fine between $10 and $100, the District Court erred when it imposed a 30-day jail sentence for the offense. The defendant did not attack the validity of the sentence; therefore, the sentence could be corrected by the District Court by striking the illegal jail time imposed for the careless driving sentence. St. v. Kime, 2013 MT 14, 368 Mont. 261, 295 P.3d 580.

City Authority to Enact Photo-Radar Ordinance: No state agency is given exclusive power to establish administrative rules governing speed of traffic in cities and towns, nor is the enforcement of speed regulations exclusively vested in a state agency. Therefore, the city of Billings, under its self-government charter, is not precluded by statute from enacting a photo-radar ordinance providing either for accountability on the part of the registered owner for illegal speeding by any person operating the vehicle with the owner's permission or for a permissive inference that the registered owner was the speeding violator. 45 A.G. Op. 7 (1993).

Imprisonment in County Jail Upon Failure to Pay Traffic Fine: Both this section and 46-19-102 concern imprisonment upon failure to pay fines for traffic offenses. Because a particular statute governs when a general statute and a particular statute on the same subject are inconsistent, this section governs. However, if the failure to pay is based on indigency, constitutional issues arise. The courts have recognized the infirmity of imposing a fine as a sentence and then converting it into a jail term simply because the defendant is indigent and cannot forthwith pay the fine in full. 38 A.G. Op. 61 (1980).

A vehicle may not be forfeited under this section for any act or omission established by the owner to have been committed or omitted by a person other than the owner while the vehicle was unlawfully in the possession of a person other than the owner in violation of the criminal laws of this state or the United States.

(iii) Forfeiture of a vehicle encumbered by a security interest is subject to the secured person's interest if the person did not know and could not have reasonably known of the unlawful possession, use, or other act on which the forfeiture is sought"; in (4) inserted reference to 61-8-731; deleted (5) through (10) that read: "(5) In addition to the punishment provided in this section, regardless of disposition, the defendant shall complete an alcohol information course at an alcohol treatment program approved by the department of public health and human services, which may include alcohol or drug treatment, or both. Alcohol or drug treatment, or both, must be ordered for a first-time offender upon a finding of chemical dependency made by a certified chemical dependency counselor pursuant to diagnosis and patient placement rules adopted by the department of public health and human services. On conviction of a second or subsequent offense under this section, in addition to the punishment provided in this section, regardless of disposition, the defendant shall complete an alcohol information course at an alcohol treatment program approved by the department of public health and human services, which must include alcohol or drug treatment, or both. As long as the alcohol information course is approved as provided in this subsection and the treatment is provided by a certified chemical dependency counselor, the defendant may attend the information course and treatment program of the defendant's choice. The treatment provided to the defendant at a treatment program must be at a level appropriate to the defendant's alcohol or drug problem, or both, as determined by a certified chemical dependency counselor pursuant to diagnosis and patient placement rules adopted by the department of corrections. Upon determination, the court shall order the defendant's appropriate level of treatment. If more than one counselor makes a determination as provided in this subsection, the court shall order an appropriate level of treatment based upon the determination of one of the counselors. On a second or subsequent conviction, the treatment program must be followed by monthly monitoring for a period of at least 1 year from the date of admission to the program. A court or counselor may not require attendance at a self-help program other than at an "open meeting" as that term is defined by the self-help program. A defendant may voluntarily participate in self-help programs. Each counselor providing education or treatment shall, at the commencement of the education or treatment, notify the court that the defendant has been enrolled in an alcohol information course or treatment program. If the defendant fails to attend the information course or treatment program, the counselor shall notify the court of the failure.

(6) For the purpose of determining the number of convictions under this section, "conviction" means a final conviction, as defined in 45-2-101, in this state, conviction for a violation of a similar statute in another state, or a forfeiture of bail or collateral deposited to secure the defendant's appearance in court in this state or another state, which forfeiture has not been vacated. An offender is considered to have been previously convicted for the purposes of sentencing if less than 5 years have elapsed between the commission of the present offense and a previous conviction, unless the offense is the offender's fourth or subsequent offense, in which case all previous convictions must be used for sentencing purposes. If there has not been an additional conviction for an offense under this section for a period of 5 years after a prior conviction under this section, then all records and data relating to the prior conviction are confidential criminal justice information, as defined in 44-5-103, and public access to the information may only be obtained by district court order upon good cause shown.

(7) For the purpose of calculating subsequent convictions under this section, a conviction for a violation of 61-8-406 also constitutes a conviction for a violation of 61-8-401.

(8) The court may order that a term of imprisonment imposed under this section be served in another facility made available by the county and approved by the sentencing court. The defendant, if financially able, shall bear the expense of the imprisonment in the facility. The court may impose restrictions on the defendant's ability to leave the premises of the facility and require that the defendant follow the rules of that facility. The facility may be, but is not required to be, a community-based prerelease center as provided for in 53-1-203. The prerelease center may accept or reject a defendant referred by the sentencing court.

(9) Except for the initial 24 hours on a first offense or the initial 48 hours on a second or subsequent offense, the court may order that a term of imprisonment imposed under this section be served by imprisonment under home arrest as provided in Title 46, chapter 18, part 10.

If the defendant fails to attend the course or the treatment program, the counselor shall notify the court of the failure", in fifth sentence, after "alcohol", inserted "or drug", after "problem" inserted "or both", and after "determined" substituted "by a certified chemical dependency counselor pursuant to diagnosis and patient placement rules adopted by the department of corrections and human services" (now Department of Corrections) for "by the judge based upon the recommendations from the certified chemical dependency counselor", inserted sixth sentence requiring court to order defendant's appropriate level of treatment, inserted seventh sentence requiring court to order appropriate level of treatment based on determination of one counselor if more than one counselor makes determination, inserted eighth sentence requiring monthly monitoring for 1 year on second or subsequent conviction, inserted ninth sentence prohibiting court or counselor from requiring attendance at self-help program other than at open meeting, inserted tenth sentence authorizing defendant to voluntarily participate in self-help programs, inserted eleventh sentence requiring counselor at commencement of education or treatment to notify court of defendant's enrollment, and inserted twelfth sentence requiring counselor to notify court if defendant fails to attend course or treatment program.

WHEREAS, Officer Cady's patrol car was hit at a high rate of speed by the fleeing driver; and

WHEREAS, the driver of the fleeing vehicle was intoxicated at the time of the accident and had a prior conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs; and

WHEREAS, Officer Cady and his family have suffered terribly because of the actions of an irresponsible driver involved in an alcohol-related traffic offense; and

WHEREAS, the community and the people of the State of Montana have been deprived of the loyal and continuous services of a dedicated public servant; and

WHEREAS, driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs remains a serious problem in this state and current penalties often do not deter multiple violations of the DUI laws; and

WHEREAS, in Montana during 1991, 92 victims died and 2,000 individuals were injured in alcohol- or drug-related accidents; and

WHEREAS, additional penalties for multiple offenders may deter multiple violations and prevent the kind of tragedy that Officer Cady and his family have suffered and may prevent other families from suffering in the same way.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it fitting to enact the following legislation."

Case Notes

Maximum Sentence Imposed Based on Defendant's Indigency — Due Process Violated: After initially proposing to impose a sentence of $935 in fines and 6 months in the Gallatin County Detention Center with all but 3 days suspended, a Municipal Court imposed $935 in fines plus the maximum sentence of 6 months suspended for 1 year with all but 3 days suspended to allow the defendant time to pay off his fine. Because the Municipal Court imposed the maximum sentence due to the defendant's financial situation, the Supreme Court vacated the DUI sentence as a violation of due process. St. v. Haldane, 2013 MT 32, 368 Mont. 396, 300 P.3d 657, following St. v. Lenihan, 184 Mont. 338, 602 P.2d 997 (1979).

Proper Consideration of Prior Wyoming DUI Conviction: Sirles contended that the District Court improperly considered a prior Wyoming DUI conviction for purposes of felony enhancement of his Montana DUI. The Supreme Court disagreed. Sirles failed to overcome the presumption of regularity attached to the Wyoming conviction that might have precluded its consideration for felony enhancement purposes. St. v. Sirles, 2010 MT 88, 356 Mont. 133, 231 P.3d 1089. See also St. v. Faber, 2008 MT 368, 346 Mont. 449, 197 P.3d 941.

Prior DUI Convictions Affirmed in Absence of Direct Evidence of Irregularity — Presumption of Regularity of Prior Convictions: Snell contended that it was improper for the state to use two prior DUI convictions to elevate a new DUI charge to a felony based on the fact that the prior convictions were invalid because Snell was not informed of the right to counsel. Although the state may not use a constitutionally infirm conviction to support an enhanced punishment, a defendant must overcome the presumption of the regularity of the prior convictions with direct evidence of irregularity. However, Snell was unable to recall facts about the judges involved in both prior DUI cases, casting considerable doubt on his ability to recall other critical details in those cases. The District Court correctly held that Snell's testimony was not sufficient to overcome the presumption of regularity through direct evidence and that the prior convictions were therefore constitutionally firm. Denial of the dismissal motion was affirmed. St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 M 173, 103 P3d 503 (2004). See also St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856 (1999), and St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003).

Use of 1984, 1987, and 1991 DUI Convictions to Enhance 2000 DUI Offense to Felony: Weldele was convicted of DUI in 1984, 1987, 1991, and 2000. Weldele argued that because more than 5 years had elapsed between any of the prior convictions and the present offense, under the version of this section in effect during the 1984 and 1987 convictions, evidence of the 1984 and 1987 convictions could not be used to enhance the 2000 charge to a felony. However, because the 1987 conviction followed the 1984 conviction by only 3 years, the 1984 conviction did not qualify for expungement and remained on Weldele's record. The 1989 version of this section informed Weldele that if he remained DUI-free for 5 years after the 1991 conviction, the 1991 conviction would not be expunged, but rather would become confidential criminal justice information subject to review by a court. In 1995, this section was again amended to create the felony sanction for fourth and subsequent DUIs, so Weldele was on notice as of 1995 that all of the prior convictions would be counted for sentencing purposes. A 1997 revision created separate felony DUI sanctions, again putting Weldele on notice that a fourth offense would constitute a felony. Thus, there was no due process or ex post facto issue here, and the accurate and lawful application of the statutes in effect at the time of Weldele's convictions allowed for the enhancement of his sentence based on the complete record of four DUIs. St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003).

Direct Evidence Rebutting Presumption of Regularity of Prior DUI Convictions — Remand for Evidentiary Hearing for Determination of Validity of Prior Conviction: Kvislen was charged with felony DUI based on three prior convictions. Kvislen moved to dismiss on grounds that one of the prior convictions was entered in derogation of his constitutional rights and thus could not be used to elevate the present charge to a felony. Kvislen filed an affidavit prior to trial averring that he never received notice of the prior trial and was convicted without being informed of the right to counsel. After providing the District Court with arguments to the contrary, the state moved to dismiss. The District Court, without conducting an evidentiary hearing to weigh Kvislen's affidavit against the assertions made by the state, concluded that Kvislen had not sufficiently rebutted the presumption of regularity that attaches to prior convictions and dismissed the motion, and Kvislen appealed. Citing St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431 (1997), and St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318 (1997), the Supreme Court noted that although a rebuttable presumption of regularity attaches to prior convictions, that presumption may be overcome by direct evidence of irregularity, and once defendant offers direct evidence, the burden shifts to the state to prove that the prior conviction was not obtained in violation of defendant's rights. Here, the state conceded that Kvislen's averments met the technical definition of direct evidence and that the state relied on insufficient evidence and failed to meet its burden of proof. Instead of denying the motion to dismiss, the District Court should have shifted the burden to the state and allowed the state to submit evidence showing that Kvislen's rights were not violated. The proper forum for consideration of the issue was through an evidentiary hearing, and the Supreme Court remanded the case for that purpose. St. v. Kvislen, 2003 MT 27, 314 M 176, 64 P3d 1006 (2003).

Stipulation to Not Mention Suspended Driver's License at DUI Trial — Mention of Expired Driver's License Cured by Jury Admonition: Brady was charged with DUI, fourth or subsequent offense, arising from circumstances surrounding a single-vehicle accident in which Brady swerved off the highway, hit a rock wall, and rolled the vehicle. The information also charged Brady with three misdemeanors: driving while his license was suspended or revoked, failure to provide proof of insurance, and failure to give notice of an accident by the quickest means. Shortly before voir dire, Brady stated that he would plead guilty to the misdemeanors and moved that the state's witnesses not mention any of the offenses to which Brady would plead guilty. The state did not object to the motion. The third witness for the state, a deputy who was at the wreck scene, testified that he found a wallet near the vehicle that contained an expired driver's license. Brady moved for mistrial on grounds that the state violated the judge's order not to mention an expired license. The state countered that the stipulation was that the state would not mention that the license was suspended, but that mention of an expired license was not covered. The District Court found that there was a difference between the jury knowing that Brady's license was suspended, which suggested criminal activity, and knowing that the license was expired, which is not in itself criminal. The court then admonished the jury to disregard the testimony regarding the expired license as irrelevant to the case. Brady was convicted of DUI and appealed on grounds that denial of his motion for a mistrial was reversible error because the state's witness deliberately violated an order in limine to which the state previously stipulated. Granting a mistrial is appropriate when a reasonable possibility exists that inadmissible evidence might have contributed to the conviction. The strength of the evidence against the defendant, together with the prejudicial influence of the inadmissible evidence and whether a cautionary jury instruction could cure any prejudice, must be considered in determining whether a prohibited statement contributed to the conviction. A mistrial should be denied for technical errors of defects that do not affect the defendant's substantial rights and when the record is sufficient to establish guilt. The Supreme Court agreed that there is a difference between an expired license and a suspended license with regard to implications of guilt. Here, any potential prejudice that might have resulted from testimony about the expired license was sufficiently cured by the admonition to the jury, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for mistrial. St. v. Brady, 2000 MT 282, 302 M 174, 13 P3d 941, 57 St. Rep. 1178 (2000), distinguishing St. v. Partin, 287 M 12, 951 P2d 1002 (1997).

Conditions of DUI Expungement Under Former Provision: A DUI conviction between 1981 and 1989 was not eligible for expungement under former subsection (6) (expungement provision deleted in 1989) of this section, unless the conviction was followed directly by a 5-year period in which no DUI conviction was received. A defendant's convictions in February 1985, July 1985, July 1987, and May 1988 were not eligible for expungement because less than 5 years elapsed between convictions. The District Court erred in expunging all of the prior convictions and reducing the felony fifth offense DUI to a misdemeanor first offense. St. v. Thibert, 1998 MT 207, 290 M 408, 965 P2d 251, 55 St. Rep. 883 (1998), following St. v Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756 (1997), and St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891 (1997) (Beckman and Cooney were applied retroactively to Thibert).

Admissibility of Ambulance Attendant's Testimony That Driver in Accident Acted Like Belligerent Drunk: Since defendant was charged with DUI, not with driving with an illegal blood alcohol content, the ambulance attendant's testimony that defendant's actions after the accident occurred were those of a belligerent drunk did not constitute an opinion of guilt, and it was not an abuse of discretion to allow admission of the testimony. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997). However, see St. v. Smith, 1998 MT 257, 291 M 236, 967 P2d 424, 55 St. Rep. 1058 (1998), in which the District Court's refusal to allow nonexperts to give an opinion that defendant, because of good character, was not capable of committing the charged offense was affirmed because the proposed testimony did not constitute a pertinent trait of character but an opinion on the question of defendant's ultimate guilt.

Highway Patrol Officer's Expert Opinion, in DUI Prosecution, That Driver Being Under the Influence Caused Accident: In a DUI prosecution, admission of a highway patrol officer's testimony that in her opinion, based on her investigation at the scene of defendant's accident and her discussion with defendant soon after the accident, defendant was under the influence of alcohol to an extent that diminished his ability to drive safely was not an abuse of discretion. Her training and experience in accident investigation and reconstruction qualified her as an expert for purposes of giving the opinion. She had been an officer for 8 years, was trained at the Montana Highway Patrol Academy for 12 weeks, had 4 weeks of training in traffic investigation, had attended an accident reconstruction school, had taught accident investigation, had special DUI investigation training and had taken a course on being a DUI detection instructor, was a recognized expert in accident reconstruction, had investigated more than 200 accidents, of which 15% to 20% had involved alcohol, and had participated in more than 100 DUI arrests. Her opinion did not invade the province of the jury by calling for a legal conclusion on the issue of guilt or innocence; she was giving an expert opinion as to the cause of the accident. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997).

Highway Patrol Officer's Expert Opinion, in DUI Prosecution, That Driver Passed Out While Driving: In a DUI prosecution, admission of a highway patrol officer's testimony that in her opinion, based on her investigation at the scene of defendant's accident and her discussion with defendant soon after the accident, defendant had passed out while driving was not an abuse of discretion. Her training and experience in accident investigation and reconstruction qualified her as an expert for purposes of giving the opinion. She had been an officer for 8 years, was trained at the Montana Highway Patrol Academy for 12 weeks, had 4 weeks of training in traffic investigation, had attended an accident reconstruction school, had taught accident investigation, had special DUI investigation training and had taken a course on being a DUI detection instructor, was a recognized expert in accident reconstruction, had investigated more than 200 accidents, of which 15% to 20% had involved alcohol, and had participated in more than 100 DUI arrests. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997).

Expungement of Two of Three Prior DUI and BAC Convictions — Lack of District Court Jurisdiction — Felony Charge Dismissed: Sidmore was arrested for DUI in March 1996. His driving record revealed that he had a 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, a 1994 Montana DUI conviction, and a 1990 Montana BAC conviction. Pursuant to this section, Sidmore was charged with felony DUI, fourth offense. Sidmore agreed that under this section, both BAC and DUI convictions can be counted to determine the total number of convictions that a defendant has received. However, under the 1989 version of 61-8-722, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent BAC conviction within the 5-year period following the 1990 BAC conviction nor did the 1994 DUI conviction prevent expungement of the 1990 BAC conviction, so the 1990 BAC conviction was expunged from the record. Further, under the 1987 version of this section, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent DUI conviction within the 5-year period following the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction nor did the 1990 BAC conviction prevent expungement of the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, so the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction was also expunged from the record, making the 1994 DUI conviction the only prior conviction that could be counted to support the felony DUI charge. Thus, under 3-10-303, the Justice's Court retained jurisdiction of the misdemeanor 1996 offense and the District Court erred in denying Sidmore's motion to dismiss the felony DUI charge for lack of jurisdiction. (Expungement provision deleted in 1989.) St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558, 54 St. Rep. 1381 (1997).

Out-of-State Convictions in Home State — Driver License Compact Not Applicable — Nonjurisdictional Claims Waived by Guilty Plea: Wheeler was charged with DUI, fifth offense. The affidavit in support of the information alleged that Wheeler had four previous DUI convictions. Three of the convictions occurred in Colorado. Wheeler moved to expunge those convictions, arguing that those convictions would have been expunged if they had occurred in Montana. The state argued that Colorado was Wheeler's home state when he received the DUI convictions, that the Driver License Compact did not apply, and that Wheeler had no reasonable expectation that the Colorado convictions would be expunged. The District Court denied the motion to expunge. The Supreme Court held that the expungement claim is a nonjurisdictional claim that was waived by Wheeler's guilty plea and affirmed the District Court decision. (Expungement provision deleted in 1989.) St. v. Wheeler, 285 M 400, 948 P2d 698, 54 St. Rep. 1213 (1997).

DUI Conviction Incurred Prior to 1981 Expungement Provision Eligible for Expungement: Reams was charged with fourth offense felony DUI based on convictions in July 1975, March and May 1990, and May 1996. Reams argued that his 1975 conviction should have been expunged from his record under the expungement provisions of the 1981 law when it was adopted because it had been more than 5 years between the 1975 conviction and any subsequent conviction and that therefore he could not be charged with fourth offense felony DUI. The state countered that the expungement provision did not apply retroactively because there was no evidence that the Legislature intended it to so apply. The Supreme Court held that a defendant is entitled to the benefit of the law in effect when the offense is committed, except to the extent that a later amendment mitigates a sentence or punishment, in which case the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the later law unless there is clear legislative intent through a saving clause that the former law is intended to control. The Supreme Court ruled that Reams's 1975 conviction was expunged with the adoption of the 1981 law and that therefore he could not be tried for fourth offense felony DUI. (Expungement provision deleted in 1989.) St. v. Reams, 284 M 448, 945 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 972 (1997), followed in St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997).

One of Three Previous DUI Convictions Subject to Expungement: Cooney argued that his DUI convictions in October 1984, September 1986, and July 1989 should have been expunged from his record under the language of the statute that existed prior to October 1989 and that therefore his conviction for DUI in December 1995 could not make him liable for fourth offense felony DUI. The Supreme Court held that any DUI conviction prior to the October 1989 repeal of the statute was automatically eligible for expungement if the elements of the expungement provision were satisfied. The Supreme Court ruled that the July 1989 conviction should have been expunged, removing any liability for Cooney for fourth offense felony DUI, but not the October 1984 and September 1986 convictions because at no time had more than 5 years expired between those convictions and a subsequent conviction. (Expungement provision deleted in 1989.) St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891, 54 St. Rep. 967 (1997). See also St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997), regarding expungement of a previous DUI conviction.

Previous DUI Conviction Not to Be Considered for Purposes of Felony DUI — Former Requirement for Expungement of Record Held Self-Executing — Lorash Distinguished — Expungement Applicable to Local Records: Bowles was convicted of DUI in 1977 and did not receive another DUI for 5 years but was convicted of two other DUI offenses after 1982. When Bowles was arrested for DUI in Park County in 1996, Park County charged Bowles with felony DUI, fourth offense, counting the 1977 conviction as one of three prior convictions. Bowles moved for dismissal of the felony charge, contending that the 1977 record should have been expunged pursuant to the 1981 version of subsection (5) of this section, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly dismissed the felony charge because the expungement provision in effect at the time, unlike the expungement provision in 46-18-204 that was litigated in St. v. Lorash, 238 M 345, 777 P2d 884 (1989), was self-executing and did not require the defendant to move the court to have the record of conviction expunged. The requirement for expungement applied to the 1977 conviction, despite the change in the law in 1989 requiring that the record be held as confidential criminal justice information, because the requirement for expungement was self-executing. The Supreme Court also noted that the expungement requirement applied to records of conviction notwithstanding the requirement in 61-11-102 that the Department of Justice maintain records of convictions of licensees. Further, the Supreme Court also held, relying upon St. v. Brander, 280 M 148, 930 P2d 31 (1996), that because "expungement" means to destroy and was without limitation, all traces of the conviction record should have been destroyed, that the record of the 1977 conviction was maintained by the Park County Sheriff in violation of the law, and that the 1977 county conviction record should not have been used as the basis for the felony charge. In response to the state's argument that the expungement requirement, enacted in 1981, applied prospectively only to convictions occurring after the requirement's effective date, the Supreme Court noted that it had rejected that argument in St. v. Reams, 284 M 448, 945 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 972 (1997). (Expungement provision deleted in 1989.) St. v. Bowles, 284 M 490, 947 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 962 (1997).

Allegation of Uncounseled Waiver of Right to Attorney — Burden of Proof — Testimony of Routine of City Judge Held to Create Triable Issue of Fact: Olson moved to dismiss a felony DUI charge based upon his affidavit that in his previous DUI convictions, he was not represented by counsel and was not told that he could have a court-appointed attorney. In response to Olson's affidavit, the state presented the testimony of the City Judge who convicted Olson on one of the previous DUI charges. The judge testified that although he had no specific recollection of Olson's case, he always asks defendants whether they understand their rights and always reads their rights from a prepared text that includes an advisement of the right to counsel. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to Rule 406, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), this testimony is substantive evidence that creates a triable issue of fact. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it held that this testimony was insufficient as a matter of law to create a triable issue of fact. St. v. Olson, 283 M 27, 938 P2d 1321, 54 St. Rep. 475 (1997), followed in St. v. Couture, 1998 MT 137, 289 M 215, 959 P2d 948, 55 St. Rep. 548 (1998), and St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856, 56 St. Rep. 1143 (1999). Olson was followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Uncounseled Waiver of Rights Held No Basis for Enhanced DUI Penalty — Presumption of Regularity of Conviction — Burden of Proof: Okland was charged with his fourth DUI violation and, by virtue of 61-8-722 and this section, was charged with a felony. Okland filed a motion to dismiss the felony charges, asserting that because he was not represented by counsel at the three previous convictions and had not adequately been advised of his right to counsel, those convictions could not be used to enhance the penalty. With his motion, Okland submitted an affidavit and a record of his 1985 conviction in Lake County. The District Court dismissed the felony charge. The Supreme Court, relying upon United States Supreme Court cases, held that a presumption of regularity attaches to prior convictions during collateral attack and that therefore, even in the absence of a transcript or record, a rebuttable presumption attaches that the prior conviction is valid and a defendant who challenges the validity of the conviction has the burden of producing direct evidence of the conviction's invalidity. In this case, the Supreme Court noted that Okland did produce sufficient evidence to shift the burden to the state and that the copy of the letter produced by the state notifying Okland that he had to complete a financial statement before a court-appointed attorney would be appointed was insufficient to meet the state's burden of proof. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting the motion to dismiss the felony charges against Okland. St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), followed in St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 472 (1997), St. v. Perry, 283 M 34, 938 P2d 1325, 54 St. Rep. 478 (1997), St. v. Stubblefield, 283 M 292, 940 P2d 444, 54 St. Rep. 605 (1997), St. v. Brown, 1999 MT 143, 295 M 5, 982 P2d 1030, 56 St. Rep. 560 (1999), St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856, 56 St. Rep. 1143 (1999), St. v. Anderson, 2001 MT 188, 306 M 243, 32 P3d 750 (2001), and St. v. Kvislen, 2003 MT 27, 314 M 176, 64 P3d 1006 (2003). Okland was also followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Blood Tests Not Self-Incrimination — Taking of Blood Sample From Unconscious Defendant Not Denial of Due Process — DUI Penalty Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment or Double Jeopardy Violation: Defendant was convicted in a state court of driving under the influence and petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus. The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana denied relief, and defendant appealed. The court of appeals held that blood test results were not testimonial or communicative evidence that was inadmissible under the fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination; removal of blood samples from defendant while he was unconscious did not violate due process; the sentence of 6 months in jail, a $500 fine, and attendance at an alcohol treatment program was not cruel and unusual punishment; and the sentence was not multiple punishment for double jeopardy purposes. Belgarde v. Mont., 123 F3d 1210 (9th Cir. 1997).

Consideration of Expunged DUI Conviction Grounds for Reversal: Defendant, charged with a fourth offense DUI, moved for dismissal. Defendant claimed that the District Court's use of an earlier DUI conviction, which had been expunged as a result of a legislative change, to charge the defendant with felony DUI violated his constitutional guarantee against the application of ex post facto laws. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that although the District Court did not err when it denied the defendant's motion to dismiss on ex post facto grounds, the court did err when it considered an expunged DUI conviction in sentencing the defendant. (Expungement provision deleted in 1989.) St. v. Brander, 280 M 148, 930 P2d 31, 53 St. Rep. 1340 (1996), followed, as to an ex post facto application of law, in St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891, 54 St. Rep. 967 (1997), St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997), St. v. Pratt, 286 M 156, 951 P2d 37, 54 St. Rep. 1349 (1997), and St. v. Anderson, 2008 MT 116, 342 M 485, 182 P3d 80 (2008).

Brander was followed in St. v. Bowles, 284 M 490, 947 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 962 (1997), as to the application of the expungement requirement to local records of conviction.

Applicability of 1989 Amendments Limited to This Section: The 1989 amendments to this section regarding the criminal penalty for DUI violations did not alter or affect 61-5-208, the civil penalty section for DUI and BAC violations. The plain language of subsection (6) of this section limits application of this section to the determination of penalties in this section. Dewart v. St., 254 M 215, 835 P2d 769, 49 St. Rep. 706 (1992).

Trying Defendant Twice in Five-Year Period for Second Offense DUI Not Double Jeopardy: The defendant was convicted of DUI at 17 years of age. Several months later when he was 18, the defendant was arrested for a second incident and tried and convicted for DUI, second offense. Two years later, the defendant was arrested for a third time, initially with a third offense DUI. The prosecution amended the charge to a second offense DUI upon learning that the defendant had been a juvenile when convicted the first time. The defendant argued that charging him twice within a 5-year period under Montana's DUI scheme for second offense DUI constituted double jeopardy. The Supreme Court held that it was not double jeopardy because the defendant was not being tried twice for the same occurrence. Each charge arose from a separate set of facts. The court further stated that although the first conviction for second offense DUI might not have been correct since the first DUI conviction had occurred when the defendant was a minor, the second charge for a second offense DUI was proper. St. v. Chasse, 240 M 341, 783 P2d 1370, 46 St. Rep. 2178 (1989).

Justice of Peace Lacking Jurisdiction to Modify Sentence: Respondent was found guilty of driving under the influence of alcohol, sentenced to a suspended sentence, and required to undergo alcohol treatment. When respondent had completed the treatment, the Justice of the Peace modified the initial sentence to order further treatment and conditions upon respondent's behavior. Under the plain meaning of this section, the Justice of the Peace lacked jurisdiction to vacate or modify the original sentence. Therefore, the modifying order was properly annulled. Rivera v. Eschler, 235 M 350, 767 P2d 336, 46 St. Rep. 45 (1989).

Justice's Court — No Authority to Vacate Conviction and Order Alteration of Driver's Civil Records: A Justice's Court does not have authority to vacate a conviction or to direct alteration of the records of the Division of Motor Vehicles. Therefore, a Justice's Court could not order the Division to strike a prior DUI conviction and not consider it in revoking the driver's license on a second conviction. The District Court properly granted the Division's motion to quash a Writ of Mandate issued by the District Court staying the actions of the Division. Lancaster v. Dept. of Justice, 218 M 97, 706 P2d 126, 42 St. Rep. 1425 (1985).

Constitutional Requirement Satisfied by Sentence Founded on Prevention and Reformation: The defendant, who has an extensive record of driving under the influence of alcohol, was convicted on three counts of driving under the influence (DUI). She was sentenced to serve time in the county jail. The defendant contends her sentence violates the constitution as it does not provide for her rehabilitation. Article II, sec. 28, Mont. Const., requires that laws for punishment of crime be founded on the principles of prevention and reformation (prior to 1998 amendment). The defendant's sentence furthers the prevention principle through her incarceration, addresses the reformation principle through ordering her to abstain from the use of alcohol, and provides the avoidance of further incarceration as an incentive to reform. Thus, the constitutional requirement is satisfied. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

Denial of Good Time and Parole Eligibility for Jail Inmates Not Denial of Equal Protection: The defendant was convicted of three counts of driving under the influence of alcohol (DUI) and sentenced to serve 10 months in the county jail. The sentence may be greater than would be served in the state prison for a more serious offense because county jail inmates are not entitled to a statutory good time allowance or parole eligibility as are prison inmates. The defendant contends that the denial of good time and parole eligibility to county jail inmates is a denial of equal protection. However, the Legislature may discriminate on a rational basis in the treatment of different classes of criminal offenders, as long as the different treatment is not based on any impermissible classification such as race, sex, or religion. The good time and parole eligibility rules have been devised to rationally address the special problems of rehabilitation and management of a large prison population. These benefits are not selectively endowed on the basis of any impermissible classification. Their denial to all DUI offenders, who statutorily are required to serve their time in the county jail, does not violate the Equal Protection Clause. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

Impaired Driver Not Entitled to Treatment Instead of Punishment: The defendant, who has an extensive record of driving under the influence of alcohol, was convicted on three counts of driving under the influence (DUI) and sentenced to serve 10 months in the county jail. The defendant contends that 53-24-303 requires she be given treatment for alcoholism rather than criminal punishment. However, that section provides for treatment of persons incapacitated by alcohol. It is not intended to protect those who have committed criminal acts, who are distinguishable from persons whose only fault is an affinity for alcohol. While treatment of alcoholism is desirable, it is not required instead of criminal punishment for a person convicted of DUI. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

Jail Sentence for DUI Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment: The defendant, who has an extensive record of driving under the influence of alcohol, was convicted on three counts of driving under the influence (DUI) and sentenced to serve 10 months in the county jail. The defendant contends her sentence is cruel and unusual punishment and a denial of equal protection because it may be greater than would be served in the state prison for a more serious offense since county jail inmates are not entitled to statutory good time allowance or parole eligibility as are prison inmates. However, the sentence falls within the maximum authorized by statute and is not so disproportionate to the crime that it shocks the conscience and outrages the moral sense of the community or of justice. Therefore, the sentence imposed is not cruel and unusual punishment that would render it unconstitutional. St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817, 41 St. Rep. 2178 (1984).

District Court Jurisdiction Over D.W.I. Charge: Jurisdiction of the District Court over criminal matters depends on the maximum sentence that can be imposed for committing the crime. When the maximum sentence increases to give the District Court jurisdiction because of repeated D.W.I. offenses, proof of prior offenses does not become an element that must be proved at trial and can be proved at any time until sentencing. Thus, failure to introduce evidence of prior convictions at trial does not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. St. v. Campbell, 189 M 107, 615 P2d 190, 37 St. Rep. 1337 (1980).

Chain of Possession: Blood alcohol test results were admissible in evidence even though there was a discrepancy as to the blood sample seal number, there was a 3-day delay between taking of the sample and its arrival in Helena for analysis, and the sample was left on a desk in the Sheriff's office overnight and no testimony was given as to the overnight period. St. v. Nelson, 178 M 280, 583 P2d 435, 35 St. Rep. 1337 (1978).

District Court Jurisdiction: An information charging the defendant with the crime of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor (3rd offense) was sufficient to establish jurisdiction in the District Court even though this section uses the term "third or subsequent conviction" rather than "third offense" in providing for a potential penalty sufficiently harsh to invoke District Court jurisdiction. The defendant's prior convictions did not have to be proved at the trial in order to establish District Court jurisdiction. St. v. Nelson, 178 M 280, 583 P2d 435, 35 St. Rep. 1337 (1978).

Jurisdiction of District Court: While it is generally true that Justices' Courts have jurisdiction over offenses described in this section, since third conviction may lead to sentence of up to 1 year, prosecution of third offense can be in District Court. St. v. Heine, 169 M 25, 544 P2d 1212 (1976).

Sufficiency of Evidence: Facts of accident scene, testimony of highway patrolman and ambulance attendant, admissions of defendant and daughter, and blood alcohol test constituted substantial and sufficient evidence to support conviction. St. v. Longacre, 168 M 311, 542 P2d 1221, 32 St. Rep. 1133 (1975).

Double Jeopardy: Conviction under this section did not bar subsequent prosecution for involuntary manslaughter arising out of the same incident because proof of involuntary manslaughter requires proof of an additional fact. St. v. McDonald, 158 M 307, 491 P2d 711 (1971).

Improperly Conducted Test: Although it was improper to admit results of blood test showing that deceased's blood contained 0.15% alcohol by weight where testimony disclosed that tube used to collect blood sample had previously contained formalin and formaldehyde which could have resulted in higher than actual alcohol content result, error was not reversible in view of other testimony concerning deceased's state of intoxication. Benner v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 150 M 97, 430 P2d 648 (1967).

Jurisdiction of Justice of Peace: Since the driving of a vehicle on a highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor is a misdemeanor under this section, it falls within the jurisdiction of a Justice of the Peace under 3-10-303. Wilson v. Brodie, 148 M 235, 419 P2d 306 (1966).

Actual Physical Control: By defining the words "actual", "physical", and "control" as they are used in their ordinary meanings, it was held that if a person has existing or present bodily restraint, directing influence, domination, or regulation of an automobile while under the influence of intoxicant he violates the statute. St. v. Ruona, 133 M 243, 321 P2d 615 (1958).

Attorney General's Opinions

City Attorney — No Authority to Prosecute Third DUI or Per Se Violations Without Ordinance: A city attorney has no authority to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under 61-8-401 and 61-8-406. However, a city may adopt an ordinance pursuant to 61-8-401(5) that would empower the city attorney to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under such a city ordinance. 42 A.G. Op. 12 (1987).

Time in Which Convictions Must Occur: Only those prior convictions which have occurred within 5 years of a current D.W.I. offense may be counted in determining whether the current prosecution is for a third offense. 38 A.G. Op. 63 (1980), overruled in St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756 (1997), and St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891 (1997). See also St. v. Thibert, 1998 MT 207, 290 M 408, 965 P2d 251, 55 St. Rep. 883 (1998).

Elements: In order to sustain a conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol, the State must prove actual physical control of a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol. This section does not require proof that a person is under the influence of alcohol to a degree which renders him incapable of safely driving a motor vehicle. 37 A.G. Op. 120 (1978).

(iii) Forfeiture of a vehicle encumbered by a security interest is subject to the secured person's interest if the person did not know and could not have reasonably known of the unlawful possession, use, or other act on which the forfeiture is sought"; in (4), at beginning of second sentence, deleted "Except as provided in subsection (9), notwithstanding any other provision providing for suspension of execution of a sentence imposed under this subsection"; deleted (5) through (11) that read: "(5) The provisions of 61-5-205(2), 61-5-208(2), and 61-11-203(2)(d), relating to revocation and suspension of driver's licenses, apply to any conviction under 61-8-406.

Each counselor providing education or treatment shall, at the commencement of the education or treatment, notify the court that the defendant has been enrolled in a course or treatment program. If the defendant fails to attend the course or the treatment program, the counselor shall notify the court of the failure.

(7) For the purpose of determining the number of convictions under this section, "conviction" means a final conviction, as defined in 45-2-101, in this state or a similar statute in another state or a forfeiture of bail or collateral deposited to secure the defendant's appearance in court in this state or another state, which forfeiture has not been vacated. An offender is considered to have been previously convicted for the purposes of sentencing if less than 5 years have elapsed between the commission of the present offense and a previous conviction, unless the offense is the offender's fourth or subsequent offense, in which case all previous convictions must be used for sentencing purposes. If there has not been an additional conviction for an offense under this section for a period of 5 years after a prior conviction under this section, then all records and data relating to the prior conviction are confidential criminal justice information, as defined in 45-5-103, and public access to the information may only be obtained by district court order upon good cause shown.

(9) The court may order that a term of imprisonment imposed under this section be served in another facility made available by the county and approved by the sentencing court. The defendant, if financially able, shall bear the expense of the imprisonment in the facility. The court may impose restrictions on the defendant's ability to leave the premises of the facility and require that the defendant follow the rules of that facility. The facility may be, but is not required to be, a community-based prerelease center as provided for in 53-1-203. The prerelease center may accept or reject a defendant referred by the sentencing court.

(10) Except for the initial 24 hours on a first offense or the initial 48 hours on a second or subsequent offense, the court may order that a term of imprisonment imposed under this section be served by imprisonment under home arrest as provided in Title 46, chapter 18, part 10.

(11) A court may not defer imposition of sentence under this section"; and made minor changes in style. (The amendment to subsection (4) was rendered void by sec. 2, Ch. 512, L. 1997, which deleted subsection (4) in its entirety.)

Applicability: Section 14, Ch. 525, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to offenses committed on or after October 1, 1997."

Chapter 546 in (6), in first sentence, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of corrections and human services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 567 in (6), near middle of first sentence, substituted "must" for "may" and at end, after "both", substituted "in accordance with the provisions of 61-8-714" for "if considered necessary by the counselor conducting the program"; and made minor changes in style.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 474 inserted (3)(b) relating to seizure of motor vehicles; and made minor changes in style.

WHEREAS, the community and the people of the State of Montana have been deprived of the loyal and continuous services of a dedicated public servant; and

WHEREAS, in Montana during 1991, 92 victims died and 2,000 individuals were injured in alcohol- or drug-related accidents; and

WHEREAS, additional penalties for multiple offenders may deter multiple violations and prevent the kind of tragedy that Officer Cady and his family have suffered and may prevent other families from suffering in the same way.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it fitting to enact the following legislation."

1991 Amendments — Instructions to Code Commissioner: Chapter 101 in (1), (2), and (3) inserted "Except as provided in subsection (7)"; inserted (7) providing that sentences of imprisonment for DUI offenses may be served in facilities other than county jails, requiring defendants financially able to pay for costs of imprisonment, and allowing a prerelease center to accept or reject a defendant referred by the sentencing court; and made minor changes in style.

The Code Commissioner changed "department of institutions" to "department of corrections and human services", pursuant to sec. 1, Ch. 262, L. 1991, directing the Code Commissioner to make the change wherever necessary in the Montana Code Annotated. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 789 in second sentence of (6) substituted "sentencing" for "this section".

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 105, L. 1991, was a severability clause.

1985 Amendment: In (6) near middle of first sentence, after "45-2-101", inserted "in this state or a similar statute in another state" and near end of first sentence inserted "in this state or another state".

Case Notes

No Youth Court Authority to Expunge DUI Offenses — Elements of Judicial Estoppel Not Met: Following Darrah's completion of a Youth Drug Court program in 2004, the Youth Court ordered that Darrah's prior criminal record be expunged, including a previous minor in possession offense and a 2002 DUI. Darrah was subsequently charged in 2005 with second offense DUI, based on the prior 2002 DUI, and in 2006 Darrah was charged with third offense DUI. Citing the principle of judicial estoppel, Darrah asserted that because the Youth Court record had been expunged, the 2002 DUI should not count against him. The District Court disagreed and Darrah appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of judicial estoppel set out in Vogel v. Intercontinental Truck Body, Inc., 2006 MT 131, 332 M 322, 137 P3d 573 (2006), and determined that Darrah had failed to demonstrate that each element was met, so judicial estoppel did not apply. Further, there is no authority under which the Youth Court could order expungement of Darrah's DUI offenses. The District Court was affirmed. St. v. Darrah, 2009 MT 96, 350 M 70, 205 P3d 792 (2009), following St. v. Chesley, 2004 MT 165, 322 M 26, 92 P3d 1212 (2004).

Direct Evidence Rebutting Presumption of Regularity of Prior DUI Convictions — Remand for Evidentiary Hearing for Determination of Validity of Prior Conviction: Kvislen was charged with felony DUI based on three prior convictions. Kvislen moved to dismiss on grounds that one of the prior convictions was entered in derogation of his constitutional rights and thus could not be used to elevate the present charge to a felony. Kvislen filed an affidavit prior to trial averring that he never received notice of the prior trial and was convicted without being informed of the right to counsel. After providing the District Court with arguments to the contrary, the state moved to dismiss. The District Court, without conducting an evidentiary hearing to weigh Kvislen's affidavit against the assertions made by the state, concluded that Kvislen had not sufficiently rebutted the presumption of regularity that attaches to prior convictions and dismissed the motion, and Kvislen appealed. Citing St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431 (1997), and St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318 (1997), the Supreme Court noted that although a rebuttable presumption of regularity attaches to prior convictions, that presumption may be overcome by direct evidence of irregularity, and once defendant offers direct evidence, the burden shifts to the state to prove that the prior conviction was not obtained in violation of defendant's rights. Here, the state conceded that Kvislen's averments met the technical definition of direct evidence and that the state relied on insufficient evidence and failed to meet its burden of proof. Instead of denying the motion to dismiss, the District Court should have shifted the burden to the state and allowed the state to submit evidence showing that Kvislen's rights were not violated. The proper forum for consideration of the issue was through an evidentiary hearing, and the Supreme Court remanded the case for that purpose. St. v. Kvislen, 2003 MT 27, 314 M 176, 64 P3d 1006 (2003).

Expungement of Two of Three Prior DUI and BAC Convictions — Lack of District Court Jurisdiction — Felony Charge Dismissed: Sidmore was arrested for DUI in March 1996. His driving record revealed that he had a 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, a 1994 Montana DUI conviction, and a 1990 Montana BAC conviction. Pursuant to 61-8-714, Sidmore was charged with felony DUI, fourth offense. Sidmore agreed that under 61-8-714, both BAC and DUI convictions can be counted to determine the total number of convictions that a defendant has received. However, under the 1989 version of this section, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent BAC conviction within the 5-year period following the 1990 BAC conviction nor did the 1994 DUI conviction prevent expungement of the 1990 BAC conviction, so the 1990 BAC conviction was expunged from the record. Further, under the 1987 version of 61-8-714, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent DUI conviction within the 5-year period following the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction nor did the 1990 BAC conviction prevent expungement of the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, so the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction was also expunged from the record, making the 1994 DUI conviction the only prior conviction that could be counted to support the felony DUI charge. Thus, under 3-10-303, the Justice's Court retained jurisdiction of the misdemeanor 1996 offense and the District Court erred in denying Sidmore's motion to dismiss the felony DUI charge for lack of jurisdiction. (Expungement provision deleted from 61-8-714 in 1989.) St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558, 54 St. Rep. 1381 (1997).

Allegation of Uncounseled Waiver of Right to Attorney — Burden of Proof — Testimony of Routine of City Judge Held to Create Triable Issue of Fact: Olson moved to dismiss a felony DUI charge based upon his affidavit that in his previous DUI convictions, he was not represented by counsel and was not told that he could have a court-appointed attorney. In response to Olson's affidavit, the state presented the testimony of the City Judge who convicted Olson on one of the previous DUI charges. The judge testified that although he had no specific recollection of Olson's case, he always asks defendants whether they understand their rights and always reads their rights from a prepared text that includes an advisement of the right to counsel. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to Rule 406, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), this testimony is substantive evidence that creates a triable issue of fact. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it held that this testimony was insufficient as a matter of law to create a triable issue of fact. St. v. Olson, 283 M 27, 938 P2d 1321, 54 St. Rep. 475 (1997), followed in St. v. Couture, 1998 MT 137, 289 M 215, 959 P2d 948, 55 St. Rep. 548 (1998), and St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856, 56 St. Rep. 1143 (1999). Olson was followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Record Failing to Show Specific Advisement of Right to Counsel Held Insufficient Basis for Penalty Enhancement: After three previous DUI convictions, Jenni was charged with felony DUI but moved to dismiss on the grounds that he had not been represented by an attorney and had not been advised of his right to counsel. Jenni submitted an affidavit signed by himself. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to its holding in St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), the burden shifted to the state to prove Jenni had been advised of his right to counsel and held that a court record showing that Jenni was generally advised of his rights, without specifically showing that he was advised of his right to counsel, fails to meet the state's burden. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the District Court's dismissal of the felony DUI charge. St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 472 (1997). Okland was followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Uncounseled Waiver of Rights Held No Basis for Enhanced DUI Penalty — Presumption of Regularity of Conviction — Burden of Proof: Okland was charged with his fourth DUI violation and, by virtue of 61-8-714 and this section, was charged with a felony. Okland filed a motion to dismiss the felony charges, asserting that because he was not represented by counsel at the three previous convictions and had not adequately been advised of his right to counsel, those convictions could not be used to enhance the penalty. With his motion, Okland submitted an affidavit and a record of his 1985 conviction in Lake County. The District Court dismissed the felony charge. The Supreme Court, relying upon United States Supreme Court cases, held that a presumption of regularity attaches to prior convictions during collateral attack and that therefore, even in the absence of a transcript or record, a rebuttable presumption attaches that the prior conviction is valid and a defendant who challenges the validity of the conviction has the burden of producing direct evidence of the conviction's invalidity. In this case, the Supreme Court noted that Okland did produce sufficient evidence to shift the burden to the state and that the copy of the letter produced by the state notifying Okland that he had to complete a financial statement before a court-appointed attorney would be appointed was insufficient to meet the state's burden of proof. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting the motion to dismiss the felony charges against Okland. St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), followed in St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 472 (1997), St. v. Perry, 283 M 34, 938 P2d 1325, 54 St. Rep. 478 (1997), St. v. Brown, 1999 MT 143, 295 M 5, 982 P2d 1030, 56 St. Rep. 560 (1999), St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856, 56 St. Rep. 1143 (1999), St. v. Anderson, 2001 MT 188, 306 M 243, 32 P3d 750 (2001), and St. v. Kvislen, 2003 MT 27, 314 M 176, 64 P3d 1006 (2003). Okland was also followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Criminal Endangerment Properly Charged in Arrest for Driving Under Influence — Constitutionality: Smaage had a history of seven DUI arrests when he was arrested again while driving with a blood alcohol level of 0.250. After review of his record of drinking and driving, Smaage was charged with criminal endangerment under 45-5-207, which Smaage contended was improper, rather than DUI under 61-8-401 or this section. Smaage also asserted that the criminal endangerment statute was unconstitutionally vague as applied to him because he was not given fair notice that driving after drinking was a felony crime. The Supreme Court found that the statutes were not conflicting, but rather were alternative charging statutes. The legislative history of the criminal endangerment statute indicated legislative intent in allowing use of that statute in prosecutions for DUI. Because the elements of criminal endangerment were present in this case due to Smaage's mental state of acting "knowingly", the conviction was affirmed. Further, with a history of DUI and negligent vehicular homicide, Smaage should have understood that his drunk driving created a substantial risk of bodily injury to others and was therefore proscribed. In light of Smaage's conduct, 45-5-207 is not unconstitutionally vague as applied to this case. St. v. Smaage, 276 M 94, 915 P2d 192, 53 St. Rep. 294 (1996), following U.S. v. Mazurie, 419 US 544, 42 L Ed 2d 706, 95 S Ct 710 (1975).

Justice's Court — No Authority to Vacate Conviction and Order Alteration of Driver's Civil Records: A Justice's Court does not have authority to vacate a conviction or to direct alteration of the records of the Division of Motor Vehicles. Therefore, a Justice's Court could not order the Division to strike a prior DUI conviction and not consider it in revoking the driver's license on a second conviction. The District Court properly granted the Division's motion to quash a Writ of Mandate issued by the District Court staying the actions of the Division. Lancaster v. Dept. of Justice, 218 M 97, 706 P2d 126, 42 St. Rep. 1425 (1985).

City Attorney — No Authority to Prosecute Third DUI or Per Se Violations Without Ordinance: A city attorney has no authority to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under 61-8-401 and 61-8-406. However, a city may adopt an ordinance pursuant to 61-8-401(5) that would empower the city attorney to prosecute third offense DUI or per se violations under such a city ordinance. 42 A.G. Op. 12 (1987).

DECISIONS UNDER PRESENT LAW

Felony DUI — Designation as Persistent Felony Offender Valid: The defendant was convicted in May 2009 of felony DUI and was charged with another felony DUI in August 2011. Prosecutors subsequently sought a persistent felony offender designation for the defendant, which was imposed by the District Court and upheld by the Supreme Court. According to the Supreme Court, the defendant was lawfully sentenced to 10 years in prison with no time suspended as a persistent felony offender. St. v. Kime, 2013 MT 14, 368 Mont. 261, 295 P.3d 580, distinguishing St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 Mont. 276, 119 P.3d 1194.

Idaho DUI Statute Similar to Montana DUI Statute — Enhancement of Charge Affirmed: The defendant was charged with felony DUI. He had three prior DUI convictions, two of which were from Idaho. The defendant argued that the Idaho convictions could not be applied to enhance the DUI charge because the Idaho DUI statute required a lesser degree of impairment and therefore was not sufficiently similar to the Montana statute. The District Court disagreed and the defendant appealed. In comparing the language of the two statutes, the Supreme Court found them not only similar, but nearly identical, and affirmed the District Court. St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Out-of-State DUI — No Conviction for Felony DUI Purposes: The suspended imposition of sentence that the defendant received following his plea of guilty to a DUI per se offense in South Dakota did not constitute a conviction for the purpose of enhancing the defendant's charges to a felony DUI because, pursuant to another South Dakota law to which Montana has no similar counterpart, the South Dakota suspended imposition of sentence was vacated and completely expunged from the defendant's record, thereby precluding it from counting as a previous conviction. St. v. Cleary, 2012 MT 113, 365 Mont. 142, 278 P.3d 1020.

No Notice of Withdrawal of Counsel — Trial and Conviction in Absentia — Denial of Due Process — Invalidity of Prior DUI Conviction — Reversed and Remanded for Sentencing as Misdemeanor: Charged with his fourth DUI, the defendant claimed that one of his previous DUI convictions was invalid because the District Court had allowed his counsel to withdraw immediately prior to his trial, and he was tried and convicted in absentia. The District Court concluded that the defendant's conviction was valid because he had willfully been absent from his trial. The Supreme Court, however, reversed, concluding that under 46-16-120, a defendant who is charged with a misdemeanor has a right to appear by counsel only. Therefore, when the court allowed the defendant's previous counsel to withdraw immediately before a trial in absentia, it deprived the defendant of his right to legal representation and due process. On that basis, the Supreme Court found that the previous conviction was invalid and remanded the matter, with the instruction to the District Court to sentence the defendant for a misdemeanor. St. v. Hass, 2011 MT 296, 363 Mont. 8, 265 P.3d 1221.

Affirmative Evidence Showing Violation of Rights Required to Prove Invalidity of Prior DUI Convictions — Felony DUI Conviction Upheld: The defendant, charged with his fourth DUI, claimed that two of his previous DUI convictions were invalid because he had not been advised of his right to counsel. Under St. v. Okland, 283 Mont. 10, 941 P.2d 431 (1997), and St. v. Jenni, 283 Mont. 21, 938 P.2d 1318 (1997), a defendant who challenges a prior conviction as unconstitutionally invalid must present direct evidence of irregularity in the prior proceeding. Here, the defendant provided documents related to the two prior convictions that did not clearly designate that he had been advised of his right to counsel. However, none of the documents affirmatively demonstrated that he had not been advised of his right to counsel. Because the documents were inconclusive, the District Court determined that the defendant had failed to meet his burden of proof to rebut the presumption that the prior convictions were valid. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a defendant who challenges prior convictions must present evidence affirmatively showing a conviction was invalid and that a silent or ambiguous record is insufficient. St. v. Chaussee, 2011 MT 203, 361 Mont. 433, 259 P.3d 783. See also St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 Mont. 173, 103 P.3d 503, St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 Mont. 221, 136 P.3d 543, and St. v. Maine, 2011 MT 90, 360 Mont. 182, 255 P.3d 64.

Failure of Defendant to Present Evidence of Constitutionally Infirm Prior DUI Conviction — Motion to Invalidate Prior Conviction Properly Denied: The burden of proof is on the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the prior conviction is constitutionally infirm. The defendant may not meet this burden by pointing to doubt or uncertainty in the record but must present affirmative evidence confirming that the prior conviction was obtained in violation of the constitution. St. v. Maine, 2011 MT 90, 360 Mont. 182, 255 P.3d 64, followed in St. v. Chesterfield, 2011 MT 256, 362 Mont. 243, 262 P.3d 1109, in which the Supreme Court, relying upon Maine and St. v. Chaussee, 2011 MT 203, 361 Mont. 433, 259 P.3d 783, held that the defendant failed to meet his burden of proof in demonstrating that his three prior DUI convictions were constitutionally infirm. The defendant's evidence, court records (which were silent as to whether the defendant knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waived his right to counsel) and an affidavit (in which the defendant could not recall whether he had waived his constitutional rights), did not constitute affirmative evidence that actually demonstrated his prior DUI convictions were constitutionally infirm.

DUI Chargeable as Fourth Offense Despite Previous Third DUI Charged as Second Offense Under Plea Agreement: Blue was arrested for DUI twice in 1995 and again in 2000. The charging documents in the 2000 case listed the offense as DUI third offense, but as part of a plea agreement, the prosecutor amended the charge to DUI second offense, and Blue pleaded guilty and was sentenced in 2001. Blue was arrested for DUI again in 2007 and charged with fourth offense felony DUI. Blue asserted that because the 2001 charge was amended to DUI second offense, he could not be charged with a fourth offense in 2007. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 61-8-734, all previous convictions must be used in determining whether a fourth offense was committed. However, the title placed on the charge was not considered material to counting the number of offenses under the statutory scheme for DUI sentencing. Despite the characterization of the 2001 offense as DUI second offense for plea bargain purposes, Blue was in fact convicted of three prior DUIs when charged in 2007, so the felony fourth offense was properly charged. St. v. Blue, 2009 MT 304, 352 M 382, 217 P3d 82 (2009).

DUI Punishment Statutes Not Violative of Equal Protection: Blue contended that the statutory scheme for DUI sentencing, allowing different punishments for the first through third offenses and felony sentencing for a fourth DUI, violated equal protection under the Montana Constitution. The Supreme Court disagreed. The Montana Constitution does not include a right to be sentenced without regard to prior convictions. The assumption that a prior offender is a greater danger to the public is reasonable. Under Montana law, even if the highest degree of equal protection analysis was applied requiring the state to show a compelling interest in the DUI punishment statutes, that interest exists as a matter of law. Therefore, the DUI statutes withstood analysis and do not violate the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. St. v. Blue, 2009 MT 304, 352 M 382, 217 P3d 82 (2009).

DUI Sentencing Scheme Reasonably Related to Rehabilitation and Protection of Society — Felony DUI Considered Constitutionally Appropriate: Blue asserted that the DUI sentencing scheme violated the constitutional provision that punishment for crime must be based on principles of prevention, reformation, public safety, and restitution for victims. The Supreme Court noted that rather than escalating punishment for the same offense, the DUI statutes provide discrete punishments for discrete convictions, and that it is within the power of the Legislature to distinguish among criminal offenses and to establish punishments. The DUI sentencing limitations and conditions are reasonably related to the objectives of rehabilitation and protection of the victim and society, and the enhanced penalty for felony DUI is a constitutionally appropriate sentence. St. v. Blue, 2009 MT 304, 352 M 382, 217 P3d 82 (2009), distinguishing Missoula v. Shea, 202 M 286, 661 P2d 410 (1983). See also St. v. Bruns, 213 M 372, 691 P2d 817 (1984).

Failure of Defendant to Present Evidence of Constitutionally Infirm Prior DUI Conviction — Motion to Withdraw Guilty Plea Properly Denied: Robinson pleaded guilty to a fourth DUI and later moved to withdraw the plea, but the motion was denied. On appeal, Robinson contended that the plea was not voluntary and that the District Court improperly accepted the plea because one of the prior convictions was unconstitutionally infirm. However, when the plea was offered, Robinson voluntarily admitted to three prior DUIs and that he was pleading guilty to a felony. The District Court was not required to extract an admission regarding every element of the crime. It was sufficient that the court ensured that Robinson admitted the acts that constituted the offense. It was Robinson's obligation to present the District Court with any evidence regarding irregularities in prior convictions. Since he did not do so, there was nothing in the record to support that argument, and the District Court was affirmed. St. v. Robinson, 2009 MT 170, 350 M 493, 208 P3d 851 (2009). See also St. v. Frazier, 2007 MT 40, 336 M 81, 153 P3d 18 (2007).

Plea Colloquy Sufficient — Motion to Withdraw Plea Properly Denied: Robinson pleaded guilty to DUI fourth offense in 2006. Pursuant to a plea agreement, sentencing was deferred for 1 year, provided Robinson paid child support during that year. Just prior to sentencing, Robinson moved to withdraw the guilty plea on grounds that the plea colloquy was inadequate, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. When accepting a plea, it is sufficient that the District Court ensure that defendant admits committing the acts that constitute the crime charged. In this case, the plea colloquy was sufficient. The District Court was affirmed. St. v. Robinson, 2009 MT 170, 350 M 493, 208 P3d 851 (2009).

Combined Sentence and Judgment Equals Error: The District Court imposed an illegal sentence when sentencing defendant on a petition to revoke a sentence for burglary and on a new felony DUI charge because the court imposed a total fine in excess of the statutory limit for the latter charge. St. v. Dennison, 2008 MT 344, 346 M 295, 194 P3d 704, (2008).

Defendant's Right to Counsel and Right to Trial Not Violated During Four Prior DUI Prosecutions — Enhancement of New DUI Charge to Felony Proper: Walker's 2005 DUI arrest was enhanced to a felony charge when driving records indicated that Walker had six prior DUI convictions. Walker alleged that four of the prior convictions were constitutionally infirm because Walker had not been advised of the right to counsel, the right to compel attendance of witnesses, the right to a trial by a jury, and penalty enhancement provisions. The District Court concluded that the four convictions did not violate Walker's constitutional rights and held that the prior convictions could be used to enhance the 2005 DUI to a felony. Walker appealed, and the Supreme Court considered each assertion in turn to determine whether Walker's waiver of the right to counsel and right to trial during the prior prosecutions was made knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily. The initial appearance/arraignment documents that Walker signed after being charged with the prior DUI offenses adequately informed Walker of the right to counsel, and Walker indicated an understanding of that right and that an attorney was not desired. A waiver of rights form and a waiver of counsel form that Walker signed evidenced that understanding. It was also sufficient that Walker was informed of the right to call witnesses to attend the proceedings, even though the Constitution does not confer a right to compel witnesses to testify. Walker was also adequately informed of the right to a trial by jury and to a unanimous verdict, but it was unnecessary for the District Court to explain all the nuances or effects of waiving the right to a trial by jury. Lastly, the documents informed Walker that there might be indirect consequences of a guilty plea, including the possible loss of driving privileges and the use of the conviction in the event Walker was convicted of a crime in the future, but the District Court was not required to specifically inform Walker of the indirect consequence that a fourth or subsequent DUI might result in a felony charge, because whether Walker committed a fourth or subsequent DUI was clearly within Walker's sole control and was an indirect consequence of guilty pleas to the prior DUI offenses. Thus, Walker's prior guilty pleas were entered knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily, and the District Court did not err in allowing the use of the prior convictions to elevate Walker's 2005 DUI to a felony. St. v. Walker, 2008 MT 244, 344 M 477, 188 P3d 1069 (2008).

Error for District Court to Impose Parole Conditions for Felony DUI — Error Harmless Given That No Parole Available: The District Court sentenced Kampf to 13 months with the Department of Corrections for felony DUI, followed by a suspended term of 2 years with the Department. The court then attached 25 conditions on the sentence during any term of parole or probation. Kampf contended that the court was without authority to impose conditions on any time period when Kampf might be released on parole. Citing St. v. Burch, 2008 MT 118, 342 M 499, 182 P3d 66 (2008), the Supreme Court agreed. Other than in limited and expressly authorized instances, such as for sexual and violent offenders, sentencing courts do not have a residual or inherent authority to generally impose parole conditions. Felony DUI is not a sexual or violent offense, so the District Court had no authority to impose parole conditions. However, pursuant to 61-8-731, the imposition or execution of the 13-month sentence for felony DUI may not be deferred or suspended and the offender is not eligible for parole, so even though Kampf's sentence containing parole conditions was illegal, the error was harmless because parole was unavailable. St. v. Kampf, 2008 MT 198, 344 M 69, 186 P3d 223 (2008).

Failure to Establish Constitutional Invalidity of Prior DUI Conviction — Use of Conviction to Enhance DUI to Felony Affirmed: Kampf was charged with felony DUI based on three prior convictions, but Kampf asserted that one of the prior convictions was invalid because he was not informed of the right to counsel. The District Court considered the issue, but concluded that the state presented evidence establishing that the prior conviction was not obtained in violation of Kampf's constitutional rights. In support of his argument on appeal, Kampf offered a conclusory statement that he had presented sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of regularity attached to the prior conviction, but he did not specifically challenge any of the District Court's findings or conclusions, nor did he provide any legal authority supporting a challenge. The Supreme Court declined to guess at Kampf's precise argument or to develop any legal analysis to support Kampf's position and instead affirmed the District Court's conclusion that the prior conviction was constitutionally valid for purposes of enhancing the DUI to a felony. St. v. Kampf, 2008 MT 198, 344 M 69, 186 P3d 223 (2008).

Conviction Not Entered in Violation of Defendant's Right to Be Present at Trial — Use of Prior DUI Conviction to Support Felony DUI Charge Not Error: The state sought to use three prior DUI convictions to enhance Weaver's 2005 DUI charge to felony DUI, fourth offense. Weaver contended that use of the prior 1996 conviction was constitutionally infirm because he had been tried in absentia in violation of his right to be present at the proceedings and that any waiver of that right had to be proved to be knowing, voluntary, and specific as required by 46-16-122. Because Weaver swore on direct examination that he did not have notice of the 1996 trial date, the burden shifted to the state to provide direct evidence that the 1996 conviction was not entered in violation of Weaver's rights. The Supreme Court concluded that the state met its burden. Oral and documentary evidence showed that either Weaver knew of the 1996 trial date and was willfully absent or he kept himself deliberately ignorant of the trial date, thus waiving the right to be present. When a defendant's failure to know of a continued trial date is directly attributable to the defendant's efforts to keep himself ignorant of that date, the defendant may not later complain about a lack of knowledge. Thus, the 1996 conviction was not entered in violation of Weaver's right to be present, and the District Court correctly ruled that the 1996 conviction could be used to support a charge of felony DUI. St. v. Weaver, 2008 MT 86, 342 M 196, 179 P3d 534 (2008), following U.S. v. Houtchens, 926 F2d 824 (9th Cir. 1991).

Revocation of Suspended Felony DUI Sentence — Erroneous Order to Serve Time at State Prison: After pleading guilty to a felony DUI committed in 2000, Oie was sentenced to the Department of Corrections for 13 months, followed by 4 years of supervised release with conditions. Oie was subsequently apprehended on several occasions for violating probation conditions, and the state moved to revoke Oie's suspended sentence. The District Court gave Oie credit for time served and sentenced Oie to 4 years at the state prison. Oie appealed the sentence, arguing that under the 1999 version of this section in effect at the time of the original offense, the District Court could not impose a sentence that was greater than the remainder of the probationary term. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed. The specific provisions of subsection (5) of this section (1999) governed the imposition of a sentence upon the revocation of Oie's suspended sentence and limited the District Court to either continuing the period of probation or requiring Oie to serve the remainder of the probation sentence. A 4-year prison sentence was outside statutory parameters, and the case was remanded for resentencing consistent with the applicable statute. St. v. Oie, 2007 MT 328, 340 M 205, 174 P3d 937 (2007), following St. v. Webb, 2005 MT 5, 325 M 317, 106 P3d 521 (2005).

Consideration of Sentencing Factors in Sentencing Persistent Felony Offender Not Violative of Right to Trial by Jury: Following conviction for an eighth DUI, Vaughn was sentenced as a persistent felony offender to a 50-year term in the state prison. Relying on the proposition in Blakely v. Wash., 542 US 296 (2004), that factual findings that serve to enhance a sentence beyond the statutory maximum must be determined by a jury beyond a reasonable doubt, Vaughn appealed the felony sentence, asserting that the 50-year sentence imposed under 46-18-502 served to enhance the sentence beyond the maximum 13-month commitment to the Department of Corrections followed by a suspended sentence of up to 5 years authorized for felony DUI in this section and that therefore the persistent felony offender sentence should have been determined by a jury on the facts. The Supreme Court first noted that the Blakely proposition applies to a fact other than the fact of a prior conviction and that it is the fact of a defendant's prior felony conviction that authorizes an enhanced sentence under 46-18-501 and 46-18-502. Here, Vaughn's enhanced felony DUI sentence was based on the sentencing court's finding that Vaughn had a prior felony DUI conviction. That factual determination may properly be made by the sentencing court rather than by a jury. The prior DUI was a sentencing factor that was an aggravating or mitigating circumstance supporting the imposition of a sentence within the range authorized for a persistent felony offender. Thus, Vaughn's right to a trial by jury was not violated by the sentencing court's findings of fact in support of a sentence as a persistent felony offender. The sentence was affirmed. St. v. Vaughn, 2007 MT 164, 338 M 97, 164 P3d 873 (2007). See also Apprendi v. N.J., 530 US 466 (2000).

No Absolute Right to Counsel in Tribal Court — Tribal DUI Conviction Properly Considered for Purposes of Charging Felony DUI in State Court: Walker was charged with felony DUI based on four prior convictions. Walker challenged two of the prior convictions—one in Justice's Court in Garfield County and one in tribal court on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation—and asserted that in both cases, no confirmation had been made regarding Walker's right to counsel. The Supreme Court did not address the Garfield County conviction because the tribal court was dispositive. The standards of tribal law rather than federal or state constitutional law applied to the Fort Belknap case. Congress extended many of the protections in the federal Bill of Rights to Native Americans in the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968 (ICRA), 25 U.S.C. 1301, et seq., but ICRA does not contain a provision extending the right to counsel to tribal court proceedings. Thus, no absolute right to counsel exists in tribal court unless a tribe provides for that right. Walker could cite no tribal code provision extending him the right to counsel in 1992 when the case was heard and therefore could not argue the irregularity of the tribal court case on right to counsel grounds. The District Court did not err in applying the tribal court conviction to Walker's accumulated prior convictions for purposes of charging felony DUI under this section. St. v. Walker, 2007 MT 34, 336 M 56, 153 P3d 614 (2007), following St. v. Spotted Eagle, 2003 MT 172, 316 M 370, 71 P3d 1239 (2003).

Sufficient Documentary Evidence of Validity of Prior DUI Per Se Convictions — Enhancement to Felony Affirmed: Smerker contended that two prior DUI convictions in Justice's Court were constitutionally invalid because he never pleaded guilty to the offenses and that it was therefore improper to use evidence of the prior convictions to enhance the present DUI charge to a felony. Under St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 M 173, 103 P3d 503 (2004), a defendant who challenges a prior conviction as unconstitutionally invalid must present direct evidence of irregularity in the prior proceeding. Smerker's affidavit unequivocally stated that, notwithstanding the Justice's Court's judgments, Smerker at no time pleaded guilty to the charges, which constituted direct evidence of irregularity in the Justice's Court proceedings and shifted the burden to the state to prove that the prior convictions were not obtained in violation of Smerker's rights. The state then introduced documentation from the Justice's Court proceedings, including a signed plea bargain agreement, that provided that the state would amend the two DUI charges to DUI per se and recommend a specified sentence in exchange for Smerker's guilty pleas to the amended charges. Thus, the state met its burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that Smerker pleaded guilty to two DUI per se charges and that the convictions were not obtained in violation of Smerker's rights. The prior misdemeanor convictions were properly used to enhance the present DUI to a felony, and Smerker's felony DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Smerker, 2006 MT 117, 332 M 221, 136 P3d 543 (2006).

District Court Retention of Criminal Jurisdiction — State's Appeal of Order Granting Driving Privileges Not Timely: A condition of Jivelekas's sentence for felony DUI and misdemeanor driving with a revoked or suspended license provided that Jivelekas could not drive unless approval was granted by the sentencing court or Jivelekas's supervising officer. Nearly 2 years after Jivelekas completed all terms of his sentence, he asked the District Court for approval to operate a motor vehicle in order to maintain full-time employment. The state contended that because this section required that Jivelekas's probation officer authorize motor vehicle operation, the District Court did not have jurisdiction to consider Jivelekas's motion. The Supreme Court disagreed. Even if the District Court exceeded its statutory authority in imposing the sentence condition, the court still retained jurisdiction to entertain Jivelekas's motion. Additionally, the Supreme Court was precluded from addressing the merits of the state's argument because the state failed to file a timely appeal pursuant to former Rule 5(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so the appeal was time-barred. St. v. Jivelekas, 2005 MT 277, 329 M 204, 122 P3d 1248 (2005), following Pena v. St., 2004 MT 293, 323 M 347, 100 P3d 154 (2004).

Failure to Raise Legality of Sentence on Direct Appeal — Postconviction Consideration Barred: Osborne was convicted of a fourth DUI in 1999, and when charged with felony DUI in 2003, the state sought to have Osborne declared a persistent felony offender. The District Court obliged, and Osborne was declared a persistent felony offender and sentenced to 10 years in prison with 5 years suspended. Osborne did not appeal the sentence directly, but filed a petition for postconviction relief, asserting that the sentence was not legal. The petition was denied, and Osborne appealed. The state argued that the Supreme Court was procedurally barred under 46-21-105 from considering the petition because the legal challenge to the sentence could have been raised on direct appeal. Osborne asserted that because the state did not raise the procedural bar issue in District Court, that argument was waived. Although the Supreme Court as a rule does not consider issues raised for the first time on appeal, this general rule does not preclude consideration of jurisdictional questions raised for the first time on appeal. The procedural bar is jurisdictional, so the court considered the state's argument, concluding that lack of subject matter jurisdiction may not be waived and that 46-21-105 represents a jurisdictional limit on courts' ability to entertain and decide petitions for postconviction relief and effectively prohibits courts from exercising jurisdiction over grounds for relief that could have been raised on direct appeal. Thus, Osborne's failure to challenge the legality of the sentence on direct appeal precluded consideration in a postconviction petition. St. v. Osborne, 2005 MT 264, 329 M 95, 124 P3d 1085 (2005).

Prior DUI Convictions Affirmed in Absence of Direct Evidence of Irregularity — Presumption of Regularity of Prior Convictions: Snell contended that it was improper for the state to use two prior DUI convictions to elevate a new DUI charge to a felony based on the fact that the prior convictions were invalid because Snell was not informed of the right to counsel. Although the state may not use a constitutionally infirm conviction to support an enhanced punishment, a defendant must overcome the presumption of the regularity of the prior convictions with direct evidence of irregularity. However, Snell was unable to recall facts about the judges involved in both prior DUI cases, casting considerable doubt on his ability to recall other critical details in those cases. The District Court correctly held that Snell's testimony was not sufficient to overcome the presumption of regularity through direct evidence and that the prior convictions were therefore constitutionally firm. Denial of the dismissal motion was affirmed. St. v. Snell, 2004 MT 334, 324 M 173, 103 P3d 503 (2004). See also St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856 (1999), St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003), and St. v. Chaussee, 2011 MT 203, 361 Mont. 433, 259 P.3d 783.

Use of Prior DUI Convictions in Washington to Enhance Montana DUI to Felony: The District Court used Hall's three prior DUI convictions in Washington to enhance Hall's Montana conviction to a felony. Hall appealed on grounds that Montana and Washington laws were too dissimilar to allow enhancement of Hall's Montana DUI. The Supreme Court examined both states' statutes and concluded that a person convicted of violating the Washington law committed an offense for which each subsection of the Washington statute had an analogous statute in Montana. The laws were held to be sufficiently similar to allow felony enhancement in this case, and Hall's fourth offense Montana conviction was affirmed. St. v. Hall, 2004 MT 106, 321 M 78, 88 P3d 1273 (2004).

Error in Failure to Consider Defendant's Ability to Pay Costs of Aftercare Program — Remand: In its oral sentence, the sentencing court ordered Mingus to pay the costs of the required aftercare program, but the court did not mention Mingus's ability to pay, although the subsequent written sentencing order did require consideration of Mingus's financial ability to pay. The oral sentence controlled, and because the sentencing court did not make the requisite findings regarding Mingus's ability to pay aftercare costs, the case was remanded for resentencing. St. v. Mingus, 2004 MT 24, 319 M 349, 84 P3d 658 (2004).

Imposition of Mandatory Statutory Fine Without Specifying Payment Schedule or Consideration of Ability to Pay Not Erroneous: Mingus was convicted of DUI and fined the statutory minimum $1,000, as required in this section. The fine was statutorily mandated and clearly within statutory parameters. Mingus asserted error because the sentencing court did not inquire into his ability to pay, as required in 46-18-231, or establish a payment schedule, as allowed in 46-18-234. The Supreme Court disagreed. Ability to pay and consideration of a payment schedule apply only to discretionary fines, not statutorily mandated fines. When a fine is mandated, the sentencing court has no discretion whether to impose the fine, irrespective of defendant's ability to pay, nor is a sentencing court required to establish a payment schedule or specify when a mandatory fine must be paid under this section. St. v. Mingus, 2004 MT 24, 319 M 349, 84 P3d 658 (2004).

Use of Prior Uncounseled Tribal Court DUI Convictions to Enhance State DUI to Felony: Defendant was charged with felony DUI, but contended that his prior convictions could not be used to enhance the charge because the previous convictions were uncounseled convictions in tribal court. The Supreme Court disagreed. Whether a prior uncounseled conviction may be used to enhance a subsequent misdemeanor turns on whether the prior conviction was valid at its inception. Prior convictions are presumed valid, and once a prior conviction is established, the burden falls on defendant to prove that the prior conviction was invalid. Here, defendant's prior convictions were valid under Blackfeet law and federal law. Thus, pursuant to federal law and the comity afforded tribal judgments and with deference to tribal sovereignty, defendant's prior convictions were available to enhance the state charge to felony DUI. St. v. Spotted Eagle, 2003 MT 172, 316 M 370, 71 P3d 1239 (2003), followed in St. v. Walker, 2007 MT 34, 336 M 56, 153 P3d 614 (2007). See also Scott v. Ill., 440 US 367 (1979).

Failure to Apply Apprendi Rationale to Felony DUI Not Erroneous: Under Apprendi v. N.J., 530 US 466 (2000), any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum, other than the fact of a prior conviction, must be submitted to a jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Weldele contended that the District Court erred in failing to apply Apprendi and that his fourth DUI conviction could not be enhanced to a felony because the state failed to charge and prove beyond a reasonable doubt the three prior DUI convictions. The Supreme Court found no error. It was the prior convictions alone that led to Weldele's enhanced penalty, so it was unnecessary to submit the fact of the prior convictions to a jury. Further, Weldele was not found guilty of another offense for which he had not been charged, nor did the sentence exceed the statutory maximum, so Apprendi did not apply. St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003).

Use of 1984, 1987, and 1991 DUI Convictions to Enhance 2000 DUI Offense to Felony: Weldele was convicted of DUI in 1984, 1987, 1991, and 2000. Weldele argued that because more than 5 years had elapsed between any of the prior convictions and the present offense, under the version of 61-8-714 in effect during the 1984 and 1987 convictions, evidence of the 1984 and 1987 convictions could not be used to enhance the 2000 charge to a felony. However, because the 1987 conviction followed the 1984 conviction by only 3 years, the 1984 conviction did not qualify for expungement and remained on Weldele's record. The 1989 version of 61-8-714 informed Weldele that if he remained DUI-free for 5 years after the 1991 conviction, the 1991 conviction would not be expunged, but rather would become confidential criminal justice information subject to review by a court. In 1995, 61-8-714 was again amended to create the felony sanction for fourth and subsequent DUIs, so Weldele was on notice as of 1995 that all of the prior convictions would be counted for sentencing purposes. A 1997 revision created separate felony DUI sanctions, again putting Weldele on notice that a fourth offense would constitute a felony. Thus, there was no due process or ex post facto issue here, and the accurate and lawful application of the statutes in effect at the time of Weldele's convictions allowed for the enhancement of his sentence based on the complete record of four DUIs. St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003).

Direct Evidence Rebutting Presumption of Regularity of Prior DUI Convictions — Remand for Evidentiary Hearing for Determination of Validity of Prior Conviction: Kvislen was charged with felony DUI based on three prior convictions. Kvislen moved to dismiss on grounds that one of the prior convictions was entered in derogation of his constitutional rights and thus could not be used to elevate the present charge to a felony. Kvislen filed an affidavit prior to trial averring that he never received notice of the prior trial and was convicted without being informed of the right to counsel. After providing the District Court with arguments to the contrary, the state moved to dismiss. The District Court, without conducting an evidentiary hearing to weigh Kvislen's affidavit against the assertions made by the state, concluded that Kvislen had not sufficiently rebutted the presumption of regularity that attaches to prior convictions and dismissed the motion, and Kvislen appealed. Citing St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431 (1997), and St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318 (1997), the Supreme Court noted that although a rebuttable presumption of regularity attaches to prior convictions, that presumption may be overcome by direct evidence of irregularity, and once defendant offers direct evidence, the burden shifts to the state to prove that the prior conviction was not obtained in violation of defendant's rights. Here, the state conceded that Kvislen's averments met the technical definition of direct evidence and that the state relied on insufficient evidence and failed to meet its burden of proof. Instead of denying the motion to dismiss, the District Court should have shifted the burden to the state and allowed the state to submit evidence showing that Kvislen's rights were not violated. The proper forum for consideration of the issue was through an evidentiary hearing, and the Supreme Court remanded the case for that purpose. St. v. Kvislen, 2003 MT 27, 314 M 176, 64 P3d 1006 (2003).

Administration of Breath Test Not Mandatory: Beanblossom was arrested for felony DUI and was read an implied consent advisory. When asked if he would consent to a breath test, Beanblossom consented, but the test was never administered. Beanblossom moved to dismiss the charge based on the officer's failure to administer the test, contending that the language of 61-8-402 mandatorily required administration of the test, and that failure to do so violated his due process rights. The motion was denied, and Beanblossom appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a driver in Montana is presumed to have consented to taking a breath test if an officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the driver is intoxicated. However, the language in 61-8-402(2) merely mandates who must administer a breath test, but does not mandate administration of the test. Thus, denial of Beanblossom's motion to dismiss was not erroneous. St. v. Beanblossom, 2002 MT 351, 313 M 394, 61 P3d 165 (2002). See also St. v. Entzel, 805 P2d 228 (Wash. 1991).

New Trial — General Rule Prohibiting Admission of Juror Testimony — Exception for Extraneous Prejudicial Information: Following Lawlor's conviction for felony DUI, Lawlor moved for a new trial, alleging that during deliberations a juror improperly offered to other jurors an opinion relating to Lawlor's prior DUI convictions, references to which had been precluded by a motion in limine. The District Court denied the new trial motion, and Lawlor appealed. Rule 606, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), generally forbids the admission of juror testimony for purposes of ordering a new trial, but one exception hinges on whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention. Examples of impermissible extraneous information and external influence include: (1) telephoning a relative with regard to previous litigation by the plaintiff; (2) visiting the scene of an accident; (3) conducting experiments and informing the jury of the findings; (4) receiving evidence outside of court; (5) bringing a newspaper article into the jury room and showing it to the jury; (6) the jury's use of demonstrative evidence and experimentation with evidence; (7) pressure from other jurors; and (8) knowledge and information shared from one juror to another. In this case, comments by the juror in question derived from that juror's general knowledge of the criminal justice system when the juror mentioned that felony DUI cases are tried in District Court. The comment was internal and not an external influence subject to the exception in Rule 606, M.R.Ev., so the District Court properly denied Lawlor's motion for a new trial based on the juror affidavit. St. v. Lawlor, 2002 MT 235, 311 M 493, 56 P3d 863 (2002). See also St. v. Kelman, 276 M 253, 915 P2d 854 (1996).

Prior DUI Convictions Properly Used to Enhance Sentence: The District Court used three prior DUI convictions to sentence Jackson for felony DUI. Jackson contended that use of two of the prior convictions was improper because he waived his right to counsel in one case and because he did not have an attorney in another case. However, when a defendant collaterally attacks a prior conviction, a presumption of regularity attaches to the conviction and failure to sign a waiver of rights does not constitute reversible error but is merely a factor to be considered in the totality of the circumstances. Here, the state provided sufficient proof for the court to rely on the prior convictions in sentencing, and the court did not err in doing so. St. v. Jackson, 2002 MT 212, 311 M 281, 54 P3d 990 (2002).

Driving While Ability Impaired in Colorado Not Similar to Driving Under the Influence in Montana — Felony DUI Sentence Reversed — Montanye Reversed: The District Court found that Colorado law was substantially similar to Montana's DUI statute, and based on McNally's four prior DWAI convictions in Colorado, the court sentenced McNally for felony DUI. McNally appealed on grounds that the Colorado convictions did not constitute previous convictions under a similar statute for purposes of determining the number of prior DUI convictions under Montana law. The Supreme Court examined Colorado law and agreed with McNally. Colorado law allows a person to be convicted for DUI if the person's ability is impaired to the slightest degree, which is a lower standard than Montana law. Therefore, McNally's prior Colorado convictions did not qualify as convictions for purposes of enhancing McNally's conviction to a felony, and McNally's felony conviction was reversed. St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002), following Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224 (1986), and overruling Montanye v. St., 262 M 258, 864 P2d 1234 (1993). However, see St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110, ruling that Montana and Idaho DUI statutes were sufficiently similar to uphold felony sentence.

District Court Jurisdiction to Apply Persistent Felony Offender Designation to Felony DUI: Yorek pleaded guilty to and was sentenced on a felony DUI charge. The District Court determined that it had jurisdiction and imposed a persistent felony offender designation. Yorek sought postconviction relief on grounds that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to impose a persistent felony offender designation for felony DUI. The District Court denied the petition for postconviction relief, concluding that sentencing for felony DUI is not solely governed by 61-8-734 and this section, that nothing in the persistent felony offender statute excludes felony DUI offenders from its application, and that Yorek waived any jurisdiction claim by pleading guilty. The Supreme Court affirmed. Nothing in 46-18-502 distinguishes between or among the types of felonies to which it applies, or excludes DUI offenders. Rather, if the underlying charge meets the definition of a felony and if the state has provided proper notice of its intent to seek persistent felony offender status under 46-13-108, a District Court has the statutory authority to designate and sentence an offender as a persistent felony offender. Yorek's crime met the definition of a felony, and Yorek fell squarely within the persistent felony offender statute. The state met the notice provisions, and the District Court possessed subject matter jurisdiction to designate Yorek as a persistent felony offender. Because the jurisdiction question was dispositive, the Supreme Court did not reach the question of whether Yorek's guilty plea was a procedural bar against bringing the claim. St. v. Yorek, 2002 MT 74, 309 M 238, 45 P3d 872 (2002), followed in St. v. Pettijohn, 2002 MT 75, 309 M 244, 45 P3d 870 (2002), and St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 M 276, 119 P3d 1194 (2005).

Showing of Irregularity in Prior DUI Conviction Based on Failure to Inform Defendant of Right to Counsel — Remand for Further Findings Whether Prior Conviction Applicable to Felony DUI Charge: Peterson was charged with fourth offense felony DUI. Peterson collaterally challenged the felony status of the charge, asserting that two previous misdemeanor convictions were constitutionally insufficient because he was not properly informed of the right to counsel, and moved to dismiss. The motion was denied after the District Court found that Peterson was properly informed in both prior instances. Peterson appealed. It was conceded that Peterson met his burden to show direct evidence of irregularity because he testified that he was not informed of the right to counsel or appointed counsel at either conviction, so the Supreme Court had to determine whether the District Court erroneously found that the state met its burden by a preponderance of the evidence to show that Peterson was properly informed of his rights in each of the prior pleas. The court found that Peterson was properly informed of his rights in one case, but because the District Court did not address the inconsistency in the testimony of the judge involved in the other conviction and resolve whether Peterson was actually represented by counsel, the case was remanded for further proceedings regarding the conviction in question. DECISIONS UNDER 1997 THROUGH 1999 VERSIONS OF LAW

Remainder of Sentence Not to Include Absconsion Time — Defendant Subject to Unpaid Fines: While the defendant was on probation, he absconded from supervision and left the state. Eight years later, he was returned to Montana after serving time in Kansas. He argued that under this section, he could not properly be sentenced to any more prison time because more time had elapsed between his release from prison and the revocation hearing than the period of probation he was originally sentenced to serve. The Supreme Court rejected this argument, finding that the phrase "remainder of the probation sentence" does not include any time during which the probationer absconds from supervision. In addition, although the District Court did not mention the reimposition of unpaid fines and fees from the underlying sentence in the oral judgment but did impose them in the written judgment, all original conditions not specifically altered by the judgment would remain in effect. Therefore, the written judgment did not increase the punishment imposed on the defendant. St. v. Sullivant, 2013 MT 200, 371 Mont. 91, 305 P.3d 838.

Minor's Prior DUI in City Court Properly Applied to Felony DUI Charge — No Violation of Constitutional Rights in City Court: Allen was arrested for a felony fourth DUI in 2004. Calculation of the number of DUIs included Allen's first arrest in 1997 as a minor, to which Allen pleaded guilty in City Court. Allen contended that it was improper to include the 1997 conviction in the total because that conviction was constitutionally infirm in that the City Court failed to advise him of his rights, including the right to counsel, and accepted his guilty plea without consent of a parent. Allen further contended that as a minor he was incapable of knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waiving the right to counsel. The Supreme Court disagreed. City Court records provided direct evidence that Allen's 1997 conviction was not obtained in violation of Allen's constitutional rights, and Allen failed to rebut the presumption of regularity that attached to the 1997 conviction. With specific regard to the right to counsel argument, the court noted that because the Youth Court does not have concurrent jurisdiction with the City Court over traffic violations, including DUIs, Allen was incorrect in claiming that the right to counsel could only have been waived by Allen and a parent at the 1997 proceedings. Therefore, application of Allen's 1997 conviction in calculating a felony DUI was not error. St. v. Allen, 2009 MT 124, 350 M 204, 206 P3d 951 (2009).

Failure to Rebut Presumption of Regularity Attached to Prior DUI Conviction — Felony DUI Conviction Affirmed: Keenan was charged in 1999 with fourth lifetime offense felony DUI based on prior convictions in 1986, 1990, and 1995. Keenan moved to dismiss or amend the charge, asserting that the 1990 conviction was constitutionally infirm because Keenan could not recall, and the record did not show, that Keenan asserted or waived the right to counsel. However, Keenan's inability to recall whether the right to counsel was waived did not constitute direct evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption of regularity, even in the face of a silent record. Because Keenan was unable to rebut the presumption of regularity, the 1990 conviction was considered constitutionally sound, and the 1999 conviction was affirmed. St. v. Keenan, 2003 MT 190, 316 M 493, 74 P3d 1037 (2003).

Imprisonment for Probation Violation Not Considered Double Jeopardy: Walker was convicted of felony DUI, sentenced to 6 months in prison followed by 2 years of supervised probation, and fined $1,000. Following 6 months' confinement, Walker was released and began serving the probationary sentence but violated the terms of probation about 1 year later. During revocation hearings, Walker contended that additional incarceration pursuant to this section for probation violations would constitute double jeopardy because the entirety of the 6 months' prison term had already been served. The District Court disagreed, revoked probation, and committed Walker to the Department of Corrections for the time remaining on the original 2-year probation. Walker appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court found no distinction between the revocation of a suspended sentence and the revocation of a probationary sentence. In either case, the subsequent conduct, not the original offense, forms the basis for revocation, and the sentencing court retains jurisdiction over the defendant during the period of probation. Walker conceded that this section provides by its terms for revocation of probation and for incarceration upon violation of probation. The revocation is not new punishment for the criminal offense of felony DUI, but rather constitutes the consequence of violating probationary conditions. Walker failed to bear the burden of proving this section unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt on double jeopardy grounds. St. v. Walker, 2001 MT 170, 306 M 159, 30 P3d 1099 (2001), distinguishing St. v. Guillaume, 1999 MT 29, 293 M 224, 975 P2d 312 (1999).

Payment of Child Support Improper Condition of Sentence for Felony DUI — Victim and Correlation to Underlying Offense Necessary for Imposition of Restitution: Horton was arrested for DUI, and a search of his driving record revealed nine prior DUI convictions. A further search showed that Horton also owed more than $47,000 in back child support. Horton was charged with felony DUI, with driving with a suspended or revoked license, as a habitual traffic offender operating a motor vehicle, and with felony nonsupport. By plea agreement, Horton agreed to plead guilty to the traffic offenses in exchange for dismissal of the nonsupport charge. The plea agreement stated that the state would recommend a 13-month sentence to be served in prerelease, followed by 4 years of probation, and, as a condition of the probationary sentence, provided that Horton would also make regular child support payments plus an additional sum monthly toward the support arrearage. As set out in the agreement, Horton pleaded guilty to the traffic offenses, and the nonsupport charge was dismissed. At sentencing, the habitual traffic offender charge was subsequently dismissed for failure of the state to prove that a valid habitual offender designation was in place at the time of the offense, and in addition, Horton's counsel objected to the court ordering payment of any child support arrearage, arguing that because the nonsupport charge had been dismissed, Horton would be paying restitution on a count for which he had not been convicted. Nevertheless, the court ordered Horton to pay support and promised to revoke his probation and sentence him to 4 years in prison with no parole if support was not paid. On appeal, Horton argued that the District Court abused its discretion and exceeded statutory mandates when it required him to pay restitution for an offense that was dismissed, citing St. v. Brown, 263 M 223, 867 P2d 1098 (1994), for the position that restitution is statutorily limited to the victim of the crime and that because there was no victim who sustained pecuniary or economic loss as a result of the felony DUI or driving with a suspended or revoked license, restitution was inappropriate. The state argued that Horton was attempting to receive the benefit of the plea agreement—having the felony nonsupport charge dismissed—without holding up his end of the bargain by paying child support. The Supreme Court noted that a plea agreement is subject to contract law and that the court will not assist a defendant in escaping the obligations of a plea agreement once its benefits are received. However, the court also pointed out that a District Court's authority to impose sentences in criminal cases is defined and constrained by statute. The statutory authority for payment of restitution is in 46-18-201, which limits payment of restitution to the victim of a crime for which a defendant is convicted, and because Horton was not convicted of nonsupport, there was no victim to whom Horton could be ordered to pay restitution. The state also contended that ordering Horton to pay child support was proper because under 46-18-202(1), a sentencing court may impose any condition reasonably related to the objectives of rehabilitation and the protection of the victim and society. The Supreme Court noted that under St. v. Ommundson, 1999 MT 16, 293 M 133, 974 P2d 620 (1999), a sentencing condition must have some correlation or connection to the underlying offense, but there was no correlation or connection between Horton's conviction for DUI and ordering him to pay child support. Thus, the Supreme Court ordered that the portion of Horton's sentence requiring payment of child support be stricken. St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), followed in St. v. Setters, 2001 MT 101, 305 M 253, 25 P3d 893 (2001).

Felony DUI — Failure to Object and Statements by Defense Counsel Held Waiver of Evidence of Other Crimes — Motion for Mistrial Based Upon Evidence of Other Crimes Properly Denied: Schwein moved for a mistrial because the District Court Judge gave a jury instruction indicating that Schwein was charged with felony DUI, implying that Schwein had previous DUI convictions and that that resulted in the automatic upgrading of the most recent DUI charge from a misdemeanor to felony DUI. Schwein argued that the judge's instruction constituted evidence of other crimes introduced contrary to Rule 404(B), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Supreme Court pointed out that the instructions were settled prior to trial, that Schwein did not object to the instruction before it was given, and that Schwein's own counsel raised the issue of felony DUI during voir dire. The Supreme Court held that Schwein's objection was untimely and that any error was harmless in light of the statements made by Schwein's counsel during voir dire. St. v. Schwein, 2000 MT 371, 303 M 450, 16 P3d 373, 57 St. Rep. 1587 (2000), followed in St. v. Dewitz, 2009 MT 202, 351 M 182, 212 P3d 1040 (2009).

Sentencing Conditions for Fourth Offense DUI — No Suspension of Imprisonment, Double Credit for Time Served, Prerelease Program, or Intensive Supervision: Phelps was sentenced for a fourth offense DUI and driving with a suspended or revoked license, but when the court realized that the offense was committed on the day that the 1997 version of this section became effective, Phelps was resentenced. The state contended that the new sentence did not comport with the new statutory language. Under the unambiguous language of the 1997 version of this section, a District Court may not: (1) suspend any time of imprisonment; (2) mandate that a defendant receive inpatient treatment unless the treatment is a condition of probation; (3) award double credit for time served in completing a treatment program; or (4) require that a defendant be committed to a prerelease program or to an intensive supervision program. St. v. Phelps, 2000 MT 18, 298 M 135, 995 P2d 963, 57 St. Rep. 105 (2000), distinguishing St. v. Whiteshield, 185 M 208, 605 P2d 189 (1980), St. v. Savaria, 245 M 224, 800 P2d 696, 47 St. Rep. 2028 (1990), and St. v. Nelson, 275 M 86, 910 P2d 247, 53 St. Rep. 50 (1996).

Finding That Three of Four Prior DUI Convictions Constitutionally Valid Affirmed — Use Proper to Support Felony Fifth Offense: In defending against felony DUI fifth offense, Brown raised various issues regarding the constitutionality of the prior four convictions. Allocating the respective burdens of proof as set forth in St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), the District Court correctly found that the state met its burden of proving the constitutional validity of three of four of Brown's prior convictions. The court balanced Brown's contentions that he did not recall being informed of his right to counsel and did not sign a waiver of his right to counsel when he pleaded guilty to the prior charges with the state's evidence in the form of the Justice's Court Judge who read Brown his rights in three of the four original trials. Declining to narrowly prescribe the type of direct, affirmative evidence necessary for the state to prove the constitutionality of prior convictions, the Supreme Court found that Brown's signature on an advisement of rights form and a waiver of rights form were but factors to be considered in the totality of the circumstances. The District Court is in the best position to weigh each party's evidence and determine which will prevail and did so here. The evidence was properly used to support enhanced felony charges. St. v. Brown, 1999 MT 143, 295 M 5, 982 P2d 1030, 56 St. Rep. 560 (1999).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Expungement of Two of Three Prior DUI and BAC Convictions — Lack of District Court Jurisdiction — Felony Charge Dismissed: Sidmore was arrested for DUI in March 1996. His driving record revealed that he had a 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, a 1994 Montana DUI conviction, and a 1990 Montana BAC conviction. Pursuant to 61-8-714, Sidmore was charged with felony DUI, fourth offense. Sidmore agreed that under 61-8-714, both BAC and DUI convictions can be counted to determine the total number of convictions that a defendant has received. However, under the 1989 version of 61-8-722, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent BAC conviction within the 5-year period following the 1990 BAC conviction nor did the 1994 DUI conviction prevent expungement of the 1990 BAC conviction, so the 1990 BAC conviction was expunged from the record. Further, under the 1987 version of 61-8-714, Sidmore did not receive a subsequent DUI conviction within the 5-year period following the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction nor did the 1990 BAC conviction prevent expungement of the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction, so the 1988 Idaho DUI conviction was also expunged from the record, making the 1994 DUI conviction the only prior conviction that could be counted to support the felony DUI charge. Thus, under 3-10-303, the Justice's Court retained jurisdiction of the misdemeanor 1996 offense and the District Court erred in denying Sidmore's motion to dismiss the felony DUI charge for lack of jurisdiction. (Expungement provision deleted from 61-8-714 in 1989.) St. v. Sidmore, 286 M 218, 951 P2d 558, 54 St. Rep. 1381 (1997).

Out-of-State Convictions in Home State — Driver License Compact Not Applicable — Nonjurisdictional Claims Waived by Guilty Plea: Wheeler was charged with DUI, fifth offense. The affidavit in support of the information alleged that Wheeler had four previous DUI convictions. Three of the convictions occurred in Colorado. Wheeler moved to expunge those convictions, arguing that those convictions would have been expunged if they had occurred in Montana. The state argued that Colorado was Wheeler's home state when he received the DUI convictions, that the Driver License Compact did not apply, and that Wheeler had no reasonable expectation that the Colorado convictions would be expunged. The District Court denied the motion to expunge. The Supreme Court held that the expungement claim is a nonjurisdictional claim that was waived by Wheeler's guilty plea and affirmed the District Court decision. (Expungement provision deleted from 61-8-714 in 1989.) St. v. Wheeler, 285 M 400, 948 P2d 698, 54 St. Rep. 1213 (1997).

DUI Conviction Incurred Prior to 1981 Expungement Provision Eligible for Expungement: Reams was charged with fourth offense felony DUI based on convictions in July 1975, March and May 1990, and May 1996. Reams argued that his 1975 conviction should have been expunged from his record under the expungement provisions of the 1981 law when it was adopted because it had been more than 5 years between the 1975 conviction and any subsequent conviction and that therefore he could not be charged with fourth offense felony DUI. The state countered that the expungement provision did not apply retroactively because there was no evidence that the Legislature intended it to so apply. The Supreme Court held that a defendant is entitled to the benefit of the law in effect when the offense is committed, except to the extent that a later amendment mitigates a sentence or punishment, in which case the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the later law unless there is clear legislative intent through a saving clause that the former law is intended to control. The Supreme Court ruled that Reams's 1975 conviction was expunged with the adoption of the 1981 law and that therefore he could not be tried for fourth offense felony DUI. (Expungement provision deleted from 61-8-714 in 1989.) St. v. Reams, 284 M 448, 945 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 972 (1997), followed in St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997).

One of Three Previous DUI Convictions Subject to Expungement: Cooney argued that his DUI convictions in October 1984, September 1986, and July 1989 should have been expunged from his record under the language of the statute that existed prior to October 1989 and that therefore his conviction for DUI in December 1995 could not make him liable for fourth offense felony DUI. The Supreme Court held that any DUI conviction prior to the October 1989 repeal of the statute was automatically eligible for expungement if the elements of the expungement provision were satisfied. The Supreme Court ruled that the July 1989 conviction should have been expunged, removing any liability for Cooney for fourth offense felony DUI, but not the October 1984 and September 1986 convictions because at no time had more than 5 years expired between those convictions and a subsequent conviction. (Expungement provision deleted from 61-8-714 in 1989.) St. v. Cooney, 284 M 500, 945 P2d 891, 54 St. Rep. 967 (1997). See also St. v. Beckman, 284 M 459, 944 P2d 756, 54 St. Rep. 977 (1997), regarding expungement of a previous DUI conviction.

Failure of Felony DUI Punishment Provision to Include Mental State or Impose Absolute Liability: Failure of the statutory provision stating the punishment for a fourth or subsequent DUI offense to either include a mental state as an element of the offense or to clearly indicate a legislative purpose to impose absolute liability for the conduct was not a flaw because that statute was merely the statute under which defendant was sentenced. A separate statute defining the offense clearly stated that absolute liability is imposed. The court rejected the argument that the absolute liability provision of the statute defining the offense applied only to the offenses that existed at the time that the absolute liability provision was inserted in the law and did not apply to the felony offense that defendant was charged with and that was inserted in the law at a later date. St. v. Ellenburg, 283 M 136, 938 P2d 1376, 54 St. Rep. 532 (1997).

Record Failing to Show Specific Advisement of Right to Counsel Held Insufficient Basis for Penalty Enhancement: After three previous DUI convictions, Jenni was charged with felony DUI but moved to dismiss on the grounds that he had not been represented by an attorney and had not been advised of his right to counsel. Jenni submitted an affidavit signed by himself. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to its holding in St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), the burden shifted to the state to prove Jenni had been advised of his right to counsel and held that a court record showing that Jenni was generally advised of his rights, without specifically showing that he was advised of his right to counsel, fails to meet the state's burden. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the District Court's dismissal of the felony DUI charge. St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 472 (1997). Okland was followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Uncounseled Waiver of Rights Held No Basis for Enhanced DUI Penalty — Presumption of Regularity of Conviction — Burden of Proof: Okland was charged with his fourth DUI violation and, by virtue of 61-8-714 and 61-8-722, was charged with a felony. Okland filed a motion to dismiss the felony charges, asserting that because he was not represented by counsel at the three previous convictions and had not adequately been advised of his right to counsel, those convictions could not be used to enhance the penalty. With his motion, Okland submitted an affidavit and a record of his 1985 conviction in Lake County. The District Court dismissed the felony charge. The Supreme Court, relying upon United States Supreme Court cases, held that a presumption of regularity attaches to prior convictions during collateral attack and that therefore, even in the absence of a transcript or record, a rebuttable presumption attaches that the prior conviction is valid and a defendant who challenges the validity of the conviction has the burden of producing direct evidence of the conviction's invalidity. In this case, the Supreme Court noted that Okland did produce sufficient evidence to shift the burden to the state and that the copy of the letter produced by the state notifying Okland that he had to complete a financial statement before a court-appointed attorney would be appointed was insufficient to meet the state's burden of proof. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting the motion to dismiss the felony charges against Okland. St. v. Okland, 283 M 10, 941 P2d 431, 54 St. Rep. 467 (1997), followed in St. v. Jenni, 283 M 21, 938 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 472 (1997), St. v. Perry, 283 M 34, 938 P2d 1325, 54 St. Rep. 478 (1997), St. v. Stubblefield, 283 M 292, 940 P2d 444, 54 St. Rep. 605 (1997), St. v. Brown, 1999 MT 143, 295 M 5, 982 P2d 1030, 56 St. Rep. 560 (1999), St. v. Moga, 1999 MT 283, 297 M 1, 989 P2d 856, 56 St. Rep. 1143 (1999), St. v. Anderson, 2001 MT 188, 306 M 243, 32 P3d 750 (2001), and St. v. Kvislen, 2003 MT 27, 314 M 176, 64 P3d 1006 (2003). Okland was also followed, with a different result, in St. v. Ailport, 1998 MT 315, 292 M 172, 970 P2d 1044, 55 St. Rep. 1292 (1998).

Blood Tests Not Self-Incrimination — Taking of Blood Sample From Unconscious Defendant Not Denial of Due Process — DUI Penalty Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment or Double Jeopardy Violation: Defendant was convicted in a state court of driving under the influence and petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus. The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana denied relief, and defendant appealed. The court of appeals held that blood test results were not testimonial or communicative evidence that was inadmissible under the fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination; removal of blood samples from defendant while he was unconscious did not violate due process; the sentence of 6 months in jail, a $500 fine, and attendance at an alcohol treatment program was not cruel and unusual punishment; and the sentence was not multiple punishment for double jeopardy purposes. Belgarde v. Mont., 123 F3d 1210 (9th Cir. 1997).

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT LAW

Failure to Show That Justice's Court Exceeded Its Jurisdiction in Holding Defendant in Contempt in DUI Case — Writ of Review Properly Denied: Schaefer was charged in Justice's Court with repeat misdemeanor DUI per se and sentenced to a chemical dependency course, but he did not complete all conditions of the course, so the court held him in contempt. Schaefer then filed a writ of review in District Court, but the writ was dismissed because the court concluded that a petition for postconviction relief provided Schaefer with a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, so the court lacked jurisdiction. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed denial of the writ, but not because a petition for postconviction relief was more appropriate, but rather because the Justice's Court properly exercised its jurisdiction and because the conflicting evidence issue of aftercare remained in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Justice's Court. Although the District Court incorrectly found that a writ of review was not appropriate, denial of the petition was nevertheless affirmed because Schaefer failed to satisfy the first prong of the test in 27-25-102 by showing that the Justice's Court exceeded its jurisdiction by holding him in contempt. Schaefer v. Egeland, 2004 MT 199, 322 M 274, 95 P3d 724 (2004).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Pre-1995 Alcohol Information and Treatment Requirements — Evaluation Required Prior to Sentencing if Court Considers Treatment Option: Prior to 1995 amendment of 61-8-714(4) (renumbered 61-8-732), a defendant was required to complete an alcohol information course and, in the court's discretion, to receive alcohol treatment in the alcohol information course if recommended by a certified chemical dependency counselor. (Court discretion in requiring alcohol treatment was deleted by the 1995 Legislature.) The evaluation of whether alcohol treatment is necessary must be obtained prior to sentencing if the court is inclined to consider treatment as part of the sentence. At the point defendant was ordered to complete the alcohol information course, judgment was considered rendered and the Justice Court lacked jurisdiction to later modify the sentence to include alcohol treatment. St. v. Mora, 277 M 411, 922 P2d 516, 53 St. Rep. 736 (1996), following Rivera v. Eschler, 235 M 350, 767 P2d 336 (1989).

Penalty for DUI Conviction in Excess of Misdemeanor — Justice's Court Jurisdiction: Defendant was fined $300, assessed costs, given a 6-month suspended sentence, and required to attend an alcohol treatment program that had no particular time limit. Defendant argued that the potential sentence for the DUI conviction could exceed 1 year, which effectively increased the offense beyond a misdemeanor classification and deprived the Justice's Court of original jurisdiction. The Supreme Court noted that the legislative purpose of alcohol treatment is not punishment, but protection of the public, and distinguished between fines levied as monetary punishment and costs imposed in a court's discretion as reimbursement for expenses of prosecution. Defendant's sentence did not amount to a felony; therefore, the Justice's Court had original jurisdiction. St. v. West, 252 M 83, 826 P2d 940, 49 St. Rep. 170 (1992).

Case Notes

Proper Consideration of Nevada DUI Conviction: The defendant claimed that his felony fourth DUI conviction in Montana was improper because two underlying Nevada DUI convictions were based on Nevada statutes that were not sufficiently similar to Montana DUI statutes. The defendant argued that the Nevada statutes criminalized behavior up to 2 hours after driving while 61-8-406 required a blood alcohol content of 0.10 or higher while driving. The Supreme Court found that the statutes were sufficiently similar to support the felony conviction, noting that the function of both state statutes was to criminalize high alcohol levels while driving and that the level of impairment prohibited was equivalent. St. v. Calvert, 2013 MT 374, 373 Mont. 152, 316 P.3d 173.

Idaho DUI Statute Similar to Montana DUI Statute — Enhancement of Charge Affirmed: The defendant was charged with felony DUI. He had three prior DUI convictions, two of which were from Idaho. The defendant argued that the Idaho convictions could not be applied to enhance the DUI charge because the Idaho DUI statute required a lesser degree of impairment and therefore was not sufficiently similar to the Montana statute. The District Court disagreed and the defendant appealed. In comparing the language of the two statutes, the Supreme Court found them not only similar, but nearly identical, and affirmed the District Court. St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Out-of-State DUI — No Conviction for Felony DUI Purposes: The suspended imposition of sentence that the defendant received following his plea of guilty to a DUI per se offense in South Dakota did not constitute a conviction for the purpose of enhancing the defendant's charges to a felony DUI because, pursuant to another South Dakota law to which Montana has no similar counterpart, the South Dakota suspended imposition of sentence was vacated and completely expunged from the defendant's record, thereby precluding it from counting as a previous conviction. St. v. Cleary, 2012 MT 113, 365 Mont. 142, 278 P.3d 1020.

Proper Consideration of Prior Wyoming DUI Conviction: Sirles contended that the District Court improperly considered a prior Wyoming DUI conviction for purposes of felony enhancement of his Montana DUI. The Supreme Court disagreed. Sirles failed to overcome the presumption of regularity attached to the Wyoming conviction that might have precluded its consideration for felony enhancement purposes. St. v. Sirles, 2010 MT 88, 356 Mont. 133, 231 P.3d 1089. See also St. v. Faber, 2008 MT 368, 346 Mont. 449, 197 P.3d 941.

DUI Chargeable as Fourth Offense Despite Previous Third DUI Charged as Second Offense Under Plea Agreement: Blue was arrested for DUI twice in 1995 and again in 2000. The charging documents in the 2000 case listed the offense as DUI third offense, but as part of a plea agreement, the prosecutor amended the charge to DUI second offense, and Blue pleaded guilty and was sentenced in 2001. Blue was arrested for DUI again in 2007 and charged with fourth offense felony DUI. Blue asserted that because the 2001 charge was amended to DUI second offense, he could not be charged with a fourth offense in 2007. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 61-8-734, all previous convictions must be used in determining whether a fourth offense was committed. However, the title placed on the charge was not considered material to counting the number of offenses under the statutory scheme for DUI sentencing. Despite the characterization of the 2001 offense as DUI second offense for plea bargain purposes, Blue was in fact convicted of three prior DUIs when charged in 2007, so the felony fourth offense was properly charged. St. v. Blue, 2009 MT 304, 352 M 382, 217 P3d 82 (2009).

Similarity of Montana and California DUI Convictions Warranting Felony DUI Conviction in Montana: Polaski claimed that his felony fifth offense DUI charge in Montana was erroneous because it was based on four prior convictions in California. However, under this section, the grounds for a felony DUI charge are based on final convictions in Montana or violations of a similar statute or regulation in another state, and if the offense is the offender's fourth or subsequent offense, all previous convictions must be used. The Supreme Court compared Montana and California DUI statutes and determined that both states' laws similarly prohibited driving under the influence and that Polaski could have been convicted under the laws of either state. All of Polaski's prior convictions remained on his record regardless of the years that they were acquired and were therefore properly used for enhanced sentencing purposes. The felony DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Polaski, 2005 MT 13, 325 M 351, 106 P3d 538 (2005). See also St. v. McNally, 2002 MT 160, 310 M 396, 50 P3d 1080 (2002), and St. v. Young, 2012 MT 251, 366 Mont. 527, 289 P.3d 110.

Use of Prior DUI Convictions in Washington to Enhance Montana DUI to Felony: The District Court used Hall's three prior DUI convictions in Washington to enhance Hall's Montana conviction to a felony. Hall appealed on grounds that Montana and Washington laws were too dissimilar to allow enhancement of Hall's Montana DUI. The Supreme Court examined both states' statutes and concluded that a person convicted of violating the Washington law committed an offense for which each subsection of the Washington statute had an analogous statute in Montana. The laws were held to be sufficiently similar to allow felony enhancement in this case, and Hall's fourth offense Montana conviction was affirmed. St. v. Hall, 2004 MT 106, 321 M 78, 88 P3d 1273 (2004).

Use of 1984, 1987, and 1991 DUI Convictions to Enhance 2000 DUI Offense to Felony: Weldele was convicted of DUI in 1984, 1987, 1991, and 2000. Weldele argued that because more than 5 years had elapsed between any of the prior convictions and the present offense, under the version of 61-8-714 in effect during the 1984 and 1987 convictions, evidence of the 1984 and 1987 convictions could not be used to enhance the 2000 charge to a felony. However, because the 1987 conviction followed the 1984 conviction by only 3 years, the 1984 conviction did not qualify for expungement and remained on Weldele's record. The 1989 version of 61-8-714 informed Weldele that if he remained DUI-free for 5 years after the 1991 conviction, the 1991 conviction would not be expunged, but rather would become confidential criminal justice information subject to review by a court. In 1995, 61-8-714 was again amended to create the felony sanction for fourth and subsequent DUIs, so Weldele was on notice as of 1995 that all of the prior convictions would be counted for sentencing purposes. A 1997 revision created separate felony DUI sanctions, again putting Weldele on notice that a fourth offense would constitute a felony. Thus, there was no due process or ex post facto issue here, and the accurate and lawful application of the statutes in effect at the time of Weldele's convictions allowed for the enhancement of his sentence based on the complete record of four DUIs. St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003). See also St. v. Chesterfield, 2011 MT 256, 362 Mont. 243, 262 P.3d 1109, in which the Supreme Court rejected the defendant's claim that the remoteness of prior DUI convictions should be taken into consideration when reviewing a fourth DUI offense.

District Court Jurisdiction to Apply Persistent Felony Offender Designation to Felony DUI: Yorek pleaded guilty to and was sentenced on a felony DUI charge. The District Court determined that it had jurisdiction and imposed a persistent felony offender designation. Yorek sought postconviction relief on grounds that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to impose a persistent felony offender designation for felony DUI. The District Court denied the petition for postconviction relief, concluding that sentencing for felony DUI is not solely governed by 61-8-731 and this section, that nothing in the persistent felony offender statute excludes felony DUI offenders from its application, and that Yorek waived any jurisdiction claim by pleading guilty. The Supreme Court affirmed. Nothing in 46-18-502 distinguishes between or among the types of felonies to which it applies, or excludes DUI offenders. Rather, if the underlying charge meets the definition of a felony and if the state has provided proper notice of its intent to seek persistent felony offender status under 46-13-108, a District Court has the statutory authority to designate and sentence an offender as a persistent felony offender. Yorek's crime met the definition of a felony, and Yorek fell squarely within the persistent felony offender statute. The state met the notice provisions, and the District Court possessed subject matter jurisdiction to designate Yorek as a persistent felony offender. Because the jurisdiction question was dispositive, the Supreme Court did not reach the question of whether Yorek's guilty plea was a procedural bar against bringing the claim. St. v. Yorek, 2002 MT 74, 309 M 238, 45 P3d 872 (2002), followed in St. v. Pettijohn, 2002 MT 75, 309 M 244, 45 P3d 870 (2002), and St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 M 276, 119 P3d 1194 (2005).

Missing Vehicle Headlight Constituting Objective and Particularized Suspicion of Wrongdoing to Justify Investigative Stop: Officers conducting surveillance of a house where drug activities were suspected noticed that a vehicle leaving the area was missing a headlight. The officers believed that the driver, Farabee, may have just completed a drug transaction at the house and pulled over the vehicle, based on the fact that the vehicle appeared to be in violation of this section, which requires two working headlights. Upon receiving permission and searching the vehicle, the officers discovered marijuana and paraphernalia. On appeal, Farabee argued that the officer who stopped him did not have a particularized suspicion that Farabee was committing an offense because the stop occurred at 1:30 p.m., in broad daylight, and Farabee's headlights were turned off, so the officers could only speculate that the headlight was inoperable. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the officers' suspicions were particularized. From the objective and particularized data that the vehicle appeared to be missing a headlight, the officers made the reasonable inference that the headlight was inoperable. Particularized suspicion does not require certainty on the part of an officer; thus, the District Court's conclusion that Farabee was engaged in wrongdoing that justified an investigative stop was not clearly erroneous. St. v. Farabee, 2000 MT 265, 302 M 29, 22 P3d 175, 57 St. Rep. 1106 (2000), distinguishing Grinde v. St., 249 M 77, 813 P2d 473 (1991), and St. v. Reynolds, 272 M 46, 899 P2d 540 (1995).

Traffic Stop of Illegally Operated Vehicle Not Considered Pretext for Search of Vehicle for Narcotics: Officers conducting surveillance of a house where drug activities were suspected noticed that a vehicle leaving the area was missing a headlight. The officers believed that the driver, Farabee, may have just completed a drug transaction at the house and pulled over the vehicle, based on the fact that the vehicle appeared to be in violation of this section, which requires two working headlights. Upon receiving permission and searching the vehicle, the officers discovered marijuana and paraphernalia. On appeal, Farabee argued that the evidence should be suppressed because the officers used the equipment violation as a pretext to stop him and investigate their hunch, in violation of Art. II, sec. 10 and 11, Mont. Const. The Supreme Court disagreed, applying the rationale in Whren v. U.S., 517 US 806 (1996), that an officer's motive for a traffic stop does not render an objectively reasonable stop invalid. The constitutional reasonableness of a traffic stop does not depend on the subjective motivations of the individual officers involved. In this case, based on the objective and particularized data that the vehicle appeared to be missing a headlight, the officers made the reasonable inference that the headlight was inoperable, so the totality of the circumstances justified the investigative stop. Farabee's motion to suppress was properly denied. St. v. Farabee, 2000 MT 265, 302 M 29, 22 P3d 175, 57 St. Rep. 1106 (2000), distinguishing St. v. Lahr, 172 M 32, 560 P2d 527 (1977).

Parked and Disabled Vehicle Not Proximate Cause of Accident — Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where the defendant parked his stalled pickup truck at the side of a frontage road and turned on the floodlights of the haygrinder he was pulling before leaving the truck to seek help, but the truck was nevertheless struck by the plaintiff's vehicle, the Supreme Court found that the jury verdict for the defendant was supported by substantial evidence. The record showed that the plaintiff had seen the defendant's lights from one-half mile away but failed to avoid the accident. The jury found defendant 0% negligent and plaintiff 100% negligent; it was entitled to conclude, as it did, that negligence on the part of the defendant was not the proximate cause of the accident. Griffel v. Faust, 205 M 372, 668 P2d 247, 40 St. Rep. 1370 (1983).

Driving Before Dusk: An automobile dealer's service manager went to plaintiff's ranch to pick up his car. While driving the car back to the dealer's garage for repairs, the service manager drove the car into a creek extensively damaging the car. The service manager had 1 ½ hours in which to drive the 50 miles back to town before dusk. The absence of one beam of one headlight did not establish either contributory negligence or assumption of risk on the part of plaintiff, so as to preclude his recovery of damages. Win Del Ranches, Inc. v. Rolfe & Wood, Inc., 137 M 44, 350 P2d 581 (1960).

Causal Relationship to Accident: Violation of section 32-1132, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), requiring headlights on automobiles between 1 hour after sunset and 1 hour before sunrise, constituted negligence. In considering whether or not such negligence contributed to an accident or barred recovery, courts must take into consideration the conditions existing at the time and place of the accident. Simpson v. Miller, 97 M 328, 34 P2d 528 (1934).

Unfavorable Atmospheric Conditions: In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision after dark between plaintiff's automobile, the lights of which were burning, and that of the defendant without lights, the negligence alleged was defendant's driving without lights when a reasonably prudent man would have had them burning. An instruction that if the accident occurred before the hour fixed by section 32-1132, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), for having lights, the absence of lights could not be deemed negligence, was properly refused. The hour fixed by statute was immaterial if the conditions were such as to require the display of lights. Knott v. Pepper, 74 M 236, 239 P 1037 (1925).

61-9-203. Headlamps on motor vehicles.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 inserted third sentence in (2) permitting installation of modulating high beam on motorcycle but prohibiting owner from modulating during periods of required headlamp use; in (3) substituted "less than 24 inches" for "less than 22 inches"; inserted (4) prohibiting person from operating motor vehicle on highway with substance obscuring headlamps or diminishing visibility; inserted (5) permitting operation of motor vehicle with headlamps composed of treated or tinted substance if equipment complied with federal law at time of manufacture; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: Throughout section after "motorcycle", inserted "quadricycle" (effective January 1, 1986).

1983 Amendment: In (2), inserted second sentence prohibiting a motorcycle from being operated without headlamps upon a highway or street from one-half hour after sunset to one-half hour before sunrise or if persons and vehicles are not clearly discernible at 500 feet.

61-9-204. Taillamps.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 413 in (1) in second sentence substituted "with at least one mounted on each side of the rear of the vehicle" for "mounted on the rear". Amendment effective April 28, 2009.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 458 in (6) substituted (a) and (b) allowing the use of and defining blue dot taillights for former language that read: "This section does not prohibit a vehicle manufactured prior to 1960 from being equipped with a taillamp that includes within the red cover a center lens that is blue in color"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 28, 2005.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 in first and second sentences in (1), before "taillamp", inserted "properly functioning" and at end of second sentence, after "rear", substituted "that emit a red light plainly visible from a distance of 1,000 feet to the rear of the vehicle" for "which when lighted as herein required, shall comply with the provisions of this section"; at end of (3), after "headlamps", deleted "or auxiliary driving lamps"; inserted (5) prohibiting operation of motor vehicle with substance covering, obscuring, or diminishing visibility of taillamps; inserted (6) permitting operation of motor vehicle with taillamps with blue center lens on vehicle manufactured prior to 1960; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendment: In (1), in last sentence, inserted "motorcycle, motor-driven cycle, quadricycle, or".

1983 Amendment: Inserted (4) prohibiting motorcycles from being operated without tail lights on a highway or street from one-half hour after sunset to one-half hour before sunrise or when persons and vehicles are not clearly discernible at 500 feet.

Case Notes

Statutory Violations a Jury Question: The plaintiff sued the defendants for injuries he suffered when he drove his truck into the rear of their car. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants violated various motor vehicle statutes and the duty of care owed to the plaintiff, but the Supreme Court found that these were questions of fact for the jury and substantial evidence supported the findings for the defendants. Substantial and sufficient evidence also was found to support the jury's determination that the defendants' actions did not proximately cause the plaintiff's injury. Gunnels v. Hoyt, 194 M 265, 633 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 1492 (1981).

County Road Grader: Statute requiring that tail lamps be not more than 72 inches from ground did not apply to county road grader on which two red tail lamps had been mounted 10 feet from the ground. A motorist suing the county for injury sustained when his auto struck the road grader from rear was not entitled to an instruction that the statute had been violated and that the county was therefore negligent as matter of law. Bernhard v. Lincoln County, 150 M 557, 437 P2d 377 (1968).

61-9-205. New motor vehicles to be equipped with reflectors.

61-9-206. Stop lamps — when required.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 near beginning of (1), after "vehicle", deleted "including any motorcycle, quadricycle, or motor-driven cycle" and after "equipped" substituted "with at least two properly functioning stop lamps" for "with at least one stop lamp meeting the requirements of 61-9-218" and inserted second sentence requiring vehicle manufactured before 1956 and all cycles to be equipped with at least one functioning stop lamp; inserted (2) describing the required visibility of rear stop lamps; inserted (3) prohibiting stop lamp from projecting glaring light; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: After "motorcycle", inserted "quadricycle" (effective January 1, 1986).

Case Notes

Driving Without Properly Functioning Brake Lights Constitutes Sufficient Particularized Suspicion for Investigative Stop: Operating a motor vehicle that is not equipped with functional brake lights is a misdemeanor offense, and thus deputy's decision to pull over defendant's vehicle was supported by a particularized suspicion. St. v. Faber, 2008 MT 368, 346 M 449, 197 P3d 941 (2008).

61-9-207. Application of succeeding sections.

Compiler's Comments

61-9-208. Additional equipment required on certain vehicles.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 at end of (1) and (4)(d), after "side", deleted "and one stoplight"; deleted (3)(b) that required a truck tractor to have "on the rear, one stoplight"; inserted second sentence in (6)(a) requiring safety chain or cable to be connected to towing vehicle hitch or frame; in (6)(b), after "reflectors", inserted "and two stoplights" and deleted second sentence that read: "If any trailer or semitrailer is so loaded or is of such dimensions as to obscure the stoplight on the towing vehicle, then such vehicle shall also be equipped with one stoplight"; and made minor changes in style.

61-9-209. Color of clearance lamps, side marker lamps, reflectors, and backup lamps.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 in (3), after "reflectors", inserted "and stoplights"; substituted exception language in (3)(a) regarding rear signal devices defined in 61-9-218 for "the stoplight or other signal device which may be red, amber, or yellow"; at end of (3)(c), after "white", deleted "amber, or red"; and made minor changes in style.

61-9-213. Lamp or flag on projecting load.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 in first sentence in (1) inserted "the following lamps and reflectors"; at beginning of (1)(a) substituted "red lamp" for "red light or lantern" and after "least" substituted "500 feet to the sides and 1,000 feet to the rear and located to indicate maximum overhang" for "500 feet to the sides and rear"; inserted (1)(b) requiring display of red reflector visible from the rear with low beams from 100 feet to 600 feet; at beginning of first sentence of (2) substituted "red lights and reflectors" for "red light or lantern" and in second sentence, after "12 inches square", substituted "marking the extremities of the load, at each point where a lamp or reflector would otherwise be required by this section" for "and so hung that the entire area is visible to the driver of a vehicle approaching from the rear"; and made minor changes in style.

61-9-214. Lamps on parked vehicles.

Case Notes

Violation as Negligence: A violation of section 32-1132, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), constituted negligence, and a traveler on the highway was entitled to assume that a truck standing upon the highway at night would display lights both upon the front and rear thereof. Ashley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 100 M 312, 47 P2d 53 (1935).

61-9-215. Lamps on farm tractors, farm equipment, and implements of husbandry.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 in (2), after "system", inserted "or an implement of husbandry being towed by a motor vehicle"; in (2)(a), (2)(b), (3), and (4)(b), after "indicate", deleted "as nearly as practicable"; in first sentence in (3), after "requirements", substituted "61-9-220 or 61-9-222" for "61-9-222 or 61-9-220 respectively, or as an alternative, 61-9-224"; at end of (4)(a), after "61-9-222", deleted "or 61-9-224"; in second sentence of (4)(c), after "lamps must", deleted "be installed or capable of being positioned so as to"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Headlamp Illumination Requirements Erroneously Stated — Harmless Error: A jury instruction regarding the applicable statutory provisions governing the degree of illumination required of headlamps of motor vehicles, although erroneously stated by a judge, constituted only harmless error since the outcome of the verdict against defendant was not affected and since the statute that was erroneously involved actually helped defendant. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

61-9-217. Spot lamps, fog lamps, and auxiliary lamps.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 431 in first sentence in (2), after "lamps", inserted "that provide a low, wide-angle light pattern to increase short-range visibility", near beginning of second sentence, after "not", deleted "less than 12 inches", and inserted fourth sentence prohibiting substitution of fog lamp for headlamps; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) Any motor vehicle may be equipped with not to exceed two auxiliary passing lamps mounted on the front at a height not less than 24 inches or more than 42 inches above the level surface upon which the vehicle stands. The provisions of 61-9-220 shall apply to any combination of headlamps and auxiliary passing lamps"; in first sentence in (3), after "lamps", inserted "that produce a long-range, pencil-shaped light pattern and that are used to supplement the upper beams of headlamps" and inserted fourth sentence prohibiting use of auxiliary driving lamps as substitute for required headlamps; inserted (4) prohibiting use of auxiliary off-road lamps mounted above 42 inches; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Instructions on Statutes Preferred: In a wrongful death action arising out of a head-on collision, plaintiff offered instructions quoting federal and state laws which concern the dimming of headlights at night on the highway. The court gave the instruction concerning the federal regulations but refused to give the instruction quoting 61-9-220 and 61-9-221. Plaintiff pointed out that a violation of the federal regulation may be considered by the jury in determining negligence, while a violation of a Montana statute is negligence as a matter of law. The Supreme Court said it would have been preferable for the District Court to instruct on Montana statutes as they pertain to the use of high and low beams of headlights at night. The court also found that the instruction given was consistent with the statutes, so the jury was not misled. Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

This light shall be used on emergency duty only."; inserted "or search and rescue or volunteer emergency medical personnel" after "Any firefighter" at the beginning of (2); substituted "person" for "chief of his department" before "authorizing" near the end of (2).

Brakes

61-9-301. Brake equipment required.

Case Notes

Double Jeopardy: Conviction under section 32-21-143, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), did not bar prosecution for involuntary manslaughter arising out of the same accident in subsequent action, because proof of the latter requires proof of an additional fact. 1985 Amendment: Inserted "quadricycles" in classification B-1 (effective January 1, 1986).

61-9-313. Maintenance of brakes.

Case Notes

Proximate Cause — Jury Question: The court properly refused to grant a directed verdict against defendant for failing to keep its brakes from freezing and in failing to display brake lights and keep them free from snow because whether such violations proximately caused the death of plaintiff's husband was a question of fact for the jury to determine. However, the erroneous jury instruction on the sudden emergency doctrine necessitated a new trial on the issue of liability. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Case Notes

Public Duty Doctrine Inapplicable Based on Special Relationship Between Pursuing Officers and Pedestrian: Plaintiff was injured when defendant, a runaway juvenile probationer, hit plaintiff with a stolen vehicle while being pursued by law enforcement officers during a high-speed chase through Harlowton. Plaintiff sued the county and the County Sheriff for damages related to the crash. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county and the County Sheriff, holding that the public duty doctrine applied and that neither plaintiff's nor the juvenile's actions were foreseeable. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The public duty doctrine generally shields law enforcement officers from negligence claims, but an exception arises when there is a special relationship between an officer and an individual that gives rise to a special duty that is more particular than the duty owed to the public at large. Applying the circumstances set out in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), the court noted that the first exception to the public trust doctrine is whether a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which plaintiff is a member, creates a special relationship. Under 61-8-107, a duty of care is created on the part of the drivers of emergency vehicles to drive with due regard for the safety of all persons. Based on this special relationship, the court held that the public duty doctrine did not apply. As a bystander on a public road, plaintiff was within the scope of risk and was thus a foreseeable plaintiff. Last, the court considered the issue of causation. Plaintiff claimed negligence on the part of the county and the officers, but plaintiff was actually injured by the actions of the juvenile, so the question was whether the juvenile's actions were intervening superseding acts that broke the chain of causation as a matter of law. Whether plaintiff's injuries were caused primarily by the juvenile or by the officers was an issue that reasonable minds might disagree upon and therefore appropriately adjudicated by a jury, so the Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment and remanded for trial on the issues of breach of duty, causation, including intervening superseding cause, and damages. Eklund v. Trost, 2006 MT 333, 335 M 112, 151 P3d 870 (2006), applying Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980), and Day v. St., 980 P2d 1171 (Utah 1999).

Failure to Use Siren — Reckless Driving Conviction Affirmed: Appellant contended he was not guilty of reckless driving because the officer who pursued him at speeds of up to 110 miles an hour did not use his siren. The argument was without merit. This section simply requires that a police car be equipped with a siren. The mere presence of the siren on the car does not mandate its use; therefore, use of a siren is not an essential element of the offense of reckless driving. St. v. Keil, 231 M 187, 751 P2d 680, 45 St. Rep. 532 (1988).

Duty to Drive With "Due Regard": In interpreting 61-8-107, the test for "due regard" is whether, with the privileges and immunities provided by that statute, the driver of an emergency vehicle acted in a reasonably careful manner. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007, 37 St. Rep. 1170 (1980).

Attorney General's Opinions

Yield of Right-of-Way Required Upon Approach of Emergency Vehicle Using Only Visual Signals: Upon the immediate approach of an authorized emergency vehicle making use of only visual signals pursuant to this section, other drivers shall yield the right-of-way or stop. They may then proceed past the signal with caution and at a reasonable and proper speed. 43 A.G. Op. 11 (1989).

Case Notes

Obscured Vision — Negligence: A driver who permits the windshield of his vehicle to become so covered with dust and dirt so as to obscure his vision so that he cannot readily perceive the condition of the road is negligent. However, the mere fact that dust is observable on the windshield is not evidence of negligence on the part of the driver. West v. Wilson, 90 M 522, 4 P2d 469 (1931).

Case Notes

Seatbelt Rendered Inoperable — Negligence Per Se: Pursuant to 61-9-409, there is a duty to maintain a motor vehicle in a way that seatbelts are available for the driver's and passenger's use in the event they choose to use them. Breach of that duty constitutes negligence per se. Nothing in 61-13-106, in this section, or in Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), precludes evidence that seatbelts were unavailable and thus not in use at the time of an accident. Nor does the fact that the unavailability of a seatbelt was not the cause of the original accident relieve the duty under 61-9-409 to provide seatbelts. Califato v. Gerke, 258 M 68, 852 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 428 (1993).

No Seatbelt Defense: In the light of the history and the numerous legislative problems that must be considered to effectively extend the seatbelt rule of law, the well-reasoned position of the Washington court in Amend v. Bell, 89 Wash. 2d 124, 570 P2d 138 (1977), produces the better rule. To adopt a seatbelt defense when the Legislature has failed to do so would be ill-advised. The trial court properly refused to allow defendant to introduce evidence that plaintiff's failure to use a seatbelt contributed to her injuries. (See 61-13-106.) Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668, 37 St. Rep. 437 (1980), distinguished in Califato v. Gerke, 258 M 68, 852 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 428 (1993), in cases in which a person breaches the duty to make seatbelts available by rendering the seatbelt inoperable.

Instruction on Duty to Display Traffic Warning Flags — Important Theory of Case: Plaintiff objected to giving of an instruction regarding his duty to display warning flags on the highway near his disabled vehicle on the ground that because a truck parked behind the disabled vehicle was exhibiting its flashing emergency lights, there was no need for warning flags. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting both the statutory duty to place warning flags and defendant's right to instruction on that duty as an important theory of the case. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Negligence: Driver of truck was negligent in allowing the truck, which had run out of gas, to stand on highway at nighttime without placing flares required by sec. 8, Ch. 199, L. 1943 (section 31-108, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed)). Burns v. Fisher, 132 M 26, 313 P2d 1044, 67 ALR 2d 1 (1957).

The penalty is in addition to the other penalties provided by statute, is obligatory upon judge, is not a violation of double jeopardy provision of constitution, and does not violate statute providing that when action is punishable under different provisions of code, punishment may be had under only one of them. Attorney General's Opinions

Reducible Loads — Compliance of State Statutes With Federal Law: Montana oversize and overweight vehicle permit provisions, as applied to reducible loads, comply with federal law and regulations because the provisions became grandfathered exceptions after July 1, 1956. Therefore, with the exception of longer combination vehicles, which are subject to 1991 law, and groups of two or more consecutive axles, whose overall gross weight is subject to 1974 law, Montana's oversize and overweight vehicle permit provisions in effect on July 1, 1956, may be applied to vehicles carrying reducible loads. 48 A.G. Op. 6 (1999).

It is the intent of the legislature to now make that prohibition permanent under the same conditions and permit requirements as were contained in the 1991 temporary law. The legislature expects that with the passage of time, roads will be upgraded and that equipment used by the potato haulers will be upgraded in a fashion that will eliminate the wear and tear on roads that makes special weight and speed restrictions necessary. For the time being, the legislature recognizes the necessity of exempting seed potato haulers from special restrictions under certain conditions. The legislature intends to allow the exemption with the understanding that in the future, the people involved in the seed potato industry will continue to work on upgrading their equipment so that eventually the equipment will not require exemptions from special speed and weight limits and that as equipment is replaced, the new equipment will meet regular limits, without special exemptions, that will protect the state's highways."

1991 Amendments: Chapter 476 in (3), in introductory clause, substituted "seed potatoes" for "agricultural seeds"; inserted (3)(b) regarding operation of a vehicle under permit regardless of gross weight; inserted (4) regarding revocation of the permit; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 20, 1989.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 183, L. 1989, provided: "This bill requires a statement of intent because [subsection (8) of section 1] [61-10-130(8)] authorizes the department of highways [now department of transportation] to adopt administrative rules to implement the act. The act is intended to provide a special permit fee for the vehicles and equipment of custom combiners operating in the state, in lieu of the usual vehicle license fees and gross vehicle weight, overwidth, overlength, and overheight fees otherwise required. The custom combiner has the option of paying the regular fees.

The act also permits the use of the custom combiner's truck or trailer to haul grain, but only from the field to the point of first unloading, within certain limitations. This authority is given so that the combiner may assist the producer in getting the harvested grain out of the field and is not intended to allow transportation of the grain in commerce.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department of highways adopt necessary rules to implement the custom combiner's special permit and to regulate the operation of the vehicles involved in conformity with the act and special permit requirements."

Case Notes

Escape From Arresting Officer — Physical Restraint Not Prerequisite of Arrest: A valid arrest is an underlying element of "official detention" as that term is used in 45-7-306 and is therefore also an underlying element of the offense of escape. A valid arrest occurred when a Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) enforcement officer stopped a truck to weigh it and a passenger began to unload it, threatened the officer when he was told to stop unloading, and was twice told he was under arrest. Actual physical restraint of the passenger is not a prerequisite to a valid arrest. The standard for an arrest when there is no physical restraint is whether a reasonable person, innocent of any crime, would have felt free to walk away under the circumstances. The passenger was properly charged with and convicted of the offense of escape. St. v. Thornton, 218 M 317, 708 P2d 273, 42 St. Rep. 1614 (1985), followed, as to the lack of need for physical restraint, in St. v. Widenhofer, 286 M 341, 950 P2d 1383, 54 St. Rep. 1438 (1997).

The penalty prescribed is fine or imprisonment and that is what the jury should have been informed. St. v. Baillargeron, 126 M 310, 249 P2d 799 (1952).

Case Notes

No Youth Court Authority to Expunge DUI Offenses — Elements of Judicial Estoppel Not Met: Following Darrah's completion of a Youth Drug Court program in 2004, the Youth Court ordered that Darrah's prior criminal record be expunged, including a previous minor in possession offense and a 2002 DUI. Darrah was subsequently charged in 2005 with second offense DUI, based on the prior 2002 DUI, and in 2006 Darrah was charged with third offense DUI. Citing the principle of judicial estoppel, Darrah asserted that because the Youth Court record had been expunged, the 2002 DUI should not count against him. The District Court disagreed and Darrah appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of judicial estoppel set out in Vogel v. Intercontinental Truck Body, Inc., 2006 MT 131, 332 M 322, 137 P3d 573 (2006), and determined that Darrah had failed to demonstrate that each element was met, so judicial estoppel did not apply. Further, there is no authority under which the Youth Court could order expungement of Darrah's DUI offenses. The District Court was affirmed. St. v. Darrah, 2009 MT 96, 350 M 70, 205 P3d 792 (2009), following St. v. Chesley, 2004 MT 165, 322 M 26, 92 P3d 1212 (2004).

Justice's Court — No Authority to Vacate Conviction and Order Alteration of Driver's Civil Records: A Justice's Court does not have authority to vacate a conviction or to direct alteration of the records of the Division of Motor Vehicles. Therefore, a Justice's Court could not order the Division to strike a prior DUI conviction and not consider it in revoking the driver's license on a second conviction. The District Court properly granted the Division's motion to quash a Writ of Mandate issued by the District Court staying the actions of the Division. Lancaster v. Dept. of Justice, 218 M 97, 706 P2d 126, 42 St. Rep. 1425 (1985).

Implied Consent Suspension Not Relieved by Guilty Plea: Respondent's license was suspended when he refused to take a breath test. Two weeks after arrest, respondent pleaded guilty to the offense of DUI. The District Court found that the plea of guilty constituted a withdrawal of his refusal to take breath test under the implied consent statute and recommended respondent receive a probationary license. Supreme Court reversed and reinstated suspension of respondent's license. The revocation of a driver's license is a civil sanction, not a criminal penalty, and there is no connection between the DUI statute and the implied consent statute. A violation of both statutes means the suspensions run concurrently. Respondent was not eligible for a probationary license until the 90-day implied consent suspension was completed. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985), followed in In re Blake, 220 M 27, 712 P2d 1338, 43 St. Rep. 143 (1986), and Walker v. St., 229 M 331, 746 P2d 624, 44 St. Rep. 2008 (1987).

State Law Conflicting With Local Ordinances: Because the Legislature prior to the 1981 amendments to 61-8-714 had provided that jail sentences could not be imposed for the first or second offense of driving under the influence of alcohol, municipal ordinances addressing such offense must be consistent with state law. 37 A.G. Case Notes

Previous DUI Conviction Not to Be Considered for Purposes of Felony DUI — Former Requirement for Expungement of Record Held Self-Executing — Lorash Distinguished — Expungement Applicable to Local Records: Bowles was convicted of DUI in 1977 and did not receive another DUI for 5 years but was convicted of two other DUI offenses after 1982. When Bowles was arrested for DUI in Park County in 1996, Park County charged Bowles with felony DUI, fourth offense, counting the 1977 conviction as one of three prior convictions. Bowles moved for dismissal of the felony charge, contending that the 1977 record should have been expunged pursuant to the 1981 version of 61-8-714(5), and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly dismissed the felony charge because the expungement provision in effect at the time, unlike the expungement provision in 46-18-204 that was litigated in St. v. Lorash, 238 M 345, 777 P2d 884 (1989), was self-executing and did not require the defendant to move the court to have the record of conviction expunged. The requirement for expungement applied to the 1977 conviction, despite the change in the law in 1989 requiring that the record be held as confidential criminal justice information, because the requirement for expungement was self-executing. The Supreme Court also noted that the expungement requirement applied to records of conviction notwithstanding the requirement in this section that the Department of Justice maintain records of convictions of licensees. Further, the Supreme Court also held, relying upon St. v. Brander, 280 M 148, 930 P2d 31 (1996), that because "expungement" means to destroy and was without limitation, all traces of the conviction record should have been destroyed, that the record of the 1977 conviction was maintained by the Park County Sheriff in violation of the law, and that the 1977 county conviction record should not have been used as the basis for the felony charge. In response to the state's argument that the expungement requirement, enacted in 1981, applied prospectively only to convictions occurring after the requirement's effective date, the Supreme Court noted that it had rejected that argument in St. v. Reams, 284 M 448, 945 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 972 (1997). St. v. Bowles, 284 M 490, 947 P2d 52, 54 St. Rep. 962 (1997).

Admissibility of Certified Abstract of Driving History and Copy of Suspension Notification Letter: Once certified as set out in subsection (6) of this section, the authenticity of motor vehicle license information is established for purposes of admissibility without extrinsic evidence. Therefore, a certified abstract of driving history was admissible as was a certified copy of a suspension notification letter, which fell within the class of self-authenticating documents under Rule 902, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10); the public document exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10); and the requirements of the best evidence rule under Rule 1005, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). Taken together, this evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for driving with a suspended license. Billings v. Lindell, 236 M 519, 771 P2d 134, 46 St. Rep. 557 (1989).

Justice's Court — No Authority to Vacate Conviction and Order Alteration of Driver's Civil Records: A Justice's Court does not have authority to vacate a conviction or to direct alteration of the records of the Division of Motor Vehicles. Therefore, a Justice's Court could not order the Division to strike a prior DUI conviction and not consider it in revoking the driver's license on a second conviction. The District Court properly granted the Division's motion to quash a Writ of Mandate issued by the District Court staying the actions of the Division. Lancaster v. Dept. of Justice, 218 M 97, 706 P2d 126, 42 St. Rep. 1425 (1985).

Part 2
Habitual Traffic Offenders

Part Case Notes

Unlawful Operation of Motor Vehicle by Minor — Not Violative of Habitual Traffic Offender Law: A finding that a youth has violated 61-12-601 (now repealed) upholds the policy of the habitual traffic offender law and is consistent with the philosophy of emphasizing rehabilitation over retribution. St. v. Gee, 222 M 498, 723 P2d 934, 43 St. Rep. 1452 (1986).

Validity of Citations May Not Be Challenged in Habitual Offender Hearing — Act Constitutional: Defendant, against whom proceedings were brought under the habitual traffic offender law, challenged the law's constitutionality. The District Court denied defendant's constitutional claims and adjudged defendant a habitual offender. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed and held: (1) defendant had adequate notification of all citations involved, even though one citation was omitted from the complaint, because the record substantiated the convictions and there was no ambiguity regarding the convictions; (2) the law does not violate due process or constitute cruel and unusual punishment; (3) the statutory point system is not arbitrary or capricious; (4) traffic offender points that previously resulted in license suspension may be used to determine habitual offender status; (5) due process does not require that a ticketed motorist be advised that habitual traffic offender points result from a conviction; (6) in a hearing to determine habitual offender status, the defendant cannot collaterally attack a citation for which he forfeited bail; (7) the fact that defendant was not advised of his right to counsel in relation to several citations does not prevent use of those citations to determine habitual offender status; and (8) in a license revocation hearing, the District Court Judge does not have power to issue a probationary license, regardless of 3-5-311. State ex rel. Majerus v. Carter, 214 M 272, 693 P2d 501, 41 St. Rep. 2468 (1984), followed in part and distinguished in part in In re Driver's License of Anderson, 284 M 109, 943 P2d 978, 54 St. Rep. 797 (1997).

Administrative Suspension Not to Remove Habitual Offender Points: The Highway Patrol petitioned to have defendant formally declared a habitual traffic offender. The District Court refused, contending that the defendant had accumulated only 11 points since his license had been suspended under 61-5-206. At that time he had 27 habitual offender points. The District Court held that those points were removed by the administrative suspension. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, holding that the removal of points required by 61-11-211 applied only to revocations and not to administrative suspensions. No contrary legislative intent is indicated by the statutes. Suspension of a license under 61-5-206 is a civil proceeding and not a criminal prosecution. The deprivation of the driving privilege under 61-5-206 is intended to protect the public and is not done for the punishment of the individual. The Supreme Court held that the same traffic offense may be used first to suspend a license under 61-5-206, and then to be cumulated with additional points to allow revocation as a habitual offender. State ex rel. Griffith v. Brustkern, 202 M 438, 658 P2d 410, 40 St. Rep. 194 (1983).

Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

Chapter 542 in (2)(f) near end substituted "described" for "defined"; in (5) at end after "highway" deleted "as the term is defined in 61-1-201"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

Chapter 395 in definition of conviction inserted "or nolo contendere"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Severability: Section 8, Ch. 43, L. 1999, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 25, Ch. 309, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to license applications, renewals, and reexaminations submitted after September 30, 1999."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 393 in definition of habitual traffic offender, in (j) at beginning, substituted "any of the" for "a" and after "protection" substituted "offenses under 61-6-301 and 61-6-302" for "offense under 61-6-304"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 365 in definition of habitual traffic offender inserted (j) allocating 5 points for a mandatory motor vehicle liability protection offense under 61-6-304; and in (2)(k) substituted "subsection (k)" for "subsection (j)".

1989 Amendment: In definition of habitual traffic offender, at end of (b), inserted "or negligent vehicular assault"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1987 Amendment: Inserted "(3)" before "There shall . . ."; and redesignated former (3) as (4).

1983 Amendment: In (2)(d), after "drugs of any kind" inserted "or operation of a motor vehicle by a person with alcohol concentration of 0.10 or more".

Case Notes

Conviction Held to Not Be Within Three-Year Period: Anderson challenged the Department of Justice's declaration that he was a habitual traffic offender on the basis that he had had three DUI convictions within a 3-year period. Anderson had been convicted of his first DUI by a City Court in 1991 and had appealed that conviction to District Court. In 1996, the parties stipulated to have the case remanded to the City Court for imposition of the sentence. The Supreme Court held that the conviction was in 1991 and not in 1996 when Anderson stipulated to dismiss his appeal and have the case remanded for sentencing and that therefore the conviction was not within the 3-year period. In re Driver's License of Anderson, 284 M 109, 943 P2d 978, 54 St. Rep. 797 (1997).

License Revocation Proceedings No Challenge to Validity of Convictions — Point System Not Arbitrary or Capricious: Licensing drivers is within the police power of the state, and courts will not substitute their opinion for the Legislature's as to point system. A defendant can be charged habitual offender points for citations of which he claims he is innocent because a defendant is not entitled to attack prior convictions in a revocation hearing. In a revocation hearing, a defendant is entitled to dispute only the accuracy of the records, not the propriety of the convictions. State ex rel. Majerus v. Carter, 214 M 272, 693 P2d 501, 41 St. Rep. 2468 (1984), followed in part and distinguished in part in In re Driver's License of Anderson, 284 M 109, 943 P2d 978, 54 St. Rep. 797 (1997).

Violation in Another State Included in Habitual Offender Calculation: Defendant was declared a habitual traffic offender. In order to reach the point designation, a speeding violation from the state of Washington was included. Defendant contended that because violations of Montana speed limits mandated by federal fuel conservation conditions may not be included in the calculation, the Washington violation should not be included. The court found that the Washington violation would not be a mere conservation violation in Montana but a violation of the interstate nighttime speed limit. Under 61-5-401, Montana has adopted a Driver License Compact giving effect to violations committed in other jurisdictions. The Washington violation was correctly treated as a speeding violation in the habitual traffic offender calculation. State ex rel. Landon v. Macek, 208 M 172, 676 P2d 228, 41 St. Rep. 247 (1984).

Habitual Offender — Complaint Invalid for Lack of Substantiation of Prior Charge: The complaint to have defendant declared to be a habitual offender was invalid on its face since one of the offenses claimed against defendant, the point value of which was necessary to meet the 30-point requirement of this section, was a conviction under 61-7-108 for failure to report an accident by the quickest means, but no summons or other information was appended sufficient to substantiate the conviction. With respect to that charge the complaint should have stated the date of the alleged charge, the place it occurred, the arresting officer, but most importantly that there was bodily injury or death involved, or that apparent property damage in the amount of $100 or more was incurred. State ex rel. Sol v. Orcutt, 180 M 15, 588 P2d 996 (1979).

2003 Amendment: Chapter 556 deleted former (3) and (4) that read: "(3) If the records maintained by the department show that a person's driving record brings the person within the definition of a driver in need of rehabilitation and improvement, the department shall:

(a) declare the person a driver in need of rehabilitation and improvement;

(b) notify the person that unless the person enrolls in and successfully completes, within 90 days of notification, a certified driver rehabilitation and improvement course, as provided in 61-2-302, the person's driver's license will be suspended for a period not to exceed 6 months or until the person has successfully completed the course, whichever occurs first;

(c) provide the person with a list of certified driver rehabilitation and improvement courses and information about how the person may comply with the provisions of this subsection (3) if a driver rehabilitation and improvement program does not exist near the person's residence; and

(d) send the notice as provided in subsection (2).

(4) If the person fails to enroll in a certified driver rehabilitation and improvement program or fails to successfully complete the program or an appropriate substitute within 90 days, the department may suspend the person's driver's license as provided in 61-5-206 for a period not to exceed 6 months or until the person has successfully completed the course, whichever occurs first." Amendment effective May 5, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 218 inserted (3) concerning declaration of and notice to a person who is a driver in need of rehabilitation and improvement; inserted (4) concerning license suspension for failure to enroll in certified driver rehabilitation and improvement program; and made minor changes in style. 1999 Amendment: Chapter 309 in second sentence in (2) substituted "certified reproduction" for "certified copy" and after "record" substituted "as contained in the computer storage device used by the department for recordkeeping" for "and copies of all relevant abstracts of convictions and bond forfeitures". Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Applicability: Section 25, Ch. 309, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to license applications, renewals, and reexaminations submitted after September 30, 1999."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 338 in (1), after "habitual traffic offender", deleted "as defined in 61-11-203(2)"; inserted (1)(a) through (1)(c) establishing Department's duties related to declaration, revocation, and notification relating to habitual traffic offender; in (2) inserted first sentence requiring first-class mail, substituted second sentence relating to certified copy of convictions and bond forfeitures for "forthwith certify two copies of that person's driving record and two copies of all relevant abstracts of conviction", and substituted last two sentences relating to notice of right to appeal declaration and revocation for former last two sentences that read: "One copy of the record and abstracts shall be certified to the attorney general and one copy of the record and abstracts shall be certified to the county attorney for the county wherein the person is found. If the person is not licensed by Montana to drive a motor vehicle but is licensed in another state, the department may certify the copy of the records and abstracts to the attorney general and also to the county attorney for the county in which the person is found or, in the alternative, to the county attorney for the county of Lewis and Clark"; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: Substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles in three places.

Case Notes

Notice of Necessity for Driver to Complete Driver Rehabilitation and Improvement Course Not Required Following Repeal of Notice Requirement — Substantive Right Not Affected: Keeney accumulated 30 conviction points in a 3-year period and was notified by the Department of Justice that his driver's license was revoked for 3 years. Keeney had accumulated 18 conviction points on speeding violations by May 2, 2003, the last points being acquired from a speeding violation in Idaho. Prior to its May 5, 2003, repeal, subsection (3)(b) of this section required that a driver who accumulated 18 or more conviction points be notified of the necessity to complete a driver rehabilitation and improvement course. Keeney asserted that his due process rights were violated when the Department failed to notify him of his status as a habitual offender under the former notice requirement, essentially challenging the perceived retroactive application of the repealed provision. However, the Department was not notified of the Idaho violation until May 28, 2003. Therefore, the Department properly applied the law as it stood on May 5, 2003. The Department did not change the method of calculating points for speeding infractions prior to the repeal and did not punish Keeney for violations that occurred before the repeal, but rather properly considered the previous violations as points against Keeney's record when he finally accumulated 30 points. Once Keeney reached the 30-point plateau within a 3-year period, he was correctly sent a notice of revocation and afforded the option for judicial review of the revocation. Procedural due process required nothing more because it was not necessary to advise Keeney of his continuing duty to act as a law-abiding citizen. In re Driver's License of Keeney v. Dept. of Justice, 2006 MT 152, 332 M 446, 139 P3d 814 (2006).

1985 Amendment: Substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles in two places.

Case Notes

Driver's License — Property Interest, Not Right — Revocation Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment: Revocation of driver's license under habitual traffic offender's law is civil in nature, and the due process standards are not as strict as in criminal actions. The law's predispositional court hearing satisfies due process rights, and a postdispositional hearing is not necessary. Licensing drivers is within the police power of the state, and the fact that the law gives a judge no discretion to determine who is a habitual traffic offender or the consequences of being one does not constitute cruel or unusual punishment. State ex rel. Majerus v. Carter, 214 M 272, 693 P2d 501, 41 St. Rep. 2468 (1984).

1991 Amendment: At end of first sentence inserted "subject to the provisions of 61-2-302"; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: Substituted reference to department of justice for reference to division of motor vehicles.

1991 Amendment: At end of first sentence inserted requirement that Department extend revocation period for an additional 1 year; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Four-Wheeler Driven on Road — Motor Vehicle by Statutory Definition: A four-wheeler driven by the defendant on roads around town was a motor vehicle, as defined in 61-1-101, even if two subsections of the definition applied to it as a motor vehicle. Therefore driving the four-wheeler was covered by the provisions of this section. St. v. Otten, 2011 MT 83, 360 Mont. 144, 253 P.3d 834.

Extreme Emergency — Burden of Proof on Defendant: The extreme emergency provision set forth in this section that would allow a habitual offender to drive is not an element of the offense to be proven by the state. It is a defense, and the burden of proof of that extreme emergency can properly be placed on the defendant. St. v. George, 219 M 377, 711 P2d 1379, 43 St. Rep. 26 (1986).

No Extreme Emergency: The burden of proving extreme emergency is on the defendant. In this case, the defendant has failed to meet that burden as he has not shown by a preponderance of the evidence that it was necessary for him to drive to save life, limb, or property in an extreme emergency. St. v. George, 219 M 377, 711 P2d 1379, 43 St. Rep. 26 (1986).

Witness' Statement Not Referred to in Affidavit — No Ex Post Facto Problem — Admissible as Prior Inconsistent Statement: Defendant was convicted of operating a motor vehicle while designated a habitual traffic offender. Proceeding pro se, the defendant argued on appeal that failure to refer to a witness' statement in the affidavit supporting leave to file information constituted an ex post facto problem. The court held that he simply misunderstood that legal theory. The court further held that the statement, which asserted that defendant drove from Great Falls to Loma, was admissible as a prior inconsistent statement because the witness testified at trial that he, not the defendant, drove that distance. St. v. Grant, 217 M 357, 704 P2d 1064, 42 St. Rep. 1248 (1985).

Case Notes

Municipality's Authority to Adopt Ordinance Limiting University Students' Rights to Park on City Streets: A university student association challenged the legality of a city ordinance limiting parking in residential areas near the university to residents of those areas. The Supreme Court held that municipalities have the power to regulate parking and that regulating parking to relieve congestion in certain residential neighborhoods was a reasonable exercise of governmental authority. Assoc. Students v. Missoula, 261 M 231, 862 P2d 380, 50 St. Rep. 1301 (1993).

Escalating Fines for Parking Violations — Unconstitutional: An escalating fine schedule for parking violations where the amount to be paid depends on the length in the delay in paying after being cited is in violation of the basic principle of law that punishment must be for the violation and proportional to the gravity of the offense and hence is violative of Art. II, sec. 28, Mont. Const., which provides that laws for punishment of crime shall be founded on principles of prevention and reformation. Missoula v. Shea, 202 M 286, 661 P2d 410, 40 St. Rep. 91 (1983).

Parking Ordinance — Presumption That Owner Parked Vehicle — Unconstitutional Shifting of Burden: In striking down a parking ordinance, the Supreme Court held that to make the owner of a vehicle prima facie liable upon proof that his vehicle has been parked illegally is equivalent to a presumption that the owner parked the vehicle. The effect of the presumption is to violate constitutional due process requirements by shifting the burden of persuasion to defendant and contradicting the presumption of innocence. Missoula v. Shea, 202 M 286, 661 P2d 410, 40 St. Rep. 91 (1983).

Parking Ordinance — Vicarious Criminal Responsibility: A city may, in the exercise of its police power, enact a parking ordinance that provides that the registered owner of a motor vehicle is vicariously criminally responsible for illegal parking by another unless it is shown that the vehicle was being used without the owner's consent. Such an ordinance does not violate due process restrictions (overruling a contrary holding in St. v. Jetty, 176 M 519, 579 P2d 1228 (1978)), but the ordinance must conform to the absolute liability requirements of 45-2-104. Missoula v. Shea, 202 M 286, 661 P2d 410, 40 St. Rep. 91 (1983).

Intoxication — City Traffic Code Not in Conflict With State Statute: Where the defendant was found to have violated a city traffic code proscribing a certain level of intoxication "within this municipality", the District Court did not err in holding that the traffic code was not in conflict with a state statute proscribing the same conduct "upon the highways of this state". While the city has chosen to use language that does not precisely mirror the language of the corresponding state statute, any conflict between the ordinance and 61-8-401 is resolved when that section is read in pari materia with this section, authorizing the city to regulate persons driving motor vehicles under the influence of alcohol. Billings v. Weatherwax, 193 M 163, 630 P2d 1216, 38 St. Rep. 1034 (1981).

Driving Under Influence: A city ordinance which penalized drunken driving within the city in the same terms as subsections (a) and (d), section 32-2142, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-8-401(1) and 61-8-714), was valid and enforceable even though the Legislature had acted on the subject. Bozeman v. Ramsey, 139 M 148, 362 P2d 206 (1961).

Conflicting Statute and Ordinance: A former statute provided that motor vehicles shall not pass a standing streetcar at a distance less than 8 feet nor at a speed greater than 6 miles an hour. A city ordinance provided that on business streets automobiles must not be driven faster than 12 miles an hour and must stop when passing a standing streetcar on the side on which passengers are discharged and received. The ordinance was controlling, and under it defendant was not required to stop when driving on the opposite side of a standing streetcar or to clear it by a space of 8 feet. Carey v. Guest, 78 M 415, 258 P 236 (1927).

Attorney General's Opinions

Mandatory Seatbelt Ordinance: Under Montana law and the Montana Constitution, a municipality with self-governing powers may enact a mandatory seatbelt ordinance that provides for a fine or jail sentence for violation of the ordinance as long as the fine or penalty does not exceed $500 and the imprisonment does not exceed 6 months for any one offense, and as long as such an ordinance is not prohibited by the city charter. (See T. 61, ch. 13, part 1, enacted in 1987.) 41 A.G. Op. 47 (1986).

City Council — Lack of Authority to Regulate Crosswalk on Federal-Aid Highway in Manner Inconsistent With State Law: A city council may not enact an ordinance requiring a driver of a motor vehicle on a federal-aid or state highway to stop for a pedestrian within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is not on the half of the roadway on which the vehicle is traveling and when the pedestrian is not close enough to be in danger. 41 A.G. Op. 10 (1985).

Board of County Commissioners — Right to Set Speed Limits: A Board of County Commissioners, constituted in a commission form of government, may alter otherwise statutorily established speed limits by compliance with 61-8-310. It may further adopt traffic ordinances to the extent permitted under 61-12-101(14), and any such ordinances may include penalty provisions. 40 A.G. Op. 51 (1984).

Lack of Efforts to Notify Vehicle Owner After Vehicle Towed — Not Abandoned or Junk Vehicle — Summary Judgment Proper: Springer owned a van that he parked on a Bozeman street. A parking control officer placed a notice of abandoned vehicle specifying a September 25 tow date on the van. On the tow date, Springer moved the van to the other side of the street. Three days later, the van was towed and subsequently destroyed. Springer was never notified of the towing. Springer brought an action against the officer and the city to recover damages for destruction of the van. The District Court determined that the van was neither an abandoned vehicle under this section nor a junk vehicle under 75-10-501 and that the city did not take reasonable efforts to notify Springer that the van had been towed, as required by 61-12-402. Springer brought an action against the officer and the city to recover damages for destruction of the van. The District Court determined that the van was neither an abandoned vehicle under 61-12-401 nor a junk vehicle under 75-10-501 and that the city did not take reasonable efforts to notify Springer that the van had been towed, as required by this section. Summary judgment awarding damages to Springer was proper. Springer v. Becker, 284 M 267, 949 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 876 (1997).

Reasonable regulations include mandatory vehicle registration, insurance, and seatbelt usage. The privilege may be revoked for failure to comply with regulations. No one in the state is exempt from the regulations, including appellant, who claims to be a "free man" who is not a 14th amendment citizen and who therefore does not need to obey state or federal law. Evidence of Use or Nonuse of Seatbelt Admissible in Case for Damages Related to Vehicle's Seatbelt System — Writ of Supervisory Control Granted — District Court' s Grant of Motion in Limine Reversed: Decedent's vehicle was struck by another vehicle, causing his car to roll. The personal representative of the decedent's estate, alleging that the decedent was killed because his seatbelt, which he was wearing at the time of the accident, had slackened and caused him to be ejected from the vehicle as it rolled, filed a lawsuit against Ford, the vehicle manufacturer, alleging negligent design and strict liability. The District Court granted Ford's motion in limine to prohibit evidence of the decedent's use of his seatbelt at the time of the accident pursuant to 61-13-106, or for the personal representative to forego his negligence claims if he chose to introduce evidence of the use of the seatbelt. The personal representative filed a petition for a writ of supervisory control, arguing that the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law. The Supreme Court granted the petition and held that as long as an action for damages is related to injuries arising out of the condition of the vehicle's seatbelt system, 61-13-106 does not prohibit evidence of seatbelt use. Stokes v. 13th Judicial District Court, 2011 MT 182, 361 Mont. 279, 259 P.3d 754.

Seatbelt Rendered Inoperable — Negligence Per Se: Pursuant to 61-9-409, there is a duty to maintain a motor vehicle in a way that seatbelts are available for the driver's and passenger's use in the event they choose to use them. Breach of that duty constitutes negligence per se. Nothing in 61-9-409, in this section, or in Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), precludes evidence that seatbelts were unavailable and thus not in use at the time of an accident. Nor does the fact that the unavailability of a seatbelt was not the cause of the original accident relieve the duty under 61-9-409 to provide seatbelts. Califato v. Gerke, 258 M 68, 852 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 428 (1993).

Immunity From Suit — Airport Manager as Agent of Municipality: Under the 1889 Montana Constitution, when city and county leased hangar facilities and designated one of two lessees as airport manager, and the lessees were obligated to maintain only the portion of the airport leased to them, the city and county having retained control over the unleased portions, the airport manager was the agent of the city and county and was not liable for an accident occurring on unleased portion. A municipality was immune from suit for injuries resulting from the maintenance or operation of an airport. Barovich v. Miles City, 135 M 394, 340 P2d 819 (1959); Holland v. W. Airlines, Inc., 154 F. Liability Insurance: Under the 1889 Montana Constitution, the fact that the city had obtained a policy of liability insurance did not in itself result in any waiver of sovereign immunity from liability for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when she slipped and fell on floor of municipal airport owned by the city and leased to defendant airline. 2001 Amendment: Chapter 404 deleted former (3) that read: "(3) When the airport loan program is terminated, any balance of the bond proceeds that is not loaned must remain in the state special revenue fund to be invested, and the income must be used to retire the outstanding debt on the remaining bond proceeds"; in (3)(a) after "the proceeds of the" changed reference to aviation fuel tax from 3 cents a gallon to 4 cents a gallon; in (3)(a)(ii)(A) near beginning substituted "2 cents a gallon" for "1 cent a gallon", after "grants to municipalities" inserted "for airport development or improvement programs and to provide navigational aids, safely improvements, weather reporting services", and at end substituted "services for airports and landing fields and for the state's airways" for "purposes as provided in subsection (4)(b)"; inserted (3)(b) authorizing loans to local governments and state agencies for aeronautical purposes; in (5) after "account provided for in" substituted "subsection (3)(a)(ii)" for "67-1-305" and near end after "pavement preservation" inserted "grants, with the approval of the board"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

2000 Amendment: Chapter 8 in (4)(a) substituted "3-cent-a-gallon tax" for "2-cent-per-gallon tax"; in (4)(a)(i) substituted "2 cents" for "1 cent"; inserted (4)(a)(ii)(B) concerning 25% of collections from passenger air carriers; inserted (6) concerning deposit of 25% of collections from passenger air carriers; and made minor changes in style. exception clause and near middle substituted "aviation fuel" for "gasoline"; and made minor changes in style. Effective Date — Contingent Termination: Section 17, Ch. 642, L. 1993, provided that this section is effective July 1, 1993, and terminates on the first day of the month 60 days after the balance in the aeronautical loan account, after deposits and less refunds, reaches $1 million. 1985 Session Law Reference: The reference to sec. 1, Ch. 676, L. 1985, in (3)(a)(i) was left in its original form because the section was an appropriation that was not codified. It appropriated $1.7 million from the long-range building program for airport improvement upon sale of bonds for that purpose.

1985 Effective and Termination Dates: Section 4, Ch. 676, L. 1985, provided: "This act is effective on passage and approval. [Approved May 6, 1985] This act terminates June 30, 1987, except that a loan made prior to June 30, 1987, is subject to the provisions of this act notwithstanding the duration of the loan."

Chapter 654 inserted former (3), which was temporary and deleted by the compiler. But see "1983 Effective and Termination Dates" compiler's comment below as to continuing application to loans. Former (3) read: "(3) (a) There shall be deposited in the state special revenue fund to the credit of the department of administration, to be used, upon recommendation of the department of commerce, to provide loans to local and state government agencies for airport improvement projects in amounts not to exceed the required sponsor's share of projects authorized by the United States government for funding from the federal Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982:

(ii) mature not later than such bonds; and

(iii) include reimbursement of administrative costs as required by subsection (3)(c).

(c) An amount equal to 1% of the loans provided under subsection (3)(a) may be allocated from the state special revenue fund for administrative purposes."

1983 Effective and Termination Dates: Section 2, Ch. 654, L. 1983, provided: "This act is effective on passage and approval. This act terminates on June 30, 1985, except that a loan made prior to June 30, 1985, is subject to the provisions of this act notwithstanding the duration of such loan."

Case Notes

Purchase of Aircraft: The Commission is empowered to purchase aircraft, the expense of which is to be paid out of the aviation fund as an expense of administration. Holtz v. Babcock, 143 M 341, 389 P2d 869 (1963).

Appropriation: The appropriation made by p. 761, L. 1947, from the gasoline drawback fund was an appropriation of the 1 cent gasoline tax for payment of the expenses of the Commission. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948).

Nature of Gasoline Tax: The practical operation of the aeronautics laws was to levy a 1 cent per gallon tax on the user of gasoline for aviation purposes. The tax was used to regulate the aviation operators. Therefore, it was not a revenue measure and was not subject to Art. XII, sec. 10, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. VIII, sec. 14, 1972 Mont. Const.). It was not necessary that the proceeds of the 1 cent gasoline tax be paid into the treasury as part of the general fund, but it was competent for the Legislature to provide that it be kept as a separate fund. State ex rel. St. Aeronautics Comm'n v. Bd. of Examiners, 121 M 402, 194 P2d 633 (1948).

Attorney General's Opinions

General Fund Responsible for Payment of Airport Loan Program Shortfall: Proceeds from bonds issued under the long-range building program were appropriated for use by the airport improvement program. As bond retirement occurred, a deficit shortfall was created between the bond payments and the repayment of the loans. Although the Legislature in 1993 established a different loan program with imposition of a 1-cent tax on aviation fuel pursuant to this section, there was no suggestion that proceeds from that tax were to be used for payment of bond proceeds under the previous loan program. Despite the fact that a legislative audit recommended that payment of the shortfall on the bonds should be paid from either of two special revenue accounts of the Aeronautics Division, the Attorney General held that both the bond instrument and the appropriation of bond proceeds clearly showed that the general fund was the proper source for payment on the bond shortfall. 47 A.G. Op. 7 (1997).

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 636 (Ch. 417, L. 1983) read: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it provides rulemaking authority to the Department of Commerce [now Department of Transportation] in section 1 [67-3-212].

The Legislature intends that rules be made that provide a reasonable definition of origination of a flight. The purpose here is not to cover the flight that originates out of state and takes a short stop in Montana to pick up fuel with the intent of continuing directly on the journey. The Legislature also recognizes that rules may be required to conform enforcement to the manner in which the Federal Aviation Administration administers the flight plans filed with it. The Legislature intends that the Department should adopt any rules necessary in this regard."

General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Independent Exercise of Eminent Domain Power by Joint Airport Board Member: Plaintiffs argued that 67-10-205(2)(c) mandates that a proceeding for eminent domain may not be brought by a single municipal member of a joint airport board but rather only as a joint action with the other signatories. The Supreme Court found this to be an overly narrow interpretation in light of other statutory authority in Title 67, ch. 10, parts 1 and 2, which empowers municipalities to act either jointly or independently, and under the broad grant of power to cities under Art. XI, sec. 4, Mont. Const. By its terms, 67-10-205(2)(c) requires joint action when an eminent domain proceeding is brought pursuant to the authority of the joint airport board; however, it does not preclude action separate and apart from the board. Lake v. Lake County, 233 M 126, 759 P2d 161, 45 St. Rep. 1354 (1988).

Case Notes

Damages Recoverable for Diminution in Value of Land Caused by Change in Access: In an action to condemn 20.45 acres of land for the purpose of expanding a municipal airport, landowners appealed the commissioners' assessment to the District Court. Prior to trial, the District Court granted the airport board's motion in limine and excluded evidence on diminution of value of landowners' remaining land due to the abandonment of a county road contained in the condemned parcel, ruling that landowners had no legal interest in the continuance of a county road unless discontinuance of that road deprived them of access to their remaining property. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that although condemnees cannot recover damages for a reduction in traffic flow caused by discontinuance of a county road, they can recover damages if the change in access has caused a substantial change in value in the condemnees' land and landowners should have been permitted to introduce evidence on this issue. McCone County v. James, 198 M 430, 646 P2d 1209, 39 St. Rep. 1107 (1982).

Necessity of Eminent Domain — Balancing Test: When a flight path easement to insure safe flight would adequately serve public need, it was not necessary for the county to acquire a fee simple title. Silver Bow County v. Hafer, 166 M 330, 532 P2d 691 (1975).

Subterfuge to Circumvent Debt Limitation: When Airport Commission, which was agent of city and county, borrowed funds from the State Aeronautics Commission, the language whereby county's obligation to repay was seemingly limited was a subterfuge to circumvent the debt limitation imposed by law and to avoid the requirement of approval by a majority of the electors of the county because the Airport Commission was itself obligated to pay interest on the loan. Burlington N., Inc. v. Richland County, 162 M 364, 512 P2d 707 (1973).

Immunity From Suit: Under the 1889 Montana Constitution, a municipality was immune from suit for injuries resulting from the maintenance or operation of an airport. Barovich v. Miles City, 135 M 394, 340 P2d 819 (1959); Holland v. W. Airlines, Inc., 154 F. Supp. 457 (D.C. Mont. 1957).

Liability Insurance: Under the 1889 Montana Constitution, the fact that the city had obtained a policy of liability insurance did not in itself result in any waiver of sovereign immunity from liability for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when she slipped and fell on floor of municipal airport owned by the city and leased to defendant airline. Holland v. W. Airlines, Inc., 154 F. Supp. 457 (D.C. Mont. 1957).

Case Notes

Question Whether Sufficient Airport Access Provided — Summary Judgment Precluded: Plaintiff filed an action against the city of Kalispell asserting that the city had constructed a fence between plaintiff's aircraft fueling and maintenance business and the airport that unreasonably interfered with plaintiff's use of the public easement and plaintiff's business prospects. The city had installed a 48-foot gate to plaintiff's business, but plaintiff contended that the gate was too small. The District Court noted that the city had authority to fence the airport and granted summary judgment for the city. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that a genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether the fence and gate provided by the city tortiously restricted or interfered with plaintiff's business and implied easement and whether the city's actions intentionally inflicted severe emotional distress. Summary judgment was therefore inappropriate, and the case was remanded for trial. Talmage v. Kalispell, 2009 MT 434, 354 M 125, 223 P3d 328 (2009).

Attorney General's Opinions

Cause Required for Removal of Member of Airport Authority Commission: Under common law, in the absence of statutory provisions relating to removal, a public officer may be removed from office only for cause and only after notice and an opportunity to be heard. Cause does not include a discretionary exercise of statutory authority, and the mere exercise of the powers of an office does not constitute cause for removal. There are no specific statutes governing the removal of an airport authority commissioner. Thus, an airport authority commissioner may be removed only for cause during the commissioner's term of office, which implies some type of misconduct or neglect of duty. As long as commissioners are exercising powers authorized by law, they are not subject to removal during their terms of office. 49 A.G. Op. 8 (2001). on unleased portion. A municipality is immune from suit for injuries resulting from the maintenance or operation of an airport. Barovich v. Miles City, 135 M 394, 340 P2d 819 (1959); Holland v. W. Airlines, Inc., 154 F. Supp. 457 (D.C. Mont. 1957).

Case Notes

Debt Limit: Board of County Commissioners, which overtaxed taxpayers in one year in order to provide a fund for expenses for capital improvements and remodeling of airport, which expenses exceeded $21,000, clearly violated Art. XIII, sec. 5, 1889 Mont. Const., by incurring a liability for over $10,000 without the approval of a majority of the electors of the county; county was not able to argue that "no indebtedness or liability" had been created because the money was already on hand. Extraordinarily high levy created a "reserve fund" to be used for capital improvements which is not allowable due to restriction in this section of reserve funds to improvement of surfaces of runways or ramps. Burlington N., Inc. v. Flathead County, 162 M 371, 512 P2d 710 (1973).

Attorney General's Opinions

Calculation and Expenditure of "Carryforward" Mills Under 2001 Revision to Local Government Property Tax Levy and Budget Provisions: The 2001 revisions to local government property tax levy and budget laws instituted a general approach of deleting numeric limits on the number of mills that a local government could levy for any specific purpose and placed a cap on the number of mills that a local government is allowed to levy through property taxation. The combined effect was to free a local government to dedicate as much of its annual mill levy as it chooses for any lawful governmental purpose, as long as the total millage covered by the cap does not exceed the cap measured by the prior year's property tax assessments. Likewise, the "carryforward" provision in 15-10-420 does not depend on how many mills, if any, that a city chooses to devote to a particular purpose in any year. Instead, the provision allows a city, if it finds itself able to fund its operations without levying the full number of mills allowed, to hold in reserve for future years the authority to levy the difference between the number of mills allowed and the number actually levied. That authority is not calculated on the basis of the amount budgeted or the number of mills needed to fund a particular government function, but rather is calculated with reference to the whole amount raised by property taxes, subject to the statutory exceptions, without reference to how the money might have been spent in the prior year. However, the "carryforward" authority is prospective only and may not be applied to calculations for the 2001 budget year because the authority did not exist prior to July 1, 2001. Thus, "carryforward" mills may be levied in any future year after budget year 2001 and expended by a local government for any lawful purposes that the local government chooses. 49 A.G. Op. 5 (2001).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Transition From Pre-1974 Public Service Commission to Commission Established in 1974: Boedecker was elected in 1972 to serve a 6-year term on the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.). In 1974 (Ch. 339, L. 1974), the Legislature abolished the existing three-member P.S.C. and replaced it with a five-member P.S.C., which commenced its duties in January 1975. The Legislature provided that any member whose term had not expired was to continue in office to the end of his term. Boedecker died during the time between the 1974 primary and general elections. The statute under which Boedecker was elected and Ch. 339, L. 1974, both provided for filling of vacancies by Governor appointment. The appointee then holds office until the next general election and until his successor is elected and qualified. Therefore, the office of Public Service Commissioner that became vacant upon Boedecker's death must be placed on the 1974 general election ballot. The successor to the Governor's appointee will take office when elected and qualified and will serve out the unexpired term of Boedecker. 35 A.G. Op. 95 (1974).

69-1-102. Creation of public service commission.

Compiler's Comments

Reestablishment: Section 1, Ch. 588, L. 1983, provided: "The public service commission, department of public service regulation, created by 69-1-102, is reestablished for 6 years pursuant to 2-8-122, with existing statutory authority and rules."

Case Notes

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — No Authority in Negligence Action: An electric service customer filed an action in District Court alleging property damage based on a power company's negligence and negligence per se in terminating the customer's electric service. The District Court dismissed the action, reasoning that the customer did not exhaust administrative remedies before the Public Service Commission (PSC). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal on the grounds that the PSC is not vested with judicial powers and does not have the authority to adjudicate a negligence action seeking damages. Schuster v. NW. Energy Co., 2013 MT 364, 373 Mont. 54, 314 P.3d 650.

Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper Upon Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Absent Showing of Futility: Plaintiff filed for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief against state agencies and a subdivision water development company regarding plaintiff's provision of water to subdivisions developed by the company. The District Court dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed. Generally, before a party can seek declaratory relief in District Court, the party must exhaust its administrative remedies, although courts generally will not require exhaustion of administrative remedies when recourse to an administrative remedy would be futile. However, the mere possibility of an adverse decision does not mean that resort to an administrative agency is futile, nor does the possibility that agencies might render decisions that could in some degree conflict justify bypassing the administrative process. Plaintiff in this case could not demonstrate futility, and seeking to skip the administrative process constituted an unwarranted intrusion into the agencies' regulatory authority. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction when plaintiff did not first exhaust its administrative remedies before seeking judicial review. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2002 MT 327, 313 M 197, 60 P3d 958 (2002).

Limiting Phone Company Liability — Directory Listing Errors: Regulation of Montana Public Service Commission limiting the liability of a telephone company arising from errors in or omissions of directory listings to the amount of charges for such of the subscriber's service as is affected during the period covered by the directory in which the error or omission occurs is reasonable and binding on the subscriber. State ex rel. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. District Court, 160 M 443, 503 P2d 526 (1972).

Jurisdiction of Commissioner: District Court's Writ of Prohibition was vacated when it barred Board of Railroad Commissioners, ex officio the Public Service Commission, from performing its duties concerning water company's application to increase rates and charges. State ex rel. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. District Court, 158 M 139, 488 P2d 903 (1968).

Powers of Commission:

An order of the Public Service Commission directing an electric power company furnishing electricity to a small town to install a telephone service for the convenience of its 225 customers was not unlawful or unreasonable. Tobacco River Power Co. v. P.S.C., 109 M 521, 98 P2d 886 (1940).

The Public Service Commission, under its power to regulate a public utility, is clothed with authority not only to fix maximum but also minimum or precise rates. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

The Legislature in enacting the public service commission law intended not only to empower the Commission to regulate charges or fix rates, but also to see to it that reasonable service is rendered by the utility and that its equipment is reasonably adequate. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

The Public Service Commission is a creature of and clothed with only such powers as are clearly conferred upon it by the statute to which it owes its being. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

In the enactment of this law, the Legislature intended to provide a comprehensive and uniform system of regulation and control of public utilities by a specially created tribunal through which the state itself exercises its sovereign power. State ex rel. Billings v. Billings Gas Co., 55 M 102, 173 P 799 (1918).

Franchise Ordinance: An ordinance granting a public utility franchise after the enactment of the public service commission law is not invalid merely for the reason that such act vests exclusive jurisdiction in the Public Service Commission, but is valid until the Commission sees fit to act. Until then, the rate of compensation payable by the company is valid and binding. Baker v. Mont. Petroleum Co., 99 M 465, 44 P2d 735 (1935).

Public Utilities Defined:

When one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in that use and must submit to control by the public for the common good to the extent of the interest he has thus created. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

An irrigation company organized for the purpose of supplying water for the irrigation of agricultural lands is not a "public utility" within the meaning of the public service commission law, and is therefore not subject to supervision and regulation by the Public Service Commission. State ex rel. Thatcher v. Boyle, 62 M 97, 204 P 378 (1921).

Constitutionality:

Inasmuch as a franchise contract made in 1912 between a city and a gas company must be presumed to have been entered into with knowledge that the state could thereafter enact legislation toward exercising the power of rate regulation reposed in it and thus change the rates fixed by the contract, the public service commission law is not open to attack on the ground that it impairs the obligation of the contract made the year before. State ex rel. Billings v. Billings Gas Co., 55 M 102, 173 P 799 (1918), distinguished in Baker v. Mont. Petroleum Co., 99 M 465, 44 P2d 735 (1935). See also Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930), for discussion of constitutionality of the public service commission law.

The act conferring authority upon the Public Service Commission must be construed in harmony with the theory of self-government in cities and the retention of police power by the state. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 24 (1916).

Regulations made by the Public Service Commission must be reasonable in order to be valid, and any regulation that imposes upon a city an obligation which is invalid is not reasonable. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 24 (1916).

This part, creating a Public Service Commission and defining its powers, is constitutional. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 24 (1916).

Attorney General's Opinions

Acceptance of Severance Pay by Public Service Commissioner Not Breach of Ethics: Severance pay negotiated as part of a negotiated union contract agreement and supported by consideration, such as surrender of accrued seniority and entitlement to reemployment, does not constitute a gift within the meaning of 2-2-104 nor does the termination of employment and acceptance of severance pay constitute a substantial financial transaction for private business purposes within the meaning of 2-2-121. Therefore, a Public Service Commissioner did not violate the code of ethics for public officials and employees by temporarily reactivating and then terminating his employment with a railroad company in order to become eligible to receive severance pay negotiated between the railroad and the collective bargaining unit to which the Commissioner belonged. Notice to the other Commissioners was adequate to meet the terms of 2-2-121(2)(f). The action did not constitute the kind of private relationship contemplated by the code of ethics that would threaten the integrity of the position because the situation presented no opportunity to use the influence of the official position to further personal gain. 45 A.G. Retroactive Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 508, L. 1993, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to revenue generated by regulated activity beginning after April 1, 1993."

1987 Amendment: At end of (2)(a) inserted "separately stating gross revenues from sales to other regulated companies for resale".

1983 Amendment: Substituted reference to state special revenue fund for reference to earmarked revenue fund.

Case Notes

Funding of Public Service Commission and Consumer Counsel — Definition of "Regulated Companies" — Payment of Fees by Municipal Utility: The operations of the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) and the Montana Consumer Counsel (MCC) are not funded through the general fund as are most state government agencies but instead are funded by fees imposed on regulated companies, based on a percentage of the gross operating revenue of the company. Regulated companies are defined as all organizations, corporations, associations, or other public or private entities that are or may become subject to regulation by the P.S.C. or its successor agency. Under 69-7-101 and 69-7-102 (now repealed), the utilities are allowed to raise rates as long as they are not raised to yield more than a 12% increase in total annual revenue. If a rate increase exceeds 12%, the utility must apply to the P.S.C. for the increase. (See 1995 amendment to 69-7-101.) The utility's argument that both P.S.C. and MCC fees are user fees and that regulated companies do not have to pay the fees unless they use P.S.C. or MCC services during a given year would make it possible for a municipal utility to control and avoid imposition of fees except under extraordinary circumstances, which is outside the context of legislative intent. Thus, as a regulated company, the municipal utility of the city of Billings is subject to regulation by the P.S.C. Billings v. Dept. of Revenue, 270 M 307, 891 P2d 1149, 52 St. Rep. 196 (1995).

Attorney General's Opinions

Budget Amendment Not "Other Source": The Department of Revenue failed to apply a carryover balance in the earmarked revenue account (now state special revenue fund, Ch. 277, L. 1983) to the succeeding year. A budget amendment making the balance available to the office of the Consumer Counsel for expenditures is not an "other source" for additional money contemplated by this section. 39 A.G. Op. 59 (1982).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 42 in (3) substituted "subsection (1)" for "69-1-224"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 117 inserted (4) allowing immediate recovery of Consumer Counsel fees; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 10, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 508 in (1), at beginning, substituted "On or before August 31 of each year" for "Within 30 days following enactment of the legislative appropriation for the office of the consumer counsel"; in (1)(b) substituted "subsection (2)" for "subsection (3)", before "appropriation" substituted "current" for "base", and after "counsel" deleted "for the first year of the appropriation"; inserted (1)(c) relating to adjustment of the percentage multiplier; in (1)(d), after "percentage", deleted "determined in subsections (1)(a) and (b)" and after "paid" deleted "in the first year of the appropriation"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) On or before May 30 of the first year of the biennium, the department of revenue shall repeat the steps required by subsection (1) and compute the percentage multiplier for the second year, giving notice to the regulated companies"; in (2), after "multiplier", deleted "quarterly"; inserted (2)(d) providing that change in percentage multiplier is effective at beginning of next calendar quarter; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 24, 1993.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 508, L. 1993, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to revenue generated by regulated activity beginning after April 1, 1993."

1987 Amendment: Near beginning of (3)(a) substituted "shall" for "may"; and in last sentence of (4), after "Money", deleted "in the account".

Attorney General's Opinions

Failure to Deduct Carryover Balance — Not Subject to Appropriation: In determining the amount of the fee, the Department of Revenue failed to deduct the carryover balance from the previous year. This unappropriated balance was not available to the office of Consumer Counsel for expenditure under a budget amendment. Rather, the balance inures to the benefit of the regulated companies in the form of a corresponding lower fee for the succeeding year. 39 A.G. Op. 59 (1982).

69-1-225. Computation and collection of fee in absence of statement — penalty and interest.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendments: Chapter 676 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The department may add to the amount of the fee computed under subsection (1), in addition to any other penalty provided by law, a penalty of 10% thereof plus interest at the rate of 1% per month or fraction of month computed on the total amount of fee and penalty. Interest is computed from the date the fee is due to the date of payment"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) The department of revenue shall mail to the regulated company a letter setting forth the amount of the fee, penalty, and interest and notifying the company that payment of the full amount of the fee, penalty, and interest must be remitted within 15 days of the regulated company's receipt of the letter; otherwise a lien may be filed"; and inserted (2) providing for notice, date of payment, interest, and a penalty for delinquency. Amendment effective April 27, 1991.

Chapter 811 in (3), near beginning of first sentence, substituted "notice, pursuant to 15-1-211" for "letter" and at end, after "interest", deleted "and notifying the company that payment of the full amount of the fee, penalty, and interest must be remitted within 15 days of the regulated company's receipt of the letter, otherwise a lien may be filed" (amendments rendered void by Ch. 676) and inserted (3)(c) relating to review under 15-1-211.

Coordination: Section 19, Ch. 676, L. 1991, was a coordination section that provided that if Senate Bill No. 445 was passed and approved and if it included a section adopting a uniform tax appeal procedure, the bracketed language that constituted subsection (2) of this section was void. Senate Bill No. 445 was passed and approved as Ch. 811, L. 1991.

Section 31, Ch. 811, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to requests for refunds received by and the notices of additional tax issued by the department of revenue pursuant to [section 1] [15-1-211] after December 31, 1991."

1981 Amendment: Substituted "otherwise a warrant for distraint may be filed" for "otherwise a lien may be filed" at the end of (2).

69-1-227. Warrant for distraint.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: Substituted the first sentence allowing warrant for distraint if fee is not paid when due for a procedure whereby the department has a lien on the real property of the regulated company when the department files a copy of the amount due with the county clerk of court; and deleted a provision at the end of the section providing that the lien may be enforced in the same manner as judgment liens are enforced.

CHAPTER 3
REGULATION OF UTILITIES

Chapter Case Notes

Judicial Power of Public Service Commission: The Public Service Commission is a creature of statute. It has no inherent common-law powers. Its powers are to be ascertained by reference to the statute creating it, and any reasonable doubt as to the existence of the grant of a particular power will be resolved against the existence of the power. While statutes give the P.S.C. full power of supervision, regulation, and control of utilities, the Legislature has provided that its powers do not include judicial powers. Statutes do not confer upon the P.S.C. the power to restrain or enjoin the creation of a utility holding company during a P.S.C. investigation. Adequate remedies are provided in the court system. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 1712 (1983).

Public Service Commission — Power to Issue Summary Injunction-Type Order: The Public Service Commission issued an order prohibiting Montana Power from proceeding with a proposed corporate reorganization until the P.S.C. could investigate the reorganization. The order was issued without notice or hearing. Section 69-3-110 shows the clear legislative intent that the Commission use the court system to seek enforcement by injunction, as distinguished from issuing the injunction-type order on its own part. Summary issuance of an injunction-type order without notice or hearing should be limited to situations where the public risk to be avoided outweighs the limitations placed on the constitutional rights of the parties. In this case the Commission has advanced no justification for its disregard of the due process rights of Montana Power. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 1712 (1983).

Otherwise the P.S.C. does not have the authority to exercise the judicial functions of interpreting or enforcing such a contract. Billings v. (1) A county water district or a county sewer district formed under the provisions of Title 7, chapter 13, part 22 or 23, may impose, as it considers proper, rates, charges, and classifications for utility services to the residents of the district and other persons served by its utility system.

(2) In exercising its regulatory authority a county water or a county sewer district is granted the same authority and is bound by the same procedures and limitations as a municipality regulating a utility under the provisions of this chapter."

Section 4, Ch. 374, L. 1983, provided: "Coordination instruction. If Senate bill 436, introduced in the 48th Legislature, is passed and approved containing, as amendatory language in section 5 or any other section amending 69-3-101, an exclusion of county or consolidated city and county water or sewer districts as established under Title 7, chapter 13, parts 22 and 23, from the definition of public utility, then this act is void."

Senate Bill 436 was passed and approved and became Ch. 588, L. 1983. Chapter 374, L. 1983, is therefore void.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "except as provided in chapter 7" at the beginning of water and sewage exemption.

City as Public Utility: A city acting in its proprietary capacity as an operator of water, sewer, and lighting facilities is a public utility. St. v. Helena, 193 M 441, 632 P2d 332, 38 St. Rep. 1283 (1981).

Jurisdiction Over Municipal Sewage Rates: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has jurisdiction over municipal sewage rates and, accordingly, the issue of fairness of sewage rates is determined by the P.S.C. Gwynn v. Eureka, 178 M 191, 582 P2d 1262 (1978).

Limited Membership Association Not Public Utility: Defendant association was not public utility where only members were allowed to use water system furnished by association and members used system on nonprofit cost-sharing basis and were bound by its rules and regulations. Lockwood Water Users Ass'n v. Anderson, 168 M 303, 542 P2d 1217 (1975).

Water for Business Fire Protection: Water for business fire protection was a "business use" within this section, so a city supplying water for that purpose was a public utility as defined by this section. Polson v. P.S.C., 155 M 464, 473 P2d 508 (1970).

Water — Clothed With Public Interest: In an action to enjoin the inhabitants of a town from further use of a ditch that they had tapped for domestic uses over a period of years, considerable argument was made that plaintiffs were a public utility under this section and therefore subject to jurisdiction of Public Service Commission. However, the Commission was not a party to the action, and the court did not pass on the point but did hold that property (including water) may be clothed with a public interest, depending upon the extent and character of the use, making it a public consequence and affecting the community at large. Sherlock v. Greaves, 106 M 206, 76 P2d 87 (1938).

Property Devoted to Use in Public Interest: When one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in that use and must submit to control by the public for the common good to the extent of the interest he has thus created. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

Foreign Corporation Piping Gas Into State: A foreign corporation that was licensed to do business in Montana and that conveyed natural gas by pipeline from a neighboring state into this state and furnished it to a domestic corporation whose entire capital stock it owned (with the exception of 5 of 2,500 shares), for distribution of gas to domestic corporation's customers, was a public utility within the meaning of this section. As such it was subject to the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission of Montana and therefore required to furnish the Commission annual reports of its operations. Gallatin Natural Gas Co. v. P.S.C., 79 M 269, 256 P 373 (1927).

Irrigation Company: An irrigation company organized for the purpose of supplying water for the irrigation of agricultural lands is not a "public utility" within the meaning of this act and is therefore not subject to supervision and regulation by the Public Service Commission. State ex rel. Thatcher v. Boyle, 62 M 97, 204 P 378 (1921).

City Water Business: A city engaging in the water business is a public utility. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 54 (1916).

P.S.C. Jurisdiction Limited as Against City: It was the intention of the Legislature to go no further than to provide that, within the limited sphere of its jurisdiction, the Public Service Commission may make reasonable regulations that the city must heed, and to that extent only is the authority of the city superseded. It was not intended to take from the city the active management of its water plant, or the authority to appoint the proper officers and employees to operate it, or to interfere with such officers in the proper discharge of their duties. P.S.C. v. Helena, 52 M 527, 159 P 54 (1916).

Attorney General's Opinions

Authority for Creation of Public Benefit Nonprofit Corporation to Operate Electric and Natural Gas Utility Business: The Montana Nonprofit Corporation Act, Title 35, ch. 2, allows the creation of a public benefit nonprofit corporation and an interlocal agreement creating a corporation as the nonprofit corporation's sole member to operate an electric and natural gas utility. The authority created by interlocal agreement between self-governing municipalities may exercise only those powers that any of the municipalities might exercise. 51 A.G. Op. 5 (2005). Case Notes

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — No Authority in Negligence Action: An electric service customer filed an action in District Court alleging property damage based on a power company's negligence and negligence per se in terminating the customer's electric service. The District Court dismissed the action, reasoning that the customer did not exhaust administrative remedies before the Public Service Commission (PSC). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal on the grounds that the PSC is not vested with judicial powers and does not have the authority to adjudicate a negligence action seeking damages. Schuster v. NW. Energy Co., 2013 MT 364, 373 Mont. 54, 314 P.3d 650.

Judicial Power of Public Service Commission: The Public Service Commission is a creature of statute. It has no inherent common-law powers. Its powers are to be ascertained by reference to the statute creating it, and any reasonable doubt as to the existence of the grant of a particular power will be resolved against the existence of the power. While statutes give the P.S.C. full power of supervision, regulation, and control of utilities, the Legislature has provided that its powers do not include judicial powers. Statutes do not confer upon the P.S.C. the power to restrain or enjoin the creation of a utility holding company during a P.S.C. investigation. Adequate remedies are provided in the court system. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 1712 (1983).

Commission's Authority to Declare Telephone Service Inadequate: The Public Service Commission had authority under this section and 69-3-201 to issue an order, after a hearing, that telephone service provided by telephone company was not reasonably adequate. Intermountain Tel. & Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 201 M 74, 651 P2d 1015, 39 St. Rep. 1962 (1982).

Trade Secrets — When to Be Disclosed and to Whom — Protectable Property: A telephone utility was required to disclose trade secrets to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) to aid in a decision on its rate increase request. The utility was entitled to a protective order preventing access to the secrets by the general public, but the Montana Consumer Counsel and any citizen whose interest related to the ratemaking function of the P.S.C. could have access to the information. Use or disclosure of the trade secrets except for purposes of the ratemaking proceeding was prohibited. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 277, 634 P2d 181, 38 St. Rep. 1479 (1981). Mtn. States and its progeny were overruled to the extent that those decisions relied on the constitutional balancing test of the right to individual privacy against the public's right to examine documents or observe governmental deliberations as a basis of protecting trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information of nonhuman entities in Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Rate Increases by Public Service Commission — Private Contract Not Invalidated: A 1963 contract between the city of Billings and the County Water District of Billings Heights is valid and binding on the parties despite the increase in size of the service area of the County Water District and despite the city's contention that rate increases previously granted by the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) had the effect of nullifying the contract. When the P.S.C. exercises its jurisdiction over rates charged by a utility, the rate provisions are superseded but the remainder of the contract provisions remain in effect. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

No Authority to Require Independent Audit: The enforcement authority of the Public Service Commission under 69-3-106, 69-3-109, 69-3-202, and 69-3-203 does not include the power to order a private utility to employ an independent accounting firm to audit utility's costs. In re Mont. Power Co., 180 M 385, 590 P2d 1140 (1979).

Jurisdiction Over Municipal Sewage Rates: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has jurisdiction over municipal sewage rates and, accordingly, the issue of fairness of sewage rates is determined by the P.S.C. Gwynn v. Eureka, 178 M 191, 582 P2d 1262 (1978).

Statutory Expansion of Jurisdiction: When statutes are enacted by the Legislature that expand previously enacted statutes by broadening the jurisdiction of an administrative agency, the statutes are to be construed in relation to one another and, for construction purposes, should be considered as forming one consistent body of law. Gwynn v. Eureka, 178 M 191, 582 P2d 1262 (1978).

Case Notes

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — No Authority in Negligence Action: An electric service customer filed an action in District Court alleging property damage based on a power company's negligence and negligence per se in terminating the customer's electric service. The District Court dismissed the action, reasoning that the customer did not exhaust administrative remedies before the Public Service Commission (PSC). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal on the grounds that the PSC is not vested with judicial powers and does not have the authority to adjudicate a negligence action seeking damages. Schuster v. NW. Energy Co., 2013 MT 364, 373 Mont. 54, 314 P.3d 650.

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — Standing Under Statute Alone: In considering whether taxpayers had standing to file a complaint against NorthWestern Energy, the Supreme Court noted that the Public Service Commission is an administrative agency and is not vested with judicial powers. Therefore, its standing requirements are governed by statute and not by traditional case-or-controversy requirements. Williamson v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 32, 364 Mont. 128, 272 P.3d 71.

Access to Public Service Records — Media Required to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Prior to Court Action — Review of Confidentiality Rules Ordered: Several media organizations sought access to power company documents filed with the Public Service Commission. The Commission denied the request on confidentiality grounds, but rather than challenging the confidentiality claims through the Commission's administrative procedures, the organizations filed an action in District Court. The court proceeded to make factual and legal determinations to determine whether the requested documents constituted constitutionally protected trade secrets or proprietary information without the benefit of the Commission developing a record or making threshold determinations on the complex issues. The Supreme Court held that it was improper to bypass the administrative agency and take the issue to District Court without exhausting the Commission's administrative procedures, so the District Court was reversed with orders to remand the case to the Commission for further consideration. However, the Supreme Court also required the Commission to review its administrative rules related to confidentiality challenges because the rules primarily addressed requests for information from competitor utilities and did not necessarily apply to media challenges. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Public Service Commission Rules Creating Impermissible Presumption of Confidentiality in Trade Secrets: Several media organizations sought access to power company documents filed with the Public Service Commission. Applying its administrative rules, the Commission evaluated the power company's claims of confidentiality against basic trade secret law, found that the company had met the initial burden of establishing trade secrets, and concluded that because the media had presented no evidence or argument to the contrary, the company information was entitled to constitutional protection as a matter of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. To the extent that the Commission's rules relied on mere company representations that the information contained trade secrets, the Commission unconstitutionally shifted the initial burden of proof to the public to challenge the confidentiality claims, creating a presumption of confidentiality that directly conflicted with the public's right to view public records and the Commission's duty to make its records available to the public. The court held that a nonhuman entity seeking protective measures for alleged confidential materials filed with a governmental regulating agency must support its claim with a supporting affidavit making a prima facie showing that the materials constitute property rights that are protected by due process. Further, the showing must be more than conclusory and specific enough for the Commission, any objecting parties, and reviewing authorities to clearly understand the nature and basis of the confidentiality claim. The agency then must review the materials at the time of filing, in accordance with 30-14-402(4)(b) and supporting case law, and make an independent determination whether the materials are in fact property rights entitled to due process protection. To the extent that Commission rules required less, the court directed revision of Commission rules to comport with this holding. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Finding of Perpetual Contractual Obligation Invalid: A contract between the city of Billings and an adjoining county water district does not, as the District Court found, bind the parties to a perpetual obligation until the consent of both parties to terminate the contract is obtained. The Supreme Court found that the life of the contract is indefinite, not perpetual, and may be terminated by the Public Service Commission if the Commission finds such action necessary and within its jurisdiction over rates and service. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

Interference by Public Service Commission With Contract Between a Public Utility and Its Customer: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has authority to modify or supersede a contract between a public utility and its customer if the contract poses an immediate threat to the utility's ability to serve or if the contract adversely affects the utility's rate structure. Otherwise the P.S.C. does not have the authority to exercise the judicial functions of interpreting or enforcing such a contract. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

No Immediate Threat to Ability to Serve Found: City's claim that its ability to serve as a utility was immediately threatened was not supported by its argument and testimony that its customer's service area expansion would cause the city to face a severe water shortage. This is so given the fact that the city was engaged in an extensive building program to improve its water service capabilities. Moreover, the city failed to prove by substantial evidence the existence of an immediate threat to its service ability when it argued that a contract provision between the city and its customer imposed an unreasonable burden on the city to maintain at its own expense all water mains and pumping facilities sufficient to meet the demands of the customer. This failure of proof is due primarily to the fact that no figures of actual increase in customer usage were provided. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

Rate Increases by Public Service Commission — Private Contract Not Invalidated: A 1963 contract between the city of Billings and the County Water District of Billings Heights is valid and binding on the parties despite the increase in size of the service area of the County Water District and despite the city's contention that rate increases previously granted by the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) had the effect of nullifying the contract. When the P.S.C. exercises its jurisdiction over rates charged by a utility, the rate provisions are superseded but the remainder of the contract provisions remain in effect. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

No Authority to Require Independent Audit: The enforcement authority of the Public Service Commission under 69-3-106, 69-3-109, 69-3-202, and 69-3-203 does not include the power to order a private utility to employ an independent accounting firm to audit utility's costs. In re Mont. Power Co., 180 M 385, 590 P2d 1140 (1979).

Statutory Expansion of Jurisdiction: When statutes are enacted by the Legislature that expand previously enacted statutes by broadening the jurisdiction of an administrative agency, the statutes are to be construed in relation to one another and, for construction purposes, and should be considered as forming one consistent body of law. Gwynn v. Eureka, 178 M 191, 582 P2d 1262 (1978).

Automatic Rate Increase Hearings: The Public Service Commission authorization of automatic adjustment of electric company rates for increases or decreases in price of fuel was a fair and equitable exercise of the supervisory and regulatory powers of the Commission. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 180, 541 P2d 770 (1975).

Rate Increase Hearings: When an electric company applied for an increase in utility rates to offset the increase in price of fuel in 1974, the Public Service Commission was correct in refusing to expand its hearing into a full-scale examination of the general rate structure and rate of return because the Commission had held full-scale hearings in 1972. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 180, 541 P2d 770 (1975).

"Minihearings" Limited to Specific Proper Considerations: The Public Service Commission is not required to hold a full-scale hearing and examination of all revenue and expense accounts of a company to determine whether proposed rates and charges are just and reasonable where company only seeks to "pass through" to its customers increases in cost of purchased gas and royalty expense, as the Commission is not required to exercise more of its powers than it determines appropriate. Mont. Consumer Counsel, Brazier v. P.S.C. & Mont. Power Co., 168 M 177, 541 P2d 769 (1975).

Informal Hearing: Fundamentals of a fair hearing, required by Art. III, sec. 27, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 17, Mont. Const.), were denied parties opposing rate increase when a hearing was held by the Public Service Commission without the presence of the opponents and when the testimony of that hearing was not spread on the record. Cascade County Consumers Ass'n v. P.S.C., 144 M 169, 394 P2d 856 (1964).

Posthearing Audit: When an audit had been requested in a utility rate increase case by opponents of the increase, both sides were given ample time to present evidence and cross-examine witnesses, opponents were permitted to go into utility books with expert witnesses, and the Public Service Commission hired independent rate experts, opponents were not denied a full and fair hearing because of a posthearing audit made by Commission employees. Cascade County Consumers Ass'n v. P.S.C., 144 M 169, 394 P2d 856 (1964).

Commission Not to Adjudicate Water Rights: The District Court issued a Writ of Prohibition restraining the Public Service Commission from entertaining a complaint of farmers that a hydroelectric company, by storing water for use in its operations incident to generating electricity for public use, was depriving them of water for irrigation purposes. The Supreme Court held, on application for Writ of Supervisory Control to annul the Writ, that the farmers were asking in effect for an adjudication of water rights, a judicial function belonging to the court, which under this section the Commission is precluded from exercising. State ex rel. P.S.C. v. District Court, 107 M 240, 84 P2d 335 (1938).

Legislature Not to Exercise Judicial Function Through Commission: Under Art. IV, sec. 1, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. III, sec. 1, Mont. Const.), prohibiting any one of the three departments of the state government from exercising any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, the Legislature cannot, through the medium of the Public Service Commission, exercise judicial powers. State ex rel. P.S.C. v. District Court, 107 M 240, 84 P2d 335 (1938).

No Constitutional Right to Privacy for Nonhuman Entities — Protection of Trade Secrets Under Other Constitutional and Statutory Schemes: Montana's constitutional individual privacy exception to the public's right to know is limited to natural human individuals only and does not apply to nonhuman entities such as corporations. However, nothing in Art. II, sec. 9, Mont. Const., requires disclosure of trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information when that data is protected from disclosure elsewhere in the state or federal constitution or by statute. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003), overruling Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. v. Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied completely M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court. Further, in his official capacity, the Attorney General could not appeal a decision that was within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. Since the latter appeal was invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

Siting Act Not Implied Repeal of "Used and Useful" for Ratemaking: In 1973, Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) filed an application for a certificate of environmental compatibility and public need for Colstrip Units 3 and 4 under the Montana Major Facility Siting Act. In granting the certificate, the Board of Natural Resources and Conservation (now Department of Environmental Quality) found that there was a need for the energy which would be produced and that the units would serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity. After Unit 3 was completed, M.P.C. filed an application with the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) to increase electric rates to reflect Unit 3 in its rate base. At the rate hearing, the P.S.C. took evidence regarding whether Unit 3 was "used and useful". M.P.C. moved to strike this testimony, contending the P.S.C. was precluded from considering this by the certificate of need issued under the Siting Act. M.P.C. filed an application for original jurisdiction and declaratory judgment or other appropriate relief with the Supreme Court. The P.S.C. later concluded Unit 3 was not used and useful and could not be included in the rate base. The Supreme Court found that while the Siting Act includes factors which can be associated with the used and useful concept of utility regulation, the primary purposes of the Siting Act are to ensure minimal environmental, natural resource, and social impacts. The need determination is related primarily to environmental protection rather than rate base treatment for the facility. Once the facility is constructed, the P.S.C. has jurisdiction to determine whether the facility is actually used and useful and whether the facility's output is required by the ratepayers. The Siting Act and the utility regulation statutes are reconcilable. The Siting Act did not impliedly repeal the P.S.C.'s authority to determine whether a facility is used and useful for ratemaking. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 214 M 82, 692 P2d 432, 41 St. Rep. 2332 (1984).

Siting Act Decision Not Estoppel for P.S.C. Ratemaking Decision: In 1973, Montana Power Co. (M.P.C.) filed an application for a certificate of environmental compatibility and public need for Colstrip Units 3 and 4 under the Montana Major Facility Siting Act. In granting the certificate, the Board of Natural Resources and Conservation (now Department of Environmental Quality) found that there was a need for the energy which would be produced and that the units would serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity. After Unit 3 was completed, M.P.C. filed an application with the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) to increase electric rates to reflect Unit 3 in its rate base. At the rate hearing, the P.S.C. took evidence regarding whether Unit 3 was "used and useful". M.P.C. moved to strike this testimony, contending the P.S.C. was precluded from considering this by the certificate of need issued under the Siting Act. M.P.C. filed an application for original jurisdiction and declaratory judgment or other appropriate relief with the Supreme Court. The P.S.C. later concluded Unit 3 was not used and useful and could not be included in the rate base. M.P.C. argued that the P.S.C. was collaterally estopped from considering whether Unit 3 was "used and useful". The court held that the need issue determined in the siting process was not identical to the used and useful issue, therefore collateral estoppel was not applicable. The M.P.C. also argued that because of the certificate of need, the state was promissorily estopped from excluding Unit 3 from the rate base. M.P.C. contended that issuance of a certificate of need under the Siting Act established a contractual relationship between the state and M.P.C. The court held that issuance of a certificate by a governmental authority to engage in conduct that would be improper without a certificate does not create a contractual relationship between the state and the licensee. Neither the Siting Act nor the certificate of need contemplates a promise that a facility will be included in a utility's rate base. Promissory estoppel was also inapplicable. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 214 M 82, 692 P2d 432, 41 St. Rep. 2332 (1984).

No Authority to Require Independent Audit: The enforcement authority of the Public Service Commission under 69-3-106, 69-3-109, 69-3-202, and 69-3-203 does not include the power to order a private utility to employ an independent accounting firm to audit the utility's costs. In re Mont. Power Co., 180 M 385, 590 P2d 1140 (1979).

Rate Base Determination: Under this section the Public Service Commission is obligated to eliminate from the rate base all utility costs in excess of original cost. In its use of the term "revaluation", the Legislature clearly contemplated the possibility that later Public Service Commissions, under appropriate circumstances, might modify or alter the property valuations made by earlier Commissions. In re Mont. Power Co., 180 M 385, 590 P2d 1140 (1979).

Constitutionality of "Pass Through" Cost: Commission disallowance of "pass through" costs to extent confiscatory is a violation of the constitutional prohibition against taking property without due process of law. State ex rel. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 169 M 99, 548 P2d 136 (1975).

Leaseholds: The value of gas leases was properly included in the rate base for a power company seeking an increased natural gas rate when there was ample testimony about the leaseholds being used, and the evidence was useful to support the Public Service Commission. Cascade County Consumers Ass'n v. P.S.C., 144 M 169, 394 P2d 856 (1964).

Fair Value: Although the statute does not establish a formula for arriving at fair value, it does require such value to be found and used as a base in fixing rates. The reasonableness and justness of the rates must be related to this finding of fair value. State ex rel. Olsen v. P.S.C., 131 M 272, 309 P2d 1035 (1957).

Investigation by Commission: The provision of this section authorizing the Public Service Commission to make an investigation is permissive only, and it is not mandatory that the Commission make a separate investigation. State ex rel. Olsen v. P.S.C., 131 M 104, 308 P2d 633 (1957).

Method of Ascertaining Value — Reproduction Cost: The Public Service Commission did not err in fixing the value of the plant when they considered the reproduction cost new less depreciation, the original cost less depreciation, and the assessed value of taxable property. State ex rel. Olsen v. P.S.C., 131 M 104, 308 P2d 633 (1957).

Commission Not to Fix Rates So Low as to Take Property: The Public Service Commission, in regulating rates, should under this section ascertain the present fair value of the utility. Rates, as well as the return on the utility's investment for services rendered, must be reasonable. The Commission cannot under the law fix rates so low as to result in a taking of property without just compensation to the owner. No particular method is required but it must be done under proper legal procedure and restrictions. Tobacco River Power Co. v. P.S.C., 109 M 521, 98 P2d 886 (1940).

Value of Property at Time of Trial — Proper: In arriving at the value of the utility's property, the cost of reproduction less depreciation is usually regarded as one of the most important factors, if not the dominant factor. In an action to enjoin the Public Service Commission from enforcing an order reducing rates, the court properly admitted evidence of that character and determined the question of value as of the date of trial rather than upon that of the order made 2 years earlier because a number of changes had taken place in the interval. Tobacco River Power Co. v. P.S.C., 109 M 521, 98 P2d 886 (1940).

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — No Authority in Negligence Action: An electric service customer filed an action in District Court alleging property damage based on a power company's negligence and negligence per se in terminating the customer's electric service. The District Court dismissed the action, reasoning that the customer did not exhaust administrative remedies before the Public Service Commission (PSC). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal on the grounds that the PSC is not vested with judicial powers and does not have the authority to adjudicate a negligence action seeking damages. Schuster v. NW. Energy Co., 2013 MT 364, 373 Mont. 54, 314 P.3d 650.

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied completely M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court. Further, in his official capacity, the Attorney General could not appeal a decision that was within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. Public Service Commission — Power to Issue Summary Injunction-Type Order: The Public Service Commission issued an order prohibiting Montana Power from proceeding with a proposed corporate reorganization until the P.S.C. could investigate the reorganization. The order was issued without notice or hearing. Section 69-3-110 shows the clear legislative intent that the Commission use the court system to seek enforcement by injunction, as distinguished from issuing the injunction-type order on its own part. Summary issuance of an injunction-type order without notice or hearing should be limited to situations where the public risk to be avoided outweighs the limitations placed on the constitutional rights of the parties. In this case the Commission has advanced no justification for its disregard of the due process rights of Montana Power. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 1712 (1983).

Operation and Effect: In view of the provisions of this section and 69-3-401, that the rates fixed by the Public Service Commission for a public utility shall remain in full force and effect pending final determination by the court of a proceeding calling them in question, and the provision of this section specifically authorizing mandamus proceedings to control obedience to the orders issued, the fact that a proceeding questioning the legality of the rates is pending in court does not bar the Commission from applying for a Writ of Mandate to compel obedience to its order pendente lite. State ex rel. P.S.C. v. Great N. Util. Co., 86 M 442, 284 P 772 (1930).

Power to Fix Minimum or Precise Rates: The Public Service Commission, under its power to regulate a public utility, is clothed with authority not only to fix maximum but also minimum or precise rates. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

Reasonable Service and Equipment: The Legislature in enacting the public service commission law intended not only to empower the Commission to regulate charges or fix rates, but also to see to it that reasonable service is rendered by the utility and that its equipment is reasonably adequate. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

Orders Prima Facie Lawful:

The orders of the Public Service Commission are by this section made prima facie lawful until changed or modified. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930).

Rates fixed by the Public Service Commission for a public utility furnishing hot-water heat in a city are prima facie lawful, can be attacked in court on the sole ground that they are unlawful or unreasonable, and must be deemed reasonable and just until final determination by the courts, the burden of proof resting upon the party attacking the order of the Commission. Billings Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 62 M 21, 203 P 366 (1921).

Power Over Rates Existing Prior to Enactment: The law creating the Public Service Commission confers upon the Commission the power, within the lawful exercise of its authority, to change the rates, tolls, and charges in public utility contracts, even though they existed prior to the passage of the law. Billings v. P.S.C., 67 M 29, 214 P 608 (1923).

Power of State:

A municipality and a party to whom it grants a franchise to construct and operate a public heating plant enter into the contract with the knowledge that while a municipality may contract respecting rates, the state may at any time thereafter in furtherance of the public welfare exercise its inherent power of rate regulation and control. Billings v. P.S.C., 67 M 29, 214 P 608 (1923), distinguished in Baker v. Mont. Petroleum Co., 99 M 465, 44 P2d 735 (1935).

The establishment of a rate is a legislative and not a judicial act, and the power of the courts is circumscribed and restrained so far as interference with determinations reached within the scope of legislative authority is concerned. Billings Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 62 M 21, 203 P 366 (1921).

Case Notes

Public Service Investigation Not Subject to Judicial Review: The Public Service Commission (PSC) issued two orders directing plaintiff telecommunications company to submit information regarding plaintiff's rates as part of an investigation concerning whether revenue earned by plaintiff was in excess of plaintiff's authorized rate of return. For various reasons, plaintiff declined to provide the information and requested that the PSC reconsider its orders, but the PSC denied the request for reconsideration, so plaintiff petitioned for judicial review under 2-4-701. The same day, the PSC filed a complaint in District Court seeking to compel plaintiff's compliance and requesting fines and penalties against plaintiff for failure to comply with PSC orders. The court held that the PSC orders unlawfully imposed a rate case filing requirement on plaintiff that violated state law and the PSC's own administrative rules. The PSC appealed, and the Supreme Court considered whether the PSC investigation was subject to judicial review. Plaintiff's justification for seeking intermediate review under 2-4-701 was that if plaintiff did not challenge the lawfulness of the PSC orders, then plaintiff would eventually suffer harm. However, judicial review under 2-4-701 is not justified when the only allegation of harm is speculation that further agency action may take place and, if it takes place, that it may have legal consequences. Courts may intervene in an agency process only when a specific final agency action has an actual or immediately threatened effect. Here, there was no final PSC action, only an investigation, and when an agency has not adjudicated the issues raised on appeal, there is no final agency action upon which a District Court can assume jurisdiction. Thus, the PSC investigation was not subject to judicial review, and the District Court was reversed. Qwest Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 350, 340 M 309, 174 P3d 496 (2007), following Marble v. St., 2000 MT 240, 301 M 373, 9 P3d 617 (2000). See also Lujan v. Nat'l Wildlife Fed'n, 497 US 871 (1990).

When Agency Decision Ripe for Judicial Review: The Public Service Commission (PSC) issued two orders directing plaintiff telecommunications company to submit information regarding plaintiff's rates as part of an investigation concerning whether revenue earned by plaintiff was in excess of plaintiff's authorized rate of return. For various reasons, plaintiff declined to provide the information and requested that the PSC reconsider its orders, but the PSC denied the request for reconsideration, so plaintiff petitioned for judicial review under 2-4-701. The same day, the PSC filed a complaint in District Court seeking to compel plaintiff's compliance and requesting fines and penalties against plaintiff for failure to comply with PSC orders. The court determined that the issues were ripe for judicial review. The PSC appealed, and the Supreme Court considered whether the PSC's actions were in fact ripe for judicial review. To determine ripeness, the court applied the criteria in Ohio Forestry Ass'n v. Sierra Club, 523 US 726 (1998), noting that a reviewing court must consider whether: (1) delayed review would cause hardship to the plaintiffs; (2) judicial intervention would inappropriately interfere with further administrative action; and (3) the courts would benefit from further factual development of the issues presented. In this case, the court decided that the PSC decision was not ripe for judicial review. First, judicial review of a preliminary step that has no binding legal consequences is not available even when the initiation of proceedings is serious and may have severe consequences, and because there were no irremediable adverse consequences that flowed from the PSC investigation, delayed judicial review would not cause a hardship for plaintiff. Second, judicial intervention would have inappropriately interfered with further PSC administrative action and frustrated the PSC's ability to review the information and decide the best course of action. Third, because the PSC had only initiated an investigation, the District Court reviewed issues upon which the PSC had not yet taken action, and because there was no specific factual record, further factual development of the issues would have benefited the courts. The District Court was reversed. Qwest Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 350, 340 M 309, 174 P3d 496 (2007).

Erroneous Conclusion Regarding Accord and Agreement to Pay Contested Utility Bill — Judgment Improper: The Missoula Electric Cooperative, Inc. (Co-op), agreed to reconnect St. John's electric service if she entered a written agreement to pay a disputed balance in monthly installments. After the agreement was signed, the Co-op altered the document by adding the words "Accord and Satisfaction". The District Court found that although St. John had agreed to make payments solely to restore electric service to her house, she had nevertheless agreed to "settle" the dispute, and having only partially complied with the settlement agreement, the court entered judgment against St. John for the remaining amount. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that St. John had a basis for disputing the Co-op billing and that agreeing to make payments to restore power to her residence did not amount to an agreement to settle the dispute. As the record and findings of fact indicated, there was no settlement agreement and the trial court's judgment in favor of the Co-op was in error. The case was remanded to address the merits of St. John's billing dispute and her claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress. St. John v. Missoula Elec. Co-op, Inc., 282 M 315, 938 P2d 586, 54 St. Rep. 361 (1997).

Failure to Provide Electricity to Farmer With Three Years of Unpaid Bills: Farmer's contract with electric company for irrigation pump electricity provided that no electricity would be provided if past due balances were unpaid. During a severe 1985 drought, company refused electricity because of unpaid balances totaling $3,737.50 for 1982 through 1984. Farmer's crops failed for lack of water, and farmer sued company for damages. Summary judgment for company on the claim was affirmed. Company had no duty to provide water in view of the unpaid balances. The contractual instrument between farmer and company was modified by a "member service policy" that provided that company may allow installment payment in special circumstances. The court held that the member service policy applied only to residential electricity contracts and that it was not unreasonable to refuse the electricity for the irrigation pumps, particularly because farmer, at times, had the money to pay his balances but chose not to and instead gambled that he would not need to irrigate in 1985. Farmer's allegation that he had $1,914.90 in capital credits was not considered because there was no evidence that farmer offered the credits as part payment or that farmer and company discussed the credits. Ballenger v. N. Lights, Inc., 249 M 327, 815 P2d 1156, 48 St. Rep. 767 (1991).

Commission's Authority to Declare Telephone Service Inadequate: The Public Service Commission had authority under this section and 69-3-102 to issue an order, after a hearing, that telephone service provided by telephone company was not reasonably adequate. Intermountain Tel. & Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 201 M 74, 651 P2d 1015, 39 St. Rep. 1962 (1982).

Insufficient Evidentiary Basis for Determining Reasonableness of Utility Expense: On an appeal from an order of the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.), the Supreme Court held that the P.S.C. improperly applied a rate of return method, as opposed to a free marketplace comparison, in ascertaining the reasonableness of a utility's expense in purchasing coal from a wholly owned subsidiary. The Supreme Court stated the P.S.C. must have sufficient evidence before it to determine if a particular rate of return is fair and just for the subsidiary as compared to other coal companies and, further, if the rate of return of the utility may also be applied to the subsidiary coal company. While the P.S.C. does have the right to choose the method followed, the Supreme Court did not find a factual reason for the summary rejection of the marketplace cost of coal approach. Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086, 38 St. Rep. 1221 (1981).

Jurisdiction of Public Service Commission Over Water Service Area of a Utility: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has no authority to determine water service area boundaries of an incorporated city, nor may the P.S.C. assume jurisdiction over the expansion of an adjoining county water district. Under 7-13-2341 control over the size of the county water district is expressly vested in the board of directors and the electors. The statute does not mention a requirement of P.S.C. approval before land may be added to a county water district. As an administrative agency, the P.S.C. may not assume jurisdiction over the expansion of the district boundaries without express delegation of authority by the Legislature. It should be noted, however, that the P.S.C. has authority under 69-3-201 to determine on a case-by-case basis whether adequate service is provided at reasonable rates to customers who are within the service area. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

Definition of "Public Utility" — Denial of Service: Voluntary nonprofit corporation organized for purpose of supplying water to members, when service is rendered only to members who share operation costs, was not a "public utility", and services can be denied a member who breaches conditions of agreement to provide water. Lockwood Water Users Ass'n v. Anderson, 168 M 303, 542 P2d 121 (1975).

Exempt Association Not Required to Furnish Service: A voluntary nonprofit corporation organized for the purpose of supplying water to its members is not a public utility and can enjoin a trailer court member from placing additional trailers in the court in violation of an agreement. The agreement specified that no more than 60 mobile home sites were to be serviced, as the association confined its services to members of its own group and does not serve or hold itself out as willing to serve the public and therefore is not considered a public utility. Because the association is not a public utility, it is not subject to the jurisdiction or regulation of the Public Service Commission, and its contracts with its members are enforceable. Lockwood Water Users Ass'n v. Anderson, 168 M 303, 542 P2d 121 (1975).

Denial of Service: A public utility is not permitted under this section to deny service on grounds that its facilities are in poor condition. Polson v. P.S.C., 155 M 464, 473 P2d 508 (1970).

Charge for Tapping Water Mains: A flat-rate charge by the city for the "service" of tapping water mains located entirely within the public right-of-way, based on an average cost experience over a period of years yielding no overall profit to the city, is reasonable and valid under this section. Leischner v. Knight, 135 M 109, 337 P2d 359 (1959).

Public Service Investigation Not Subject to Judicial Review: The Public Service Commission (PSC) issued two orders directing plaintiff telecommunications company to submit information regarding plaintiff's rates as part of an investigation concerning whether revenue earned by plaintiff was in excess of plaintiff's authorized rate of return. For various reasons, plaintiff declined to provide the information and requested that the PSC reconsider its orders, but the PSC denied the request for reconsideration, so plaintiff petitioned for judicial review under 2-4-701. The same day, the PSC filed a complaint in District Court seeking to compel plaintiff's compliance and requesting fines and penalties against plaintiff for failure to comply with PSC orders. The court held that the PSC orders unlawfully imposed a rate case filing requirement on plaintiff that violated state law and the PSC's own administrative rules. The PSC appealed, and the Supreme Court considered whether the PSC investigation was subject to judicial review. Plaintiff's justification for seeking intermediate review under 2-4-701 was that if plaintiff did not challenge the lawfulness of the PSC orders, then plaintiff would eventually suffer harm. However, judicial review under 2-4-701 is not justified when the only allegation of harm is speculation that further agency action may take place and, if it takes place, that it may have legal consequences. Courts may intervene in an agency process only when a specific final agency action has an actual or immediately threatened effect. Here, there was no final PSC action, only an investigation, and when an agency has not adjudicated the issues raised on appeal, there is no final agency action upon which a District Court can assume jurisdiction. Thus, the PSC investigation was not subject to judicial review, and the District Court was reversed. Qwest Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 350, 340 M 309, 174 P3d 496 (2007), following Marble v. St., 2000 MT 240, 301 M 373, 9 P3d 617 (2000). See also Lujan v. When Agency Decision Ripe for Judicial Review: The Public Service Commission (PSC) issued two orders directing plaintiff telecommunications company to submit information regarding plaintiff's rates as part of an investigation concerning whether revenue earned by plaintiff was in excess of plaintiff's authorized rate of return. For various reasons, plaintiff declined to provide the information and requested that the PSC reconsider its orders, but the PSC denied the request for reconsideration, so plaintiff petitioned for judicial review under 2-4-701. The same day, the PSC filed a complaint in District Court seeking to compel plaintiff's compliance and requesting fines and penalties against plaintiff for failure to comply with PSC orders. The court determined that the issues were ripe for judicial review. The PSC appealed, and the Supreme Court considered whether the PSC's actions were in fact ripe for judicial review. To determine ripeness, the court applied the criteria in Ohio Forestry Ass'n v. Sierra Club, 523 US 726 (1998), noting that a reviewing court must consider whether: (1) delayed review would cause hardship to the plaintiffs; (2) judicial intervention would inappropriately interfere with further administrative action; and (3) the courts would benefit from further factual development of the issues presented. In this case, the court decided that the PSC decision was not ripe for judicial review. First, judicial review of a preliminary step that has no binding legal consequences is not available even when the initiation of proceedings is serious and may have severe consequences, and because there were no irremediable adverse consequences that flowed from the PSC investigation, delayed judicial review would not cause a hardship for plaintiff. Second, judicial intervention would have inappropriately interfered with further PSC administrative action and frustrated the PSC's ability to review the information and decide the best course of action. Third, because the PSC had only initiated an investigation, the District Court reviewed issues upon which the PSC had not yet taken action, and because there was no specific factual record, further factual development of the issues would have benefited the courts. The District Court was reversed. Qwest Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 350, 340 M 309, 174 P3d 496 (2007).

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — No Authority in Negligence Action: An electric service customer filed an action in District Court alleging property damage based on a power company's negligence and negligence per se in terminating the customer's electric service. The District Court dismissed the action, reasoning that the customer did not exhaust administrative remedies before the Public Service Commission (PSC). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal on the grounds that the PSC is not vested with judicial powers and does not have the authority to adjudicate a negligence action seeking damages. Allocation of Cost of Service Benefits to Resident Taxpayers: In allocating cost of service benefits between the city of Billings and an adjoining water district, the Public Service Commission's (P.S.C.) order, which requires the city and district to effect the passing on of the cost of service benefit to city residents receiving water from the district, is valid. While the city contends that the determinative factor in deciding who receives the cost of service benefit is not whether the party is a city taxpayer but whether the party is a city water customer, the Supreme Court disagrees. It does not matter that the municipal utility is paid for completely by generated revenue and not through tax dollars; all city residents who are taxpayers are entitled to a cost of service benefit. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Extra Capacity Factor in Allocating Cost of Service: The Public Service Commission's (P.S.C.) decision to reject the city's proposed extra capacity factor, which was based upon a contract provision between the city and an adjoining water district in allocating cost of services to the water district, was upheld by the Supreme Court. The P.S.C. had substantial evidence before it in determining the extra capacity factor to be assigned to the district, and the decision, which was based on actual water use and comparisons from large water consumers similar in extent of demand to the water district, was not clearly erroneous. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Normalization of Test-Year Data in Rate Determination: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has no statutory duty to normalize test-year data; it is within the P.S.C.'s discretion to determine when normalization is necessary, and the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the P.S.C. on appeal. The P.S.C. had sufficient evidence upon which to reach a determination. The P.S.C. did not act unreasonably, nor did it establish a rate that was so low as to be confiscatory. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Past Loss Rule Applied to Public Utilities: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) is not required to consider the past losses suffered by a municipally owned utility as part of the rate base for establishing a new rate. This is so despite respondent's contention that as a municipal utility it has no profit margin to fall back on and therefore its losses should be amortized by a future rate increase. The "no loss rule" is not restricted to private investment utilities. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Public Service Commission Not Subject to City Bond Ordinance Mandate: There is no directive either statutory or judicial that requires the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.), to strictly comply with city bond ordinance mandates. Such ordinances are not binding upon the P.S.C., and the P.S.C. in no way acts as an insurer for municipal bond issuances. Therefore, the P.S.C. properly acted within its realm of discretion in determining the city's necessary bond debt service requirements and in setting rates accordingly. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Public Service Commission Jurisdiction Over Municipally Owned Utility: The ratesetting authority of a municipality under the Municipal Revenue Bond Act of 1939 does not preclude Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) jurisdiction over municipally owned utilities. Municipalities do establish rates for their services as required by 7-7-4404 and 7-7-4424 when municipalities comply with the P.S.C. reporting requirements set forth in 69-3-301 and 69-3-302. The regulatory authority of the P.S.C. does not diminish a municipality's ability to establish an initial rate schedule, and nothing in the Municipal Revenue Bond Act precludes a review of such rate determinations. The Legislature intended such a review process by the very creation of such a regulatory and supervisory body. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Rate Determination Based on Average Year Rate Base and Test-Year Calculation: Use by the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) of test-year calculation and average year rate base in reviewing and determining utilities rates is a correct and proper method of valuation. Thus, the contention by the city of Billings that the P.S.C. erred in its rate determination by refusing to accept projections of future operating and maintenance expenses cannot stand. It was acceptable that the P.S.C. used known financial data supplied by the city of Billings and then either added or subtracted known normalized changes and adjustments in arriving at a test-year calculation. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Equity Investment of Parent Corporation Properly Considered — "Double Leverage" Adjustment Upheld: When the plaintiff petitioned for an annual rate increase of $11.83 million but was granted an increase of only $3,097,000 by the defendants, based upon the defendants' application of a "double leverage" adjustment used to determine the plaintiff subsidiary's cost of capital, the District Court did not err in affirming the rate increase granted by the defendants, as the defendants' order was based upon substantial evidence and was not inconsistent with itself. The District Court found that the double leverage adjustment simply established the true cost of that portion of the plaintiff subsidiary's equity attributable to financing by its parent corporation. The holding was properly applied to all of the retained earnings of the parent corporation in the plaintiff for, given the pattern of ownership of the plaintiff by the parent corporation, those earnings are part of the equity investment by the parent corporation. Trade Secrets — When to Be Disclosed and to Whom — Protectable Property: A telephone utility was required to disclose trade secrets to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) to aid in a decision on its rate increase request. The utility was entitled to a protective order preventing access to the secrets by the general public, but the Montana Consumer Counsel and any citizen whose interest related to the ratemaking function of the P.S.C. could have access to the information. Use or disclosure of the trade secrets except for purposes of the ratemaking proceeding was prohibited. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 277, 634 P2d 181, 38 St. Rep. 1479 (1981). Mtn. States and its progeny were overruled to the extent that those decisions relied on the constitutional balancing test of the right to individual privacy against the public's right to examine documents or observe governmental deliberations as a basis of protecting trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information of nonhuman entities in Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Temporary Rate Increase — Determination of Amount: When the Public Service Commission allowed a temporary gas rate increase equivalent to 6/11ths of the amount requested, based on the Commission's calculations that such an amount would be adequate to meet increased costs if the petitioner breached certain "take or pay" contracts, it acted in excess of its authority because the effect of the order was to force the petitioner to break its contracts, incur legal liability on that account, diminish its earnings, and deprive consumers of supply. State ex rel. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, P.S.C., 169 M 99, 548 P2d 136 (1975).

Automatic Rate Increase: The Public Service Commission authorization of automatic adjustment of electric company rates for increases or decreases in price of fuel was a fair and equitable exercise of supervisory and regulatory powers of Commission. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 180, 541 P2d 770 (1975).

Scope of Rate Increase Hearings Not to Be Expanded: When an electric company applied for increase in utility rates to offset increase in price of fuel in 1974, the Public Service Commission was correct in refusing to expand the hearing into a full-scale examination of general rate structure and rate of return because the Commission had held full-scale hearings in 1972. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 180, 541 P2d 770 (1975).

Judicial Review of Minimum Rates:

Order fixing utility's minimum rate so high as to repel patronage and destroy utility's investment may be judicially annulled. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 52 F2d 802 (9th Cir. 1931).

Public Service Commission order fixing minimum gas rates was held unreasonable when utility sought to lower rates for purpose of self-preservation on account of joint occupancy with rival utility of a field which could support only one. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 52 F2d 802 (9th Cir. 1931).

Commission Empowered to Fix Not Only Maximum but Also Minimum or Precise Rates: The Public Service Commission, under its power to regulate a public utility, is clothed with authority not only to fix maximum but also minimum or precise rates. Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 88 M 180, 293 P 294 (1930). See also Great N. Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 52 F2d 802 (9th Cir. 1931).

Public Utility Not to Change Schedule of Rates Without Concurrence of Commission: Under the rule that when one must secure leave from someone to entitle him to exercise a right, the irresistible implication is that a discretion is lodged in the other to refuse to grant it if in his judgment it is improper or unwise to give the required consent. The contention of a company engaged in furnishing gas to the inhabitants of a city, that after the filing of the initial schedule of rates with the Public Service Commission the company may change the schedule by the mere filing of a new one and giving the notice required and that the new schedule becomes effective without the act of concurrence on the part of the Commission, may not be sustained. Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 305 (Ch. 367, L. 1983) read: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it gives the Public Service Commission rulemaking authority. Section 1 [amending 69-3-302] provides for elimination of the statutorily prescribed 10% annual interest rate, and grants the Commission discretion to determine an annual interest rate to be assessed on a utility's revenues that are subject to rebate. In adopting rules relating to the determination of the interest rate, the Commission might, for example, consider such factors as the size of the utility involved, the number of consumers served by the utility, the utility's cost of capital, the amount of the revenues subject to rebate and the length of the time period in which revenues were overcollected. Rules drawn should reflect the manner in which the Commission would consider the factors to arrive at an appropriate rate of interest under the circumstances.

The rules may also address a procedure for waiving the nine month automatic schedule effective date, and a procedure for rebating amounts to consumers where necessary."

Judicial Review — Treatment of Gain and Cost of Equity Capital: After receiving a $7,917,936 rate increase from the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.), Montana-Dakota Utilities Company (M.D.U.) requested reconsideration of the P.S.C.'s assignment of a 13.35% rate on return of capital and its order that the gain on reacquired debt be amortized over the remaining life of the indebtedness, the amortized amount to reduce interest expense to M.D.U. The P.S.C. denied reconsideration. On appeal, the District Court held that the P.S.C. correctly authorized the 13.35% rate return on equity capital but that its treatment of gain constituted a confiscation without due process. After appeal by both the P.S.C. and M.D.U., the Supreme Court held that the P.S.C.'s assignment of a 13.35% rate on return of equity capital was not arbitrary or capricious. However, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court, ruling that the P.S.C.'s order to amortize the gain on reacquired debt over the remaining life of the indebtedness was not confiscatory to either M.D.U. or its shareholders. No person was deprived of the right to examine documents or observe deliberations, and no person was deprived of property without due process of law. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 180, 541 P2d 770 (1975).

Scope of Rate Increase Hearings Not to Be Expanded: When an electric company applied for an increase in utility rates to offset an increase in the price of fuel in 1974, the Public Service Commission was correct in refusing to expand the hearing into a full-scale examination of general rate structure and rate of return because the Commission had held full-scale hearings in 1972. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 180, 541 P2d 770 (1975).

"Minihearings" Limited to Specific Proper Considerations: The Public Service Commission is not required to hold a full-scale hearing and examination of all revenue and expense accounts of a company to determine whether proposed rates and charges are just and reasonable when a company only seeks to "pass through" to its customers increases in cost of purchased gas and royalty expense, because the Commission is not required to exercise more of its powers than it determines appropriate. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. P.S.C., 168 M 177, 541 P2d 769 (1975).

Jurisdiction: The Department of Public Service Regulation may hold hearings concerning rate increases for utilities even though no increase could be made at the time because of federal wage and price freeze. State ex rel. Dept. of Public Service Regulation v. District Court, 158 M 88, 488 P2d 1147 (1971).

Case Notes

Request for Temporary Rate Reduction Properly Denied by District Court: The Public Service Commission (PSC) dismissed the petitioners' complaint and on appeal the Supreme Court sent the case back to the District Court, directing that court to remand the matter to the PSC for further consideration. The District Court denied the petitioners' request for a temporary rate reduction on remand as being premature. The District Court stated that if the PSC, in its discretion, allowed the petitioners to amend their complaint, then the petitioners could take up their request for an immediate rate reduction with the PSC. Williamson v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 299, 367 Mont. 379, 291 P.3d 1116.

Temporary Increase Pending Hearing — Constitutionality: A temporary increase pending a hearing is constitutional as interests of consumers are protected by allowing each increase subject to rebate if evidence shows that a public utility is obtaining more than authorized. State ex rel. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 169 M 99, 548 P2d 136 (1975).

2007 Amendment: Chapter 103 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; in (5)(a) in second sentence after "services" deleted "other than basic local exchange access" and deleted last three sentences that read: "Promotional offerings for basic local exchange access to end users and packaged services that include basic local exchange access to end users require advance approval of the commission. The commission shall approve, deny, or upon a showing of good cause set for hearing an application for a promotional discount within 30 days of the filing of the application. If the commission has not acted on the application within the permitted time period, the application is considered granted"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 30, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 349 in (5)(a), in first sentence near middle after "time", substituted "rebates, price reductions, or waivers of charges" for "either rebates or reductions or waivers of installation charges", in second sentence, near beginning after "pricing", substituted "for services other than local exchange access to end users does not" for "of services that remain fully tariffed", deleted former third sentence that read: "A promotional offering may not combine monopoly services with competitive services unless authorized by the Commission", and inserted third through sixth sentences providing a procedure for approval of promotional offerings by the Commission; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 22, 1997.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 207 near middle of (4) inserted "unless authorized by the commission"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 29, 1993.

Chapter 535 inserted (5)(b) authorizing certain public utilities to provide grants and loans; in (5)(c), in first sentence after "trials", inserted "and grants and subsidized loans", in second sentence, after "activity", inserted "or grant or subsidized loan program", and in third sentence, after "activities", inserted "and grant and subsidized loan programs"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (4) allowing profitsharing, rebates, and promotional pricing and offerings and granting the Commission discretion in determining whether particular sales activities are unfairly discriminatory or not cost-effective; and made minor changes in style. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 210, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Telecommunications Act, which recognizes and encourages competition in the telecommunications industry to the extent consistent with maintaining universal telephone service, was intended to serve as a bridge between a regulated telecommunications industry and a fully competitive market environment; and

WHEREAS, rapid technological and market changes within the telecommunications industry have prompted regulators nationwide to reexamine traditional regulation and adopt alternative regulatory systems; and

WHEREAS, although the intent of the Montana Telecommunications Act was to allow substantial flexibility to the Public Service Commission, the extent of the Commission's authority to implement alternative forms of regulation is uncertain and enactment of this legislation will clarify the Public Service Commission's authority."

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 210, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because [section 8] [69-3-310] grants the public service commission general rulemaking authority and [section 6] [69-3-305] grants the commission authority to adopt rules relating to the appropriate scope of promotions, rebates, and market trials. The legislature intends that if rules are adopted by the commission, the rules should permit reasonable flexibility to providers of regulated telecommunications services in the marketing of their services."

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 210, L. 1991, was a severability clause.

1983 Amendment: In (1)(a) after "for any" inserted "utility"; inserted (3) authorizing Commission to order public utilities to pay rate, toll, or charge violation refunds, including interest; rewrote the first sentence of (4) (without changing the meaning), which read: "Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject the violator to the penalty prescribed in 69-3-206."

Case Notes

Existing Contracts:

The last sentence in this section refers to the preceding sentence and means that until changed by the Public Service Commission the rates, tolls, and charges were to remain as fixed in existing contracts even though such contracts granted rebates, concessions, and special privileges and that, pending change by the Commission, the public utility was protected from prosecution. Overruling decision in Helena Light & Ry. v. N. Pac. Ry., 57 M 93, 186 P2d 702 (1920), insofar as it conflicts with the above holding. Billings v. P.S.C., 67 M 29, 214 P 608 (1923).

Because this section exempts from the operation of the law all "existing contracts" and does not exclude from the provisions of the exempting clause renewals or extensions of such contracts, the renewal or extension of the contract involved in this case was not unlawful. Helena Light & Ry. v. N. Pac. Ry., 57 M 93, 186 P 702 (1920), overruled on another point in Billings v. P.S.C., 67 M 29, 214 P 608 (1923).

Subsection (4) of this section refers to subsection (1), forbidding rebates, concessions, etc., and was not intended to except from the operation of the act rate contracts made between cities and public utilities prior to its passage. State ex rel. Billings v. Billings Gas Co., 55 M 102, 173 P 799 (1918).

Parties Not Members of Special Lighting District — Not Directly Affected by Use of Non-LED Lights — No Standing to File Complaint with Public Service Commission: Four Montana taxpayers filed a complaint with the Public Service Commission (PSC) against NorthWestern Energy over ownership overcharges and its refusal to use LED streetlights. NorthWestern filed a motion to dismiss, claiming that the taxpayers lacked standing because they were not "directly affected" pursuant to 69-3-321 since none were members of a special lighting district. The PSC dismissed the complaint and the taxpayers appealed to District Court. After the District Court affirmed the decision, the taxpayers appealed to the Supreme Court, which agreed that the taxpayers were not directly affected by NorthWestern's actions. Moreover, the Supreme Court rejected the taxpayers' theories that they had standing based on either the constitutional right to a "clean and healthy environment" or on their status as general taxpayers. Williamson v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 32, 364 Mont. 128, 272 P.3d 71.

Public Service Commission Not Vested With Judicial Powers — Standing Under Statute Alone: In considering whether taxpayers had standing to file a complaint against NorthWestern Energy, the Supreme Court noted that the Public Service Commission is an administrative agency and is not vested with judicial powers. Therefore, its standing requirements are governed by statute and not by traditional case-or-controversy requirements. Williamson v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 32, 364 Mont. 128, 272 P.3d 71.

Case Notes

Due Process: When the Public Service Commission gave notice of hearing on an electric company's application for increased prices to offset increases in its cost, by sending news releases to radio, television, and newspapers, and when the Consumer Counsel participated in all proceedings throughout, the public was afforded reasonable opportunity to participate prior to final decision of Commission. No person was deprived of right to examine documents or observe deliberations, and no person was deprived of property without due process of law. Mont. Consumer Counsel v. Case Notes

Repricing Amount of Expense Recoverable by Utility for Purchase of Firm Power: It was proper for the Public Service Commission to reprice, for ratemaking purposes, the amount of expense a utility could recover from its Montana ratepayers for the purchase of firm power. The Commission found that 77% of the more expensive firm power could have been generated at existing facilities, as evidenced by the utility's own records showing that subsequent to the purchase, the utility backed down production at its existing plants, decreased its use of less expensive purchased power, and increased its unregulated off-system sales to other utilities. Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 243 M 492, 795 P2d 473, 47 St. Rep. 1351 (1990).

"Rate of Return" Analysis Method of Determining Coal Expense: The Public Service Commission (PSC) adopted the "rate of return on equity" method in determining the amount of a utility's coal expense that could be passed through to Montana ratepayers by reducing coal expenses used by the utility in setting rates for electric service. Although imperfect, the method was supported by substantial credible evidence and conformed to the PSC's power to adopt any nonarbitrary method it chooses. Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 231 M 118, 752 P2d 155, 45 St. Rep. 477 (1988).

Methodology of Determination Substantiated by Record — Failure to Object in Administrative Proceeding: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) did not commit error in the application of the "rate of return" methodology, rather than the "market value" methodology, in determining the reasonableness of contract cost for the purchase of coal by the Montana Power Company (MPC) from a wholly-owned subsidiary. While the Supreme Court stated a preference for the "market value" methodology in Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Bollinger, 193 M 508, 632 P2d 1086 (1981), the court did not prohibit the P.S.C. from using a different methodology if the evidence warrants its use. In this case, the evidence introduced by the P.S.C. was not challenged by MPC. Rather, MPC seeks to do so for the first time on appeal. Limited review of the administrative record is appropriate, and that record supports the findings of the Commission. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 204 M 224, 665 P2d 1121, 40 St. Rep. 805 (1983).

Jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission Over County Water Districts: County water districts are not subject exclusively to the control and ratemaking power of their own boards of directors, and therefore the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) does have jurisdiction and authority to order the Billings Heights Water District to enter into a stipulation with the city of Billings. Nothing in 7-13-2201 through 7-13-2348 expressly precludes the review and regulatory process of the P.S.C. pursuant to Title 69. Here, the board of directors was only intended to displace the County Commissioners' authority with regard to water and sewer functions. The board of directors is empowered to establish rates; however, such rates are subject to review and alteration by the P.S.C. if unjust, unreasonable, or discriminatory. "Surely the Legislature had in mind the provisions of Title 69 . . . when it enacted legislation giving rise to county water districts." Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Jurisdiction of City and Public Service Commission Overlapping: Although under the Municipal Revenue Bond Act, the petitioner (city of Billings) has the power to prescribe fees for the services, facilities, and commodities furnished by a project financed pursuant to the Act, this authority is not exclusive. The rates which the city sets are subject to modification by the Public Service Commission when such rates are unjust or unreasonable. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

Authority of Commission: The Public Service Commission may exercise its powers under this section against city serving as public utility, even though interfering thereby with city's control of its water department. Polson v. P.S.C., 155 M 464, 473 P2d 508 (1970).

Part 4
Review of Commission Actions

Part Case Notes

Scope of Review of Public Service Commission Order: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) adopted a marginal cost method rate structure in determining how the increased rates were to be allocated to residential, business, irrigation, and industrial users. That order was reviewed by the District Court, which reversed the orders of the P.S.C. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and reinstated the P.S.C. rate structure. The District Court substituted its own judgment for that of the P.S.C. While the District Court may disagree with the opinion of the experts the P.S.C. chose to follow, it is beyond the scope of review to reverse the P.S.C. on this ground. State ex rel. Dept. of Public Service Regulation v. Mont. Irrigators, Inc., 209 M 375, 680 P2d 963, 41 St. Rep. 768 (1984).

Extra Capacity Factor in Allocating Cost of Service: The Public Service Commission's (P.S.C.) decision to reject the city's proposed extra capacity factor, which was based upon a contract provision between the city and an adjoining water district in allocating cost of services to the water district, was upheld by the Supreme Court. The P.S.C. had substantial evidence before it in determining the extra capacity factor to be assigned to the district, and the decision, which was based on actual water use and comparisons from large water consumers similar in extent of demand to the water district, was not clearly erroneous. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Standing: When a member of the Public Service Commission dissented on a decision to increase the cost to customers of an electric company as fuel costs increased and sued to vacate and set aside Commission's rate order, he had no standing to bring suit because he was not "party in interest", which means a party outside decisionmaking process. McTaggart v. P.S.C. & Mont. Power Co., 168 M 155, 541 P2d 778 (1975).

Civil Rules: The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure were not applicable to proceeding under this part, being excepted by Rule 81. P.S.C. v. District Court, 162 M 225, 511 P2d 334 (1973).

Jurisdiction: When neither the parties nor the facts are the same in two cases to set aside orders of Public Service Commission, and no effort to consolidate the two cases was ever made, the court in one case was not deprived of jurisdiction to enter judgment on theory that the other court had first obtained jurisdiction of the appeal. Cascade County Consumers Ass'n v. P.S.C., 144 M 169, 394 P2d 856 (1964).

Burden of Proof:

In order to overcome the statutory presumption that all rates established by the Public Service Commission are prima facie lawful, the attacking party must present clear and convincing proof showing manifest error. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. P.S.C., 135 M 170, 338 P2d 1044 (1959).

When the company's proof showed only a conflict of fact between the company and the Commission on the rate base and rate of return and did not otherwise show wherein the rates were confiscatory, it failed to carry the burden of proof and an injunction was properly denied. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. P.S.C., 135 M 170, 338 P2d 1044 (1959).

Grounds for Injunction: Bare assertions that the Public Service Commission's findings are unreasonable, unlawful, and confiscatory will not, without more, be sufficient to invoke the court's jurisdiction for an injunction. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. P.S.C., 135 M 170, 338 P2d 1044 (1959).

Scope of Review — Findings Supported by Evidence: On review, if the Public Service Commission's order and findings therein are supported by evidence and credible proof, the courts will sustain it. State ex rel. Olsen v. P.S.C., 131 M 272, 309 P2d 1035 (1957).

Demurrer: Section 69-3-402 requires the Public Service Commission and other parties defendant to file their answer to the complaint within 20 days but does not preclude the filing of a demurrer (demurrer abolished by former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-31-503 (25-31-503 now repealed)). There is no reason why the Commission may not properly demur upon grounds which raise only questions of law that are preliminary to a consideration of the case on the merits. As to the contention that this results in the delay of the trial, it is sufficient to say that it is proper for the court to extend the time for answering for a reasonable time after disposition of the demurrer. State ex rel. Olsen v. P.S.C., 129 M 106, 283 P2d 594 (1955).

Transmission of Evidence From Court to Commission: Under this part, in an action to enjoin the Commission from enforcing an order reducing electric power rates, when the court admits evidence of changes in the utility's property since the date of the Commission's order and time of trial, it must, before rendering judgment, furnish the Commission with the transcript of the evidence, and it is thereupon the duty of the Commission to consider such evidence. Tobacco River Power Co. v. P.S.C., 109 M 521, 98 P2d 886 (1940).

69-3-402. Action to challenge commission order.

Case Notes

Access to Public Service Records — Media Required to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Prior to Court Action — Review of Confidentiality Rules Ordered: Several media organizations sought access to power company documents filed with the Public Service Commission. The Commission denied the request on confidentiality grounds, but rather than challenging the confidentiality claims through the Commission's administrative procedures, the organizations filed an action in District Court. The court proceeded to make factual and legal determinations to determine whether the requested documents constituted constitutionally protected trade secrets or proprietary information without the benefit of the Commission developing a record or making threshold determinations on the complex issues. The Supreme Court held that it was improper to bypass the administrative agency and take the issue to District Court without exhausting the Commission's administrative procedures, so the District Court was reversed with orders to remand the case to the Commission for further consideration. However, the Supreme Court also required the Commission to review its administrative rules related to confidentiality challenges because the rules primarily addressed requests for information from competitor utilities and did not necessarily apply to media challenges. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Public Service Commission Rules Creating Impermissible Presumption of Confidentiality in Trade Secrets: Several media organizations sought access to power company documents filed with the Public Service Commission. Applying its administrative rules, the Commission evaluated the power company's claims of confidentiality against basic trade secret law, found that the company had met the initial burden of establishing trade secrets, and concluded that because the media had presented no evidence or argument to the contrary, the company information was entitled to constitutional protection as a matter of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. To the extent that the Commission's rules relied on mere company representations that the information contained trade secrets, the Commission unconstitutionally shifted the initial burden of proof to the public to challenge the confidentiality claims, creating a presumption of confidentiality that directly conflicted with the public's right to view public records and the Commission's duty to make its records available to the public. The court held that a nonhuman entity seeking protective measures for alleged confidential materials filed with a governmental regulating agency must support its claim with a supporting affidavit making a prima facie showing that the materials constitute property rights that are protected by due process. Further, the showing must be more than conclusory and specific enough for the Commission, any objecting parties, and reviewing authorities to clearly understand the nature and basis of the confidentiality claim. The agency then must review the materials at the time of filing, in accordance with 30-14-402(4)(b) and supporting case law, and make an independent determination whether the materials are in fact property rights entitled to due process protection. To the extent that Commission rules required less, the court directed revision of Commission rules to comport with this holding. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Judicial Review — Treatment of Gain and Cost of Equity Capital: After receiving a $7,917,936 rate increase from the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.), Montana-Dakota Utilities Company (M.D.U.) requested reconsideration of the P.S.C.'s assignment of a 13.35% rate on return of capital and its order that the gain on reacquired debt be amortized over the remaining life of the indebtedness, the amortized amount to reduce interest expense to M.D.U. The P.S.C. denied reconsideration. On appeal, the District Court held that the P.S.C. correctly authorized the 13.35% rate return on equity capital but that its treatment of gain constituted a confiscation without due process. After appeal by both the P.S.C. and M.D.U., the Supreme Court held that the P.S.C.'s assignment of a 13.35% rate on return of equity capital was not arbitrary or capricious. However, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court, ruling that the P.S.C.'s order to amortize the gain on reacquired debt over the remaining life of the indebtedness was not confiscatory to either M.D.U. or its shareholders. Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 223 M 191, 725 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 1648 (1986).

Determining Venue in Action on Public Service Commission Order: In an action on an order entered by the Public Service Commission, it is not the mere making of the order but the place where it is put into operation that determines where the cause of action arises. St. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 181 M 225, 593 P2d 34, 36 St. Rep. 646 (1979); see also Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. P.S.C., 111 M 78, 107 P2d 533 (1940).

Commission Lacking Standing to Sue: Court held that a "party in interest being dissatisfied with an order of the commission" means a party outside the decisionmaking process and does not include a Commissioner who exercised legislative and quasi-judicial powers in arriving at the decision itself. A Commissioner's personal interest in seeing his view upheld is insufficient to give him standing to sue merely because he wears a "second hat" as a natural gas consumer because chaos would result if any dissenting member of a state board or agency had standing to appeal from any board or agency decision contrary to his own view. Failure of Public Service Commission to Factor Avoided Costs in Setting Reasonable Rate for Utility Purchase of Qualified Facility-Generated Electricity — Augmentation of Record Proper: The District Court reviewed plaintiff's utility rate case and concluded that the rate set by the Public Service Commission (PSC) was unreasonable and ordered that the case be remanded to the PSC to set a new rate that took avoided cost data into consideration. The court also ordered that plaintiff be allowed to augment the record to include updated avoided cost data. The PSC appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The PSC based the avoided cost tariff on outdated data, in violation of its own administrative rules, resulting in a rate that was unlawful and unreasonable. Therefore, remand of the case to the PSC for rate recalculation was proper, and allowing plaintiff to augment the record to include current data was justified. Whitehall Wind, LLC v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2010 MT 2, 355 Mont. 15, 223 P.3d 907.

Judicial Review — Treatment of Gain and Cost of Equity Capital: After receiving a $7,917,936 rate increase from the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.), Montana-Dakota Utilities Company (M.D.U.) requested reconsideration of the P.S.C.'s assignment of a 13.35% rate on return of capital and its order that the gain on reacquired debt be amortized over the remaining life of the indebtedness, the amortized amount to reduce interest expense to M.D.U. The P.S.C. denied reconsideration. On appeal, the District Court held that the P.S.C. correctly authorized the 13.35% rate return on equity capital but that its treatment of gain constituted a confiscation without due process. After appeal by both the P.S.C. and M.D.U., the Supreme Court held that the P.S.C.'s assignment of a 13.35% rate on return of equity capital was not arbitrary or capricious. However, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court, ruling that the P.S.C.'s order to amortize the gain on reacquired debt over the remaining life of the indebtedness was not confiscatory to either M.D.U. or its shareholders. Finality of Costs Considered Overarching Intent of Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act — PSC Denial of System That Would Allow Charging Future Transition Costs Correct Interpretation of Act: As part of the deregulation process pursuant to the Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act, the Montana Power Company (MPC) submitted a transition cost recovery plan to the Public Service Commission (PSC) that would have allowed the future recovery of certain transition costs as they became known over a period of 25 to 30 years. The PSC ordered MPC to amend its transition plan to specifically identify and demonstrate all transition costs that it sought to recover and not to rely on a future tracking mechanism. Upon judicial review, the District Court ordered the PSC to allow the tracking system. The Supreme Court was subsequently asked to determine whether the PSC interpretation of the Act was correct. The court held that MPC's proposed cost-tracking method, whereby some, but not all, transition costs would be unknown and therefore subject to the caprice of future events, was entirely inconsistent with the principle of finality and with statutory mandates in the Act placed on the PSC that all costs be determined to be: (1) verifiable; (2) unrecoverable; (3) affirmatively shown; (4) reasonably mitigated; (5) reasonably demonstrable; (6) reduced to a net sum; and (7) reduced to an amount in a final order. The principle of finality was also expressed in 69-8-211 (now repealed), which declared that PSC approval of transition costs, as well as the subsequent collection of those costs through transition charges, was a settlement of all transition costs claimed by a public utility. This finality was the overarching intent of the Act, in that the needs of consumers to effectively plan today takes precedence over precise cost analysis extending for years or even decades into the future. It is the PSC that assumes the role of arbiter in determining and fixing a utility's transition costs, if any, that will be discharged at the consumers' expense. Thus, the PSC's interpretation of the Act was correct, and the District Court's mandate requiring the PSC to allow the use of trackers would require the PSC to bend if not violate the law and could not be sustained. The District Court was reversed, and the PSC order was reinstated. Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2001 MT 102, 305 M 260, 26 P3d 91 (2001).

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal Public Service Commission Order — Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied completely M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court. Further, in his official capacity, the Attorney General may not appeal a decision that is within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. Since the latter appeal was invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 157 deleted former definition of avoided costs that read: ""Avoided costs" means the incremental costs, as determined by the commission, to an electric or natural gas utility of energy or capacity, or both, which, but for the purchase of conservation, the utility would generate or supply itself or purchase from another source" and deleted former definition of residential building that read: ""Residential building" means a building used for residential occupancy that:

(a) has a system for heating, cooling, or both, that uses a fuel supplied by the utility; and

(b) contains at least one but not more than four separately or centrally heated dwelling units or contains more than four separately heated or cooled or both heated and cooled units." Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 157, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 4] [69-3-1204] grants the public service commission rulemaking authority to adopt guidelines for an electric or natural gas utility to follow in compiling an integrated least-cost resource plan. It is the intent of the legislature that the rules not apply to rural electric cooperatives. It is also the intent of the legislature that the rules preserve the "used and useful" ratemaking standard. (1) allowable cost-effective conservation measures;
(2) on-site energy audits;
(3) conservation corresponding to end-use of energy that a utility provides;
(4) inspections;
(5) inclusion of conservation in a utility's rate base;
(6) other procedures necessary to implement this act.

In adopting cost effectiveness and engineering criteria, the commission is directed to consult with the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation and with Montana's representatives to the Northwest Power Council.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 210, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Telecommunications Act, which recognizes and encourages competition in the telecommunications industry to the extent consistent with maintaining universal telephone service, was intended to serve as a bridge between a regulated telecommunications industry and a fully competitive market environment; and

WHEREAS, rapid technological and market changes within the telecommunications industry have prompted regulators nationwide to reexamine traditional regulation and adopt alternative regulatory systems; and

WHEREAS, although the intent of the Montana Telecommunications Act was to allow substantial flexibility to the Public Service Commission, the extent of the Commission's authority to implement alternative forms of regulation is uncertain and enactment of this legislation will clarify the Public Service Commission's authority."

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 210, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because [section 8] [69-3-310] grants the public service commission general rulemaking authority and [section 6] [69-3-305] grants the commission authority to adopt rules relating to the appropriate scope of promotions, rebates, and market trials. The legislature intends that if rules are adopted by the commission, the rules should permit reasonable flexibility to providers of regulated telecommunications services in the marketing of their services."

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 210, L. 1991, was a severability clause.

Effective Date: Section 11, Ch. 210, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] is effective on passage and approval." Approved March 27, 1991.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 577 (Ch. 546, L. 1985) provided: "As stated in the purpose section of this act, it is the intent of the legislature to maintain universal availability of basic telecommunications service at affordable rates. At the same time, the legislature desires to make available to the general public the rapid advances in telecommunications technology brought about by competition. It is the intent of this act to provide the regulatory flexibility necessary to allow a transition to a competitive market environment in the telecommunications industry.

Under prior law there was no mechanism that would allow telecommunications utilities to respond to competitive situations. It is the intent of the legislature that the public service commission now have the authority to permit flexible pricing in those instances where it will promote healthy competition. For example, if two telecommunications utilities are effectively competing to provide long distance service to a market, the commission may allow those companies to change their rates without commission approval in response to competition. Depending upon the circumstances, the commission may detariff rates for the competitive services or allow the telecommunications utilities to operate within permissible price ranges or implement some other form of regulation that is less restrictive than total rate regulation.

The legislature intends that the commission retain the power to protect ratepayer interests by totally regulating the rates for telecommunications services that are provided on a monopoly basis. It is intended that the commission be authorized to examine each service and market to determine when market conditions rather than total rate regulation can be relied upon to assure that adequate service will be provided at reasonable rates.

It is further intended that the commission have authority to take those actions necessary to assure that revenues from regulated telecommunications services are not used to subsidize nonregulated operations.

It is intended that the commission have authority to adopt rules, if needed, to develop standards for evaluating market conditions and criteria for determining that detariffing or rate flexibility is appropriate. The commission may also implement, by rule if necessary, such reporting requirements as are required to permit a proper allocation of common or joint costs and investments."

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 349, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill is required because rulemaking authority is granted to the public service commission.

[Section 3] [69-3-833] authorizes the public service commission to adopt procedural rules relating to mediation and arbitration for interconnection proceedings.

Under the interim universal access provisions of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed], the public service commission is to establish surcharge rates as provided in [section 25] [69-3-860, now repealed]. The surcharge rates must take into account different cost structures among telecommunications carriers, particularly the wireless and CATV industry. The retail revenue for these providers should be based on an equitable, per access line, revenue equivalent. The commission shall also set the surcharge rate to produce the amount of revenue necessary to fund the program. The formulation should consider any overlapping federal discounts. The commission should appoint an oversight group, consisting of users and industry participants, to meet quarterly with the commission to review revenue, discounts, and the administration of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed]. The public service commission shall also establish a method for paying discount reimbursements in accordance with [section 25] [69-3-860, now repealed]. The public service commission shall cooperate with the department of revenue in determining rates, administering offsets against any surcharges, and other matters necessary for the administration of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed].

The department of revenue shall administer the collection of the surcharge by rule. Because of the limited duration of the program, it is contemplated that the rules and administration be minimal, flexible, and as unobtrusive as possible while ensuring that there are sufficient administrative powers to enable the implementation of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed].

Under [section 13] [69-3-843], the public service commission shall administer a contract with a third party that will manage the universal service fund for telecommunications services on a daily basis. The third party is responsible for the collection of contributions to the fund. The third party is also responsible for setting the amount of contribution based on total retail revenue of telecommunications carriers operating in Montana. The public service commission shall adopt procedural rules for the collection of the contributions. The public service commission shall also adopt rules allowing the third party to assess late fees and interest on late payments of contributions. The rules must set interest rates and penalties for late payments.

[Section 14] [69-3-844] authorizes the public service commission to adopt procedural rules relating to the collection of contributions to the universal service fund.

[Section 14] [69-3-844] authorizes the public service commission to adopt rules for the assessment of late fees and interest on contributions to the fund.

[Section 15] [69-3-845] requires the public service commission to adopt rules establishing affordability benchmarks for local service.

69-3-845. Payments from fund — costs.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 430 in (1) at beginning deleted "Subject to the requirements of this section" and substituted "quarterly basis" for "monthly basis"; in (2) substituted reference to 69-3-842(2) for reference to 69-3-842(1); deleted former (3) through (7) that read: "(3) Distributions must be calculated for the designated support areas established by the commission. In the case of an area served by a rural telephone company, the term "designated support area" means the rural telephone company's Montana service area unless the rural telephone company voluntarily adopts a proxy model for the calculation of the rural telephone company's cost of telecommunications services under subsection (6). After adoption of a proxy model, the rural telephone company's designated support area must be an area designated by the commission, which may be smaller than a wire center. The term designated support area for all other telecommunications carriers means a geographic area as established by the commission, which must be smaller than a wire center.

(4) Support for the services listed in 69-3-842(1) must be calculated as the difference between the costs determined in each designated support area and the affordability benchmark in that support area. The commission shall adopt rules to determine affordability benchmarks.

(5) Except as provided in subsection (6), for rural telephone companies and other eligible telecommunications carriers offering services in a designated support area served by a rural telephone company, the average cost for each line must be calculated and submitted, based on the preceding calendar year, to the fiscal agent as follows:

(a) If an additional eligible telecommunications carrier has not been designated pursuant to 69-3-840(3), the rural telephone company's total unseparated loop cost, as defined by federal separation rule methodology in effect on December 31, 1996, must be added to the switching costs, local transport costs, and customer operations costs assigned to the telecommunications services set forth in 69-3-842(1), which must be calculated using the methodology set forth in federal communications commission jurisdictional separation rules in effect as of December 31 of each calendar year. This total cost must be reduced by any federal universal service support, interstate allocation of loop costs, and loop costs recovered through intrastate telecommunications carrier common line charges to long-distance companies.

(b) Upon the designation of an additional eligible telecommunications carrier pursuant to 69-3-840(3) in a designated support area served by a rural telephone company, the additional eligible telecommunications carrier has access to the fund on the same basis as the rural telephone company. Upon the designation of the additional eligible telecommunications carrier, both the carrier and the rural telephone company must receive distributions from the fund based upon the rural telephone company's average cost for each line disaggregated to geographic areas smaller than a wire center. The support for each line for each geographic area must be based upon the rural telephone company's costs, as determined in subsection (5)(a), distributed to each of the geographic areas on the basis of relative distribution factors established by a cost proxy model adopted by the commission.

(6) Except as provided in subsection (5)(b), for companies that are not rural telephone companies and for rural telephone companies voluntarily electing to use a cost proxy model, the average cost for each line in designated support areas must be calculated based on the cost proxy model adopted by the commission. This total per-line cost must be reduced by any federal universal service support, interstate allocation of loop costs, and loop costs recovered through intrastate telecommunications carrier common line charges to long-distance companies.

(7) In determining any proxy mechanism under this section, the commission shall use a model that:

(a) targets support to a geographic area smaller than a wire center;

(b) uses acceptable outside plant design and costing principles;

(c) uses reasonable switch design and costing principles;

(d) includes a reasonable share of the joint and common costs of the telecommunications carrier;

(e) meets standards for documenting model logic and the sources of cost data input; and

(f) meets reasonableness tests to ensure that model outputs are representative of costs that can be reasonably expected in the construction of a network and that the network is capable of providing telecommunications services that meet the telecommunications services quality standards of the commission and federal regulators"; and made minor changes in style. The commission shall also set the surcharge rate to produce the amount of revenue necessary to fund the program. The formulation should consider any overlapping federal discounts. The commission should appoint an oversight group, consisting of users and industry participants, to meet quarterly with the commission to review revenue, discounts, and the administration of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed]. The public service commission shall also establish a method for paying discount reimbursements in accordance with [section 25] [69-3-860, now repealed]. The public service commission shall cooperate with the department of revenue in determining rates, administering offsets against any surcharges, and other matters necessary for the administration of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed].

The department of revenue shall administer the collection of the surcharge by rule. Because of the limited duration of the program, it is contemplated that the rules and administration be minimal, flexible, and as unobtrusive as possible while ensuring that there are sufficient administrative powers to enable the implementation of [sections 20 through 26] [69-3-856 through 69-3-861, all now repealed].

Under [section 13] [69-3-843], the public service commission shall administer a contract with a third party that will manage the universal service fund for telecommunications services on a daily basis. The third party is responsible for the collection of contributions to the fund. The third party is also responsible for setting the amount of contribution based on total retail revenue of telecommunications carriers operating in Montana. The public service commission shall adopt procedural rules for the collection of the contributions. The public service commission shall also adopt rules allowing the third party to assess late fees and interest on late payments of contributions. The rules must set interest rates and penalties for late payments.

[Section 14] [69-3-844] authorizes the public service commission to adopt procedural rules relating to the collection of contributions to the universal service fund.

[Section 14] [69-3-844] authorizes the public service commission to adopt rules for the assessment of late fees and interest on contributions to the fund.

[Section 15] [69-3-845] requires the public service commission to adopt rules establishing affordability benchmarks for local service."

Part Compiler's Comments

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 157, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 4] [69-3-1204] grants the public service commission rulemaking authority to adopt guidelines for an electric or natural gas utility to follow in compiling an integrated least-cost resource plan. It is the intent of the legislature that the rules not apply to rural electric cooperatives. It is also the intent of the legislature that the rules preserve the "used and useful" ratemaking standard. The rules are not intended to allow the commission to preapprove any resource use proposed in a plan. [Section 5] [69-3-1205] does not require coordination between the commission and the department of natural resources and conservation regarding their respective planning requirements. However, it is the intent of the legislature that the department and other state agencies share with the commission their expertise on environmental impacts of a utility's planned resource acquisitions. [Section 6] [69-3-1206] addresses commission rate treatment. The commission may include costs resulting from an integrated least-cost resource plan in a utility's rates."

69-4-101. Use of public right-of-way for utility lines and facilities.

Case Notes

Forest Land — Power Transmission Not Within Scope of Highway Right-of-Way — State Law Not Applicable: A subdivision that installed a powerline under a road on national forest property without U.S. Forest Service approval could not rely on a county permit that authorized the installation. The scope of a grant of federal land is a question of federal law, and in some instances it may be determined as a matter of federal law that the United States has impliedly adopted and assented to a state rule of construction as to its conveyances. However, by the time of the 1901 road grant Congress had adopted a federal rule that power transmission is not within the scope of an R.S. 2477, 43 U.S.C. 932, highway right-of-way and had excluded any implied borrowing of state law on this point. U.S. v. Gates of the Mountains Lakeshore Homes, Inc., 732 F2d 1411 (9th Cir. 1984). See also Richter v. Rose, 1998 MT 165, 289 Mont. 379, 962 P.2d 583, regarding the method of acceptance of an easement pursuant to R.S. 2477.

Public Utility Lines Through Reservation: A public utility has a right to maintain its buried telephone cable in the right-of-way of a highway across an Indian reservation land not because of the power of the state but because of the congressional adoption of state law as the measure of the federal grant to build roads across reservation lands and to delineate the usage of such roads. U.S. v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 434 F. Supp. 625, 34 St. Rep. 832 (D.C. Mont. 1977).

Electric Lines: An electric cooperative could not enjoin a competing power company from extending powerlines to residents previously served by the cooperative on the basis that it acquired certain rights to serve customers after having set out on an expensive program of erection and operation of distribution lines to the customers in question. Yellowstone Valley Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 150 M 519, 437 P2d 5 (1968) (decided before enactment of the Territorial Integrity Act of 1971).

Operation and Effect:

This section is not subject to construction that it forbids electric powerlines unless they are necessary. Yellowstone Valley Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 150 M 519, 437 P2d 5 (1968).

A telephone company is not a trespasser on a highway, nor is it negligent per se in maintaining a guy wire on a portion of it not intended for travel. This section gives such company the right to construct its lines along the highways provided the traveling public is not endangered or inconvenienced thereby. Howard v. Flathead Independent Tel. Co., 49 M 197, 141 P 153 (1914).

Case Notes

Exclusion of Expert Testimony — Insufficient Factual Grounds and Testimony Directed to Question of Law: Plaintiffs contended that they attempted to introduce evidence of the applicability of the National Electrical Code (NEC) and the National Electrical Safety Code (NESC) through testimony of an expert and that it was error for the trial court to deny a jury instruction regarding the NEC and NESC. However, the instruction was properly denied because there were insufficient factual grounds to establish the relevancy of the NEC and NESC and because the expert's testimony was directed to a question of law. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Duty of Care Not Established by Statutory Compliance: Bare compliance with a statute, such as this section, does not necessarily establish due care. If the circumstances are such that a danger exists beyond the minimum that this section was designed to meet, the jury may be informed that a defendant is negligent for not doing more. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Violation of Maintenance and Design Standards — Negligence Per Se: Violations of maintenance and design standards intended to protect the public are negligence per se. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Jury Instruction — Breadth of Statutory Incorporation by Reference: Section 69-4-201 specifically incorporates only the construction standards of the National Electrical Safety Code rather than the code in its entirety. In the absence of specific statutory incorporation, the provisions of the National Electrical Safety Code can only furnish evidence of a standard of care to be considered in determining negligence. Therefore, the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violation of any provision of the National Electrical Safety Code constitutes negligence per se was proper. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), overruled in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Part 4

Part Case Notes

Use of Water — Public Use — Eminent Domain: Title 69, ch. 4, part 4, allows a landowner to cause a utility to relocate an overhead utility line for the purpose of installing an improved irrigation system. The use of water in the irrigation of farmland is a public use for which the right of eminent domain will lie. McTaggart v. Mont. Power Co., 184 M 329, 602 P2d 992, 36 St. Rep. 2079 (1979).

69-4-404. Costs of relocation.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 141 after "paid" deleted "50% by the utility and 50%" and deleted former second sentence that read: "However, if the person petitioning for the order fails for any reason to install the agricultural improvement within 2 years following the date relocation is completed, he must reimburse the owner of the line the full cost of relocation, and the court has continuing jurisdiction over the parties for the purpose of ordering such reimbursement"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Unconstitutional: Section 69-4-404 is unconstitutional (see 1993 amendment) because it is a taking without just compensation. The relocation of the powerline comes at the insistence of the landowner, and it is he who must bear the full cost of relocation. McTaggart v. Mont. Power Co., 184 M 329, 602 P2d 992, 36 St. Rep. 2079 (1979).

Part 5
Excavations Near Underground Facilities

Part Case Notes

Right of Third Party to Use Water and Sewer Lines Under Condominium Property — Indicia of Ownership Determinative: Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., filed a declaration that submitted Tract I-A to the Unit Ownership Act and allowed Big Sky Camper Village, Inc., to expand the number of condominium units in its development within 10 years. Hidden Village, Inc. (HVI), the successor in interest of Big Sky Camper Village, sought to construct improvements on property adjacent to the Big Sky Hidden Village Condominium and to use the existing water and sewer lines for the new improvements. The owners' association, Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Association, brought an action to prevent development without its permission, claiming that the water and sewer lines sought to be used by HVI were the common property of the Association for the exclusive use of the Association and could not be used without permission of the Association. However, the Supreme Court found that the water and sewer lines were constructed and maintained by third parties, a water delivery company and a water and sewer district, and that the Association asserted ownership but provided no evidence of indicia of ownership. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the Association could not interfere with or control the hookup and servicing of HVI on the water and sewer lines used by the members of the Association. Big Sky Hidden Village Owners Ass'n, Inc. v. Hidden Village, Inc., 276 M 268, 915 P2d 845, 53 St. Rep. 379 (1996).

Denial of Recovery for Previous Expenditures by Utilities Not Denial of Just Compensation: The Mountain Water Company (MWC) sought an increase in utility rates to cover previous expenditures that it had been compelled to provide for its customers under 69-4-511 (now repealed), seeking recovery through a 2-year amortization. The Public Service Commission (PSC) authorized recovery through rates of annual and prospective expenses, but denied recovery of previous expenditures. On appeal, the District Court held that PSC's refusal to allow recovery of back expenses failed to justly compensate MWC for the taking of its property under 69-4-511 (now repealed). The rule set out in Galveston Elec. Co. v. Galveston, 258 US 388, 66 L Ed 678, 42 S Ct 351 (1922), is that a utility may not set its rates so as to amortize past deficits, and the rule applies to a private as well as to a municipal utility. MWC was aware of the passage of 69-4-511 (now repealed) and could have applied for coverage of the utility costs prospectively, but failed to do so. The District Court erred in concluding that MWC was not justly compensated by PSC's denial of retroactive recovery. Mtn. Water Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 254 M 76, 835 P2d 4, 49 St. Rep. 632 (1992).

Equal Protection Not Violated by Exclusion of Publicly Owned Water Service Providers: Section 69-4-511 (now repealed) does not violate the federal equal protection clause by applying to privately owned and not publicly owned water service providers. The statute's distinction is rationally related to legitimate government purposes. Heightened scrutiny, under the theory that a statute not implicating a suspect class violates equal protection if it serves no legitimate government purpose or if impermissible animus toward an unpopular group prompted the statute's enactment, is not necessary. There is a legitimate government purpose, and the record does not support the claim that the Senator sponsoring the bill, the Legislature, or both had an impermissible animus toward privately owned providers, even though the Senator had had difficulties over whether he or the privately owned provider of water to his home should pay for certain repairs to his waterline. In addition, privately owned water service providers are neither members of a suspect class nor a politically unpopular group. Mtn. Water Co. v Mont. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 919 F2d 593 (1990).

No Taking of Private Property for Public Use Without Just Compensation: Although the provision in 69-4-511 (now repealed) that a privately owned water service provider must reimburse a customer for certain costs of maintaining that part of the customer's waterline (which the customer owns) that is between the customer's property boundary and the main waterline effects a taking of the provider's property (that is, its funds), the taking does not violate the federal fifth amendment because it is for a public use and with just compensation. Because the Legislature could have rationally conceived it would enhance service line maintenance, 69-4-511 (now repealed) effects a taking for a public use, even if 69-4-511 (now repealed) proves ineffective in achieving that purpose. Moreover, 69-4-511 (now repealed) may serve the additional public purpose of redistributing the cost of service line maintenance among all of the utility's customers from which the utility can recoup the costs. Because the utility can recoup its costs through a general rate increase, it is justly compensated for the taking. Mtn. Water Co. v. Mont. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 919 F2d 593 (1990).

Part 6
Movement of Structures

Part Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble to Ch. 442, L. 1983, provided: "WHEREAS, Title 69, chapter 4, part 6, MCA, provides for a procedure for moving houses and other structures under and through existing electrical powerlines, telegraph cables, and guy wires, requiring notice to the owner of the lines, cables, or wires; and

WHEREAS, section 69-4-603, MCA, provides that the necessary and reasonable expenses of cutting or raising the lines, cables, or wires are generally to be borne by their owners; and

WHEREAS, the total payment for such services is an unreasonable and unfair burden to place on utilities and utility ratepayers, who cannot participate in decisions to move structures that require interference with lines, cables, and wires; and

WHEREAS, it is in the best interests of all electric, telephone, or cable television ratepayers in Montana that the necessary and reasonable expenses associated with movement of structures requiring wires, cables, or poles to be moved or raised pursuant to sections 69-4-601 through 69-4-604, MCA, be shared equally by the person, firm, or corporation owning the structure and the person, firm, or corporation owning or operating the wires, cables, or poles required to be moved; and

WHEREAS, a public purpose will be served by requiring that the person, firm, or corporation owning a structure under these statutes pay 50% of the necessary and reasonable expenses of raising or cutting wires and cables or moving poles to accomplish such move."

Part Administrative Rules

Title 38, chapter 5, subchapter 24, ARM Utility charges for raising or cutting wires or moving poles to accommodate relocation of structures.

69-4-602. Notice of move — cost estimate.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 359 in (1) near middle substituted "owning or controlling the wires, cables, or poles affected by the movement of a structure, at both the person's, firm's, or corporation's principal office" for "owning or operating the wires or poles, at their principal office"; in (2) in two places inserted references to "cables", near beginning substituted "total cost of all work related to cutting" for "cost of cutting", and near middle inserted "including travel time"; inserted (3) and (4) relating to total cost and development of a cost schedule; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 17, 2003.

1983 Amendment: Substituted language concerning notice procedure required for moving structure for former text, which read: "The person, firm, or corporation moving any house, building, derrick, or other structure shall give to the person, firm, or corporation owning or operating such wire or poles, at their nearest office and also at their principal office within the state, not less than 3 days' written notice of the time and place, when and where the removal of said poles or the cutting, raising, moving, or otherwise interfering with said poles or wires will be necessary."

Case Notes

Moving or Raising Utility Wires — Police Power, Not Eminent Domain: Under 69-4-603, a utility was required (prior to the 1983 amendment requiring a sharing of the costs) to move or raise utility wires so that oversized objects could be moved through public streets. The statute was determined to be an exercise of police power rather than sounding in eminent domain. Therefore, due process requirements of the 14th amendment may be met without compensation. Four factors were cited in the determination that the statute exercises police power: (1) public safety is concerned; (2) a public benefit is conferred; (3) a reasonable and necessary public use is allowed; and (4) the public's right to use the highways is recognized under the statute. Yellowstone Valley Elec. Co-op v. Ostermiller, 187 M 8, 608 P2d 491, 37 St. Rep. 536 (1980).

69-4-603. Procedure to accomplish move — payment of cost.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 359 in (1) near beginning after "area in which" substituted "wires, cables, or poles" for "utility poles or wires" and in two places inserted references to cables; deleted former (2) and (3) that read: "(2) The necessary and reasonable expense of raising or cutting the wires or of moving the poles for utilities subject to the jurisdiction of the public service commission must be fixed and determined by the public service commission on the average cost per line or pole for time and materials expended. These costs and expenses must be reviewed biennially. Except as provided in subsections (4) and (5), the necessary and reasonable expense of raising or cutting the wires or of moving the poles must be shared equally by the person, firm, or corporation owning the structure and the person, firm, or corporation owning or operating the wires, cables, or poles required to be moved.

(3) The rates and charges of rural cooperative electric utilities, rural cooperative telephone utilities, and other persons who occupy and use utility or cooperative poles may not exceed the charges established by the public service commission for utilities subject to its jurisdiction. The charges assessed by utilities, other than utilities subject to the jurisdiction of the public service commission, must be apportioned as provided in subsection (2)"; in (2)(a) near beginning substituted "the necessary and actual costs" for "to facilitate the movement of a house, building, derrick, or other structure, the necessary and reasonable costs" and at end substituted "movement of a house, building, derrick, other structure, or prefabricated structure that is intended to be moved from the place of fabrication, storage facility, or dealer's lot, determined in accordance with the schedule filed under 69-4-602, must be paid by the mover" for "movement must be paid by the owner of:

(i) a prefabricated structure that is intended to be moved from the place of fabrication; or

(ii) the sixth and each subsequent structure that exceeds 25 feet in height while being moved and that is to be moved from a single site. When structures are moved in a group or in a continuous caravan formation and when only a single line cut or movement is necessary, the move must count as only a single-structure move for purposes of this subsection (4)(a)(ii). For the purposes of this subsection (4)(a)(ii), a single site includes but is not limited to a development complex, housing complex, military base, or institutional complex. The whole of an incorporated municipality is not a single site as the term is used in this subsection"; in (2)(b) near beginning substituted "actual" for "reasonable" and at end substituted "determined in accordance with the schedule filed under 69-4-602, must be shared equally by the mover and the owner of the wires, cables, or poles if the structure is owned by a person for occupancy or use by that person" for "by a person for occupancy by that person must be shared equally as provided in subsection (2)"; at beginning of (3) substituted "A mover may not raise, cut, or in any way interfere with wires, cables, or poles" for "A person, firm, or corporation who owns or moves a house, building, derrick, or other structure may not raise, cut, or in any way interfere with any poles or wires" and in two places inserted references to cables; deleted former (5)(b) and (5)(c) that read: "(b) When the person who owns or controls the poles or wires refuses to raise or cut the wires or move the poles, the person, firm, or corporation who owns or moves the house, building, derrick, or other structure shall ensure that only competent and experienced workers raise or cut the wires or move the poles.

(c) The following procedure must be followed:

(i) The necessary and reasonable expense incurred by the owner or mover of the house, building, derrick, or other structure as a result of raising or cutting the wires or moving the poles must be paid by the owners of the poles or wires handled.

(ii) The work of raising or cutting the wires or moving the poles must be done in a careful manner.

(iii) The poles and wires must be promptly replaced and any damage to the poles or wires must be promptly repaired"; inserted (4) through (7) relating to prepayment and time for payment; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 17, 2003.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 551 in (1), at beginning, substituted "In order to accomplish moving a house, building, derrick, or other structure through an area in which utility poles or wires impede the movement, it is" for "It shall then be" and substituted "and who has received the" for "after service of"; in (2), in second sentence after "and expenses", deleted "must be determined at a hearing to be held within 180 days of October 1, 1983, and"; in (3) inserted "other than utilities subject to the jurisdiction of the public service commission"; in (4)(a) substituted "Except as provided in subsection (4)(b), to facilitate the movement of a house, building, derrick, or other structure" for "Owners of prefabricated structures built with the intention of moving shall pay" and after "movement" inserted "must be paid by the owner of"; inserted (4)(a)(i) and (4)(a)(ii) specifying owners of certain structures liable for moving costs; inserted (4)(b) regarding moving costs of a residential structure; in (5)(a) substituted "person, firm, or corporation who owns or controls" for "persons or authorities owning or having control of"; in (5)(b) inserted "When the person who owns or controls the poles or wires refuses to raise or cut the wires or move the poles, the person, firm, or corporation who owns or moves the house, building, derrick, or other structure shall ensure that" and after "experienced" substituted "workers raise or cut the wires or move the poles" for "workmen or linemen shall be employed in such work, and in such case"; inserted (5)(c) containing introductory clause regarding procedure; in (5)(c)(i) inserted "incurred by the owner or mover of the house, building, derrick, or other structure as a result of raising or cutting the wires or moving the poles" and after "owners of the poles" substituted "or" for "and"; in (5)(c)(ii) substituted "of raising or cutting the wires or moving the poles must" for "shall"; and made minor changes in style.

1983 Amendment: Near end of (1), after "facilitate" substituted "moving" for "removing"; inserted (2) through (4) relating to payment of necessary and reasonable expenses of raising or cutting wires or of moving or removing utility or cooperative poles; near beginning of (5) after "corporation" inserted "owning or"; near end of (5) after "wires handled" deleted "provided, however, that any person, firm, or corporation engaged in moving such structure within the limits of any city or town shall pay all necessary and reasonable expense of raising or cutting such wires or removing such poles".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 442, L. 1983, provided: "A statement of intent is required for SB 84 because in subsection (2) of section 2 it amends 69-4-603 to give the Public Service Commission the authority to determine the average cost of raising or cutting wires or cables or of moving poles. It is the intention of the legislature that the Public Service Commission hold a hearing within 180 days after the effective date of SB 84 to discover the reasonable and necessary costs of those operations, after which the commission shall establish by rule the average costs, which shall remain in effect until modified by the commission after a subsequent biennial review."

Case Notes

"Premises" to Be Property Line — Not First Building on Property: ZooMontana is a nonprofit corporation formed to build and operate a zoo west of Billings. ZooMontana requested that Montana Power Company (MPC) supply power for the first building (an education building) built on the property. The District Court found and the Supreme Court affirmed that the premises for this purpose is the property line of the property and not the education building and that because the cost of extension is greater to MPC than to the Yellowstone Valley Electric Cooperative, Inc., the Cooperative is entitled to provide the electric power. Yellowstone Valley Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 251 M 91, 822 P2d 102, 48 St. Rep. 1068 (1991).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 505 substituted current text concerning electrical service facilities for customer's own use for "Nothing in 69-5-103 through 69-5-106 shall restrict the right of an electric supplier to furnish electric service to any property owned by the electric supplier." Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 47, Ch. 505, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 48, Ch. 505, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Meaning of "Any Property": It was reversible error for the District Court to limit the meaning of the term "any property", as used in this section, to commercial or industrial property, for the term's meaning is not ambiguous and is plain and certain. By 1-1-205, the word "property" means real and personal property wherever used in this Code. Therefore, the power company and not the electric cooperative had the right to provide electrical services to a housing subdivision being developed by the power company. (See 1997 amendment.) Tongue River Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 195 M 511, 636 P2d 862, 38 St. Rep. 2032 (1981).

Amendment effective May 2, 1997.

CHAPTER 7
MUNICIPAL UTILITIES

Chapter Case Notes

No Prohibition Against Utility Regulation by Municipality: Appellants argued that the restriction in 7-1-111(5), which prohibits a local government unit from establishing a rate or price otherwise determined by a state agency, preempted the city of Billings from assessing new utility fees in the form of system development fees for funding the expansion of water and sewer facilities. However, under this chapter, municipal utility rates are not determined by a state agency; rather, unless the rates result in an increase in total revenue of 12% in any 1 year, the exclusive authority to regulate, establish, and change municipal utility rates rests with the city. Lechner v. Billings, 244 M 195, 797 P2d 191, 47 St. Rep. 1512 (1990).

Authority of City-County Government to Acquire and Operate Electric and Natural Gas Utilities: A consolidated government with self-government powers, such as the city and county of Butte-Silver Bow, has the authority to acquire and operate electric and natural gas utilities both within and outside the boundaries of the local government unit. The Attorney General determined that Butte-Silver Bow was specifically authorized to do so after considering the local government's charter, constitutional ramifications, and whether the exercise of that authority was prohibited by local government law or other statutes applicable to self-government units and was consistent with state provisions in areas affirmatively subjected to state control, as described in 7-1-113. 48 A.G. Annual revenues must be computed on any consecutive 12-month period for purposes of this chapter"; and made minor changes in style.

1983 Amendment: Inserted last sentence requiring annual revenues to be computed on any consecutive 12-month period; and made section permanent.

Case Notes

Grant of Preliminary Injunction — Prima Facie Showing of Violation of Constitutional and Contract Rights: A 1963 contract between the city of Billings and the Billings Heights County Water District fixed water rate charges and limited any subsequent rate increase charged the district unless the same percentage increase was applied to all city water users. Needing to raise additional revenue, in 1993, the city raised average water rates by 9.2% and the district rates by 32%. The district relied on the contract and increased its payments by 9.2%. In 1994, the city initiated an action to recover from the district the difference between the 1993 rate and the rate that the district paid from that time. In 1996, the city raised rates again, resulting in a 123% increase to the district and no such dramatic increase to any other city water customer. The district applied for a preliminary injunction to prevent the city from imposing the 1996 rate until the 1994 action had been addressed, but the application was denied and the district appealed. The Supreme Court found that the district made: (1) a sufficient showing that application of this section, granting the city control over utility rates, substantially impaired the district's rights under the 1963 contract; and (2) a prima facie case that application of this section violated its rights under contract clauses of the U.S. and Montana Constitutions. Without ruling on the merits of the case, the court held that the district was thus entitled to the temporary injunction. Billings v. County Water District of Billings Heights, 281 M 219, 935 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 144 (1997).

Funding of Public Service Commission and Consumer Counsel — Definition of "Regulated Companies" — Payment of Fees by Municipal Utility: The operations of the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) and the Montana Consumer Counsel (MCC) are not funded through the general fund as are most state government agencies but instead are funded by fees imposed on regulated companies, based on a percentage of the gross operating revenue of the company. Regulated companies are defined as all organizations, corporations, associations, or other public or private entities that are or may become subject to regulation by the P.S.C. or its successor agency. Under 69-7-102 (now repealed) and this section, the utilities are allowed to raise rates as long as they are not raised to yield more than a 12% increase in total annual revenue. If a rate increase exceeds 12%, the utility must apply to the P.S.C. for the increase. (See 1995 amendment to this section.) The utility's argument that both P.S.C. and MCC fees are user fees and that regulated companies do not have to pay the fees unless they use P.S.C. or MCC services during a given year would make it possible for a municipal utility to control and avoid imposition of fees except under extraordinary circumstances, which is outside the context of legislative intent. Thus, as a regulated company, the municipal utility of the city of Billings is subject to regulation by the P.S.C. Billings v. Dept. of Revenue, 270 M 307, 891 P2d 1149, 52 St. Rep. 196 (1995).

City Resolution Allowing Implied Consent to Annexation Upon Continued Use of Utility Services Affirmed: The city of Whitefish adopted a municipal resolution requiring that property owners consent to annexation in order to continue to receive city utility services and allowing the city to imply consent to annexation from property owners that continued to receive the services after they received notice requiring them to disconnect from the utilities. Property owners contended that the resolution was invalid, but the District Court held the resolution valid, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Attorney General held in 46 A.G. Op. 12 (1995), that a municipality may establish a rule requiring consent to annexation as a condition for continued receipt of services, and that opinion is in accord with this section. Further, the utility rule in this case put the burden on the property owner to arrange to disconnect from services if protesting annexation, so once proper notice was given, under 7-2-4710 and 28-2-503 the city's procedure to imply consent was a proper method to determine if a property owner wished to continue to receive city services or to protest annexation. Gregg v. Whitefish City Council, 2004 MT 262, 323 M 109, 99 P3d 151 (2004).

Setting of Municipal Utility Rates Not Subjected to State Control: The setting of rates and charges for municipal utilities has not been affirmatively subjected to state control within the meaning of 7-1-113. The enforcement of standards or requirements and the power to establish administrative rules in the area of municipal ratemaking are not vested in any state agency or officer. Rather, this section requires the municipal utility, with the concurrence of the municipal governing body, to adopt rules for operating the utility. Lechner v. Billings, 244 M 195, 797 P2d 191, 47 St. Rep. 1512 (1990).

Municipality Authorized to Assess Charge for Providing Water Service to Fire Hydrants Owned by Rural Improvement District: When a rural improvement district requests that a municipal water utility provide water service to fire hydrants owned by the district, the municipality is authorized to provide that service and to assess a charge for it. 45 A.G. Op. 4 (1993).

No Lien for Nonpayment of Water Bill: A city or town may not file a lien against a landowner's property due to a tenant's failure to pay for water service contracted for and used by the tenant. Discontinuance of service is the only statutory remedy provided for nonpayment of water charges. When a power is conferred upon a municipality and the mode in which it is to exercise that power is prescribed, such mode must be pursued. 40 A.G. Op. 7 (1983).

Chapter Case Notes

Access to Public Service Records — Media Required to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Prior to Court Action — Review of Confidentiality Rules Ordered: Several media organizations sought access to power company documents filed with the Public Service Commission. The Commission denied the request on confidentiality grounds, but rather than challenging the confidentiality claims through the Commission's administrative procedures, the organizations filed an action in District Court. The court proceeded to make factual and legal determinations to determine whether the requested documents constituted constitutionally protected trade secrets or proprietary information without the benefit of the Commission developing a record or making threshold determinations on the complex issues. The Supreme Court held that it was improper to bypass the administrative agency and take the issue to District Court without exhausting the Commission's administrative procedures, so the District Court was reversed with orders to remand the case to the Commission for further consideration. However, the Supreme Court also required the Commission to review its administrative rules related to confidentiality challenges because the rules primarily addressed requests for information from competitor utilities and did not necessarily apply to media challenges. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

No Constitutional Right to Privacy for Nonhuman Entities — Protection of Trade Secrets Under Other Constitutional and Statutory Schemes: Montana's constitutional individual privacy exception to the public's right to know is limited to natural human individuals only and does not apply to nonhuman entities such as corporations. However, nothing in Art. II, sec. 9, Mont. Const., requires disclosure of trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information when that data is protected from disclosure elsewhere in the state or federal constitution or by statute. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003), overruling Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 277, 634 P2d 181 (1981), and its progeny to the extent that those decisions relied on the constitutional balancing test of the right to individual privacy against the public's right to examine documents or observe governmental deliberations as a basis of protecting trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information of nonhuman entities.

Public Service Commission Rules Creating Impermissible Presumption of Confidentiality in Trade Secrets: Several media organizations sought access to power company documents filed with the Public Service Commission. Applying its administrative rules, the Commission evaluated the power company's claims of confidentiality against basic trade secret law, found that the company had met the initial burden of establishing trade secrets, and concluded that because the media had presented no evidence or argument to the contrary, the company information was entitled to constitutional protection as a matter of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. To the extent that the Commission's rules relied on mere company representations that the information contained trade secrets, the Commission unconstitutionally shifted the initial burden of proof to the public to challenge the confidentiality claims, creating a presumption of confidentiality that directly conflicted with the public's right to view public records and the Commission's duty to make its records available to the public. The court held that a nonhuman entity seeking protective measures for alleged confidential materials filed with a governmental regulating agency must support its claim with a supporting affidavit making a prima facie showing that the materials constitute property rights that are protected by due process. Further, the showing must be more than conclusory and specific enough for the Commission, any objecting parties, and reviewing authorities to clearly understand the nature and basis of the confidentiality claim. The agency then must review the materials at the time of filing, in accordance with 30-14-402(4)(b) and supporting case law, and make an independent determination whether the materials are in fact property rights entitled to due process protection. To the extent that Commission rules required less, the court directed revision of Commission rules to comport with this holding. Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

Erroneous Determination That Public Service Commission Interpretation of Electric Utility Deregulation Act Unconstitutional Taking — Issue Not Ripe for Adjudication Given Speculation Regarding Utility's Future Loss: As part of the deregulation process, the Montana Power Company (MPC) submitted a transition cost recovery plan to the Public Service Commission (PSC). Foreseeing imminent uncertainty in the costs of electricity, MPC proposed that a current estimation of some transition costs be deferred, or tracked, for as long as 25 to 30 years, so that a more accurate figure of those costs could be determined in the future. Thus, with regard to certain assets, MPC in essence offered no estimation of any transition costs, proposing instead that those costs be determined and recovered at a later time. The PSC determined that a tracking system that would adjust transition costs in the future as the costs occurred, rather than reaching a current estimated fixed sum, was not consistent with Title 69, ch. 8, and that in order for the MPC plan to be approved, transition costs must be reduced to a fixed net amount. The PSC ordered MPC to amend its transition plan to specifically identify and demonstrate all transition costs that it sought to recover, and not to rely on a future tracking mechanism. MPC sought judicial review, arguing that the PSC improperly precluded the use of trackers in its plan, and requested that the District Court reverse the PSC's decision and permanently enjoin the PSC from enforcing its interpretation. The court reasoned that the PSC's interpretation had great potential for unconstitutionally depriving MPC or Montana consumers of property, and ordered the PSC to allow the tracking system. The PSC appealed. The Supreme Court found that MPC's claim to an unconstitutional taking at the hands of the PSC's ruling on the proposed tracking mechanism was as hypothetical and speculative as the future of electricity costs in Montana. The PSC action had yet to deprive MPC of any property, and the court refused to interpret the law and enjoin state action to preserve a property interest that did not, and might not ever, exist. The very likely potential of an unconstitutional taking was distinguishable from the imminent and very real violations of constitutional rights and remedies at risk in past cases in which the Supreme Court has held that a taking occurred, such as Yurkovich v. Indus. Accident Bd., 132 M 77, 314 P2d 866 (1957), and its progeny, holding that the District Court erred in finding that the PSC's interpretation produced a taking that prejudiced MPC's substantial rights. Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2001 MT 102, 305 M 260, 26 P3d 91 (2001).

Finality of Costs Considered Overarching Intent of Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act — PSC Denial of System That Would Allow Charging Future Transition Costs Correct Interpretation of Act: As part of the deregulation process pursuant to the Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act, the Montana Power Company (MPC) submitted a transition cost recovery plan to the Public Service Commission (PSC) that would have allowed the future recovery of certain transition costs as they became known over a period of 25 to 30 years. The PSC ordered MPC to amend its transition plan to specifically identify and demonstrate all transition costs that it sought to recover and not to rely on a future tracking mechanism. Upon judicial review, the District Court ordered the PSC to allow the tracking system. The Supreme Court was subsequently asked to determine whether the PSC interpretation of the Act was correct. The court held that MPC's proposed cost-tracking method, whereby some, but not all, transition costs would be unknown and therefore subject to the caprice of future events, was entirely inconsistent with the principle of finality and with statutory mandates in the Act placed on the PSC that all costs be determined to be: (1) verifiable; (2) unrecoverable; (3) affirmatively shown; (4) reasonably mitigated; (5) reasonably demonstrable; (6) reduced to a net sum; and (7) reduced to an amount in a final order. The principle of finality was also expressed in 69-8-211 (now repealed), which declared that PSC approval of transition costs, as well as the subsequent collection of those costs through transition charges, was a settlement of all transition costs claimed by a public utility. This finality was the overarching intent of the Act, in that the needs of consumers to effectively plan today takes precedence over precise cost analysis extending for years or even decades into the future. It is the PSC that assumes the role of arbiter in determining and fixing a utility's transition costs, if any, that will be discharged at the consumers' expense. Thus, the PSC's interpretation of the Act was correct, and the District Court's mandate requiring the PSC to allow the use of trackers would require the PSC to bend if not violate the law and could not be sustained. The District Court was reversed, and the PSC order was reinstated. Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2001 MT 102, 305 M 260, 26 P3d 91 (2001).

Case Notes

Finality of Costs Considered Overarching Intent of Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act — PSC Denial of System That Would Allow Charging Future Transition Costs Correct Interpretation of Act: As part of the deregulation process pursuant to the Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act, the Montana Power Company (MPC) submitted a transition cost recovery plan to the Public Service Commission (PSC) that would have allowed the future recovery of certain transition costs as they became known over a period of 25 to 30 years. The PSC ordered MPC to amend its transition plan to specifically identify and demonstrate all transition costs that it sought to recover and not to rely on a future tracking mechanism. Upon judicial review, the District Court ordered the PSC to allow the tracking system. The Supreme Court was subsequently asked to determine whether the PSC interpretation of the Act was correct. The court held that MPC's proposed cost-tracking method, whereby some, but not all, transition costs would be unknown and therefore subject to the caprice of future events, was entirely inconsistent with the principle of finality and with statutory mandates in the Act placed on the PSC that all costs be determined to be: (1) verifiable; (2) unrecoverable; (3) affirmatively shown; (4) reasonably mitigated; (5) reasonably demonstrable; (6) reduced to a net sum; and (7) reduced to an amount in a final order. The principle of finality was also expressed in 69-8-211 (now repealed), which declared that PSC approval of transition costs, as well as the subsequent collection of those costs through transition charges, was a settlement of all transition costs claimed by a public utility. This finality was the overarching intent of the Act, in that the needs of consumers to effectively plan today takes precedence over precise cost analysis extending for years or even decades into the future. It is the PSC that assumes the role of arbiter in determining and fixing a utility's transition costs, if any, that will be discharged at the consumers' expense. Thus, the PSC's interpretation of the Act was correct, and the District Court's mandate requiring the PSC to allow the use of trackers would require the PSC to bend if not violate the law and could not be sustained. The District Court was reversed, and the PSC order was reinstated. Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2001 MT 102, 305 M 260, 26 P3d 91 (2001).

Case Notes

Interpretation of Term "Customer": The term "customer", as used in this section, means an entity or person, rather than an individual meter. Great Falls v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2011 MT 144, 361 Mont. 69, 254 P.3d 595.

Erroneous Determination That Public Service Commission Interpretation of Electric Utility Deregulation Act Unconstitutional Taking — Issue Not Ripe for Adjudication Given Speculation Regarding Utility's Future Loss: As part of the deregulation process, the Montana Power Company (MPC) submitted a transition cost recovery plan to the Public Service Commission (PSC). Foreseeing imminent uncertainty in the costs of electricity, MPC proposed that a current estimation of some transition costs be deferred, or tracked, for as long as 25 to 30 years, so that a more accurate figure of those costs could be determined in the future. Thus, with regard to certain assets, MPC in essence offered no estimation of any transition costs, proposing instead that those costs be determined and recovered at a later time. The PSC determined that a tracking system that would adjust transition costs in the future as the costs occurred, rather than reaching a current estimated fixed sum, was not consistent with Title 69, ch. 8, and that in order for the MPC plan to be approved, transition costs must be reduced to a fixed net amount. The PSC ordered MPC to amend its transition plan to specifically identify and demonstrate all transition costs that it sought to recover, and not to rely on a future tracking mechanism. MPC sought judicial review, arguing that the PSC improperly precluded the use of trackers in its plan, and requested that the District Court reverse the PSC's decision and permanently enjoin the PSC from enforcing its interpretation. The court reasoned that the PSC's interpretation had great potential for unconstitutionally depriving MPC or Montana consumers of property, and ordered the PSC to allow the tracking system. The PSC appealed. The Supreme Court found that MPC's claim to an unconstitutional taking at the hands of the PSC's ruling on the proposed tracking mechanism was as hypothetical and speculative as the future of electricity costs in Montana. The PSC action had yet to deprive MPC of any property, and the court refused to interpret the law and enjoin state action to preserve a property interest that did not, and might not ever, exist. The very likely potential of an unconstitutional taking was distinguishable from the imminent and very real violations of constitutional rights and remedies at risk in past cases in which the Supreme Court has held that a taking occurred, such as Yurkovich v. Indus. Accident Bd., 132 M 77, 314 P2d 866 (1957), and its progeny, holding that the District Court erred in finding that the PSC's interpretation produced a taking that prejudiced MPC's substantial rights. Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2001 MT 102, 305 M 260, 26 P3d 91 (2001).

(4) The commission shall establish just and reasonable rates through established ratemaking principles for public utility default supply, distribution, and transmission services and shall regulate these services. The commission may approve rates and charges for those services based on alternative forms of ratemaking such as performance-based ratemaking, on a demonstration by the public utility that the alternative method complies with this chapter, and on the public utility's transition plan.

(5) The commission shall certify that a cooperative utility has adopted a transition plan that complies with this chapter. A cooperative utility's transition plan is considered certified 60 days after the cooperative utility files for certification.

(6) The commission shall promulgate rules that protect consumers, distribution services providers, and electricity suppliers from anticompetitive and abusive practices.

(7) (a) After July 1, 2010, the commission shall continuously monitor whether or not workable competition has developed for small customers.

(b) If the commission determines that workable competition has developed for small customers after July 1, 2010, the commission shall provide a report to the legislature that includes recommendations for legislative implementation of customer choice for small customers"; deleted former (9) that read: "(9) This chapter does not give the commission the authority to:

WHEREAS, the aggregation of residential and small commercial customers that do not have access to competitive electricity suppliers at equitable prices provides them with market power to secure electricity at the least cost; and

WHEREAS, allowing one or more default suppliers to aggregate residential and small commercial customers to purchase electricity maximizes economies of scale, increases administrative efficiency, and provides maximum benefits to all small electricity customers; and

WHEREAS, wholesale competition in electricity markets may be facilitated by allowing entities to compete for the opportunity to provide electricity supply to those residential and small commercial customers on an aggregated basis; and

WHEREAS, the formation of nonprofit electricity buying cooperatives enhances the chances of securing for small customers the greatest amount of electricity at the least cost from the federal power system; and

WHEREAS, the state of Montana desires that its residents have access to the benefits of competitive retail electricity markets and federal Power Marketing Administration electricity; and

WHEREAS, federal Power Marketing Administration power or benefits should be distributed as widely and equitably as possible among small customers of open-access public utilities in the state of Montana in a manner that promotes efficient development and operation of the competitive retail electricity markets; and

Finality of Costs Considered Overarching Intent of Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act — PSC Denial of System That Would Allow Charging Future Transition Costs Correct Interpretation of Act: As part of the deregulation process pursuant to the Electric Utility Industry Restructuring and Customer Choice Act, the Montana Power Company (MPC) submitted a transition cost recovery plan to the Public Service Commission (PSC) that would have allowed the future recovery of certain transition costs as they became known over a period of 25 to 30 years. The PSC ordered MPC to amend its transition plan to specifically identify and demonstrate all transition costs that it sought to recover and not to rely on a future tracking mechanism. Upon judicial review, the District Court ordered the PSC to allow the tracking system. The Supreme Court was subsequently asked to determine whether the PSC interpretation of the Act was correct. The court held that MPC's proposed cost-tracking method, whereby some, but not all, transition costs would be unknown and therefore subject to the caprice of future events, was entirely inconsistent with the principle of finality and with statutory mandates in the Act placed on the PSC that all costs be determined to be: (1) verifiable; (2) unrecoverable; (3) affirmatively shown; (4) reasonably mitigated; (5) reasonably demonstrable; (6) reduced to a net sum; and (7) reduced to an amount in a final order. The principle of finality was also expressed in 69-8-211 (now repealed), which declared that PSC approval of transition costs, as well as the subsequent collection of those costs through transition charges, was a settlement of all transition costs claimed by a public utility. This finality was the overarching intent of the Act, in that the needs of consumers to effectively plan today takes precedence over precise cost analysis extending for years or even decades into the future. It is the PSC that assumes the role of arbiter in determining and fixing a utility's transition costs, if any, that will be discharged at the consumers' expense. Thus, the PSC's interpretation of the Act was correct, and the District Court's mandate requiring the PSC to allow the use of trackers would require the PSC to bend if not violate the law and could not be sustained. The District Court was reversed, and the PSC order was reinstated. Mont. Power Co. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2001 MT 102, 305 M 260, 26 P3d 91 (2001).

Case Notes

Apportionment of Loss: When a special contract limits the liability of the carrier by excluding acts of God, and it is found that damage to sheep shipped resulted from a concurrence of rainy weather and the negligent care or inspection of the carrier, there must be a finding of what portion of the loss was attributable to the latter cause because liability cannot be predicated upon the rain. Great N. Ry. v. Melton, 193 F2d 729 (9th Cir. 1951).

Consideration: There need not be special consideration for the special contract. There is consideration when a company agrees for $600 to haul the freight on the terms stated, which include the special contract. Great N. Ry. v. Melton, 193 F2d 729 (9th Cir. 1951).

Degrees of Negligence: Under the law of this state a difference in degrees of negligence is recognized. Liston v. Reynolds, 69 M 480, 223 P 507 (1923).

Oral Negotiations Merged in Contract: Prior oral negotiations and directions about points at which livestock should be stopped for resting and feeding were merged in the contract of shipment when it and the waybills bore notations stating the points at which stops were to be made. Therefore, parol testimony of directions to make other stops was incompetent as an attempt to vary the terms of the written contract. Cook v. N. Pac. Ry., 61 M 573, 203 P 512 (1921).

Construction of Statute: This section gives to the carrier the right, by special contract, to provide against liability in all cases except when it arises from his gross negligence, fraud, or willful wrong. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910); Nelson v. Great N. Ry., 28 M 297, 72 P 642 (1903). See also Rose v. N. Pac. Ry., 35 M 70, 88 P 767 (1907).

Loss of Baggage: A contract made by a railway company with a passenger in the sale of a ticket, which among other recitals contained the provision that, in view of the reduced rate at which it was furnished, the carrier's liability for loss of baggage should be limited to $100, was not void as against public policy. Rose v. N. Pac. Ry., 35 M 70, 88 P 767 (1907).

Delay in Transportation: A common carrier cannot by special contract limit its liability for delay in the transportation of property arising from its negligence or from the negligence of its servants. Nelson v. Great N. Ry., 28 M 297, 72 P 642 (1903).

Degrees of Negligence: Under the law of this state a difference in degrees of negligence is recognized. Liston v. Reynolds, 69 M 480, 223 P 507 (1923).

Free Passenger: One riding on a railway pass is not a passenger for reward, but a free passenger. The company is a carrier without reward and is answerable to the passenger for ordinary negligence, without considering any exemption conditions of the pass. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910).

Passenger Carried Without Reward: A carrier owed a higher degree of diligence to one carried for a reward than to one carried without a reward and was only bound to exercise ordinary care for the safety of a passenger carried without reward. The injury of such a passenger by the happening of an accident only showed ordinary negligence by the carrier and not gross negligence. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910).

Case Notes

Scant Record of Conviction on Driving Charges Sufficient to Establish Negligence: Plaintiff argued that the issuance of citations and defendant's admission that she was found guilty of driving charges related to the collision established a breach of duty imposed by this section and negligence as a matter of law. The Supreme Court found insufficient evidence in the record regarding the citations, actual charges, and subsequent legal proceedings to warrant reversal of the trial court's denial of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on this point. Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992).

Common Carrier's Duty of Care to Embarking Passengers: When an airline passenger was injured while boarding defendant airline company's airplane and the airline company in turn sued the defendant city that owned the airport, the airline company, as a common carrier, owed a higher duty of care to the passenger than did the city. Rogers v. W. Airlines, 184 M 170, 602 P2d 171, 36 St. Rep. 1974 (1979).

Application of Statute:

While a carrier is not an insurer of a passenger's safety, its duty toward a passenger is spelled out in this section. Risken v. N. Pac. Ry., 137 M 57, 350 P2d 831 (1960).

Although this statute imposes upon the carrier the duty to exercise "the highest degree of care", it is but declaratory of the common law and does not constitute the carrier an insurer of the passenger's safety. Wilson v. Northland Greyhound Lines, Inc., 166 F. Supp. 667 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Degree of Negligence:

Under the law of this state a difference in degrees of negligence is recognized. Liston v. Reynolds, 69 M 480, 223 P 507 (1923).

As between the owner or manager of exhibitions and places of amusement and the carrier of a passenger for hire, the same measure of duty is not demanded. Only ordinary care, as in the gratuitous carriage of persons, under 69-11-106, is required of the former, while the utmost care is required of the latter. Phillips v. Butte Jockey Club & Fair Ass'n, 46 M 338, 127 P 1011 (1912).

Ordinary care is the measure of duty which the law imposes upon the owners and managers of exhibitions and places of amusement to prevent injury to patrons who have paid for the privileges accorded to them. Thus, the owner of the grandstand at a racecourse is not answerable for an injury to a patron, caused by the latter's tripping on a nail and falling on a broken board while he was descending the stairway, when the owner did not have notice, either actual or implied, of such defects. Phillips v. Butte Jockey Club & Fair Ass'n, 46 M 338, 127 P 1011 (1912).

Carrier Not Insurer: This section, imposing upon the carrier the duty to exercise toward a passenger for hire the highest degree of care, does not constitute the carrier an insurer of the passenger's safety. Heck v. N. Pac. Ry., 59 M 106, 196 P 521 (1921).

Declaratory of Common Law: This section is declaratory of the common law. Taillon v. Mears, 29 M 161, 74 P 421 (1903).

Application of Section:

This section does not apply if a personal delivery is claimed. If a personal delivery is not claimed and this section does apply, its effect is not to relieve from all liability but to change the liability from that of carrier to that of warehouseman. Gary Bros. & Gaffke Co. v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 49 M 524, 143 P 955 (1914).

This section is not meant for cases of actual, manual delivery because these need no aid from statute or custom but is meant for those cases in which, by following custom, a delivery may be accomplished short of the actual, manual transfer of the goods. Gary Bros. & Gaffke Co. v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 49 M 524, 143 P 955 (1914).

Construction of Section: This section does not define the acts which may constitute delivery in the absence of custom. Gary Bros. & Gaffke Co. v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 49 M 524, 143 P 955 (1914).

MOTOR CARRIERS

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Interim Study: HJR 27 and HJR 33 (1981) requested an interim study of transportation in Montana. The Legislative Council designated the Joint Subcommittee on Transportation to conduct the study.

Chapter Case Notes

Constitutionality:

The trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to dismiss when his complaint alleged that certain portions of this law violated the Montana and United States Constitutions, because a summary procedure should not be used in cases involving important public issues when any fact is in dispute unless the trial judge is satisfied that the evidence is sufficient to give him the necessary background of knowledge. Garrett Freightlines, Inc. v. Mont. R.R. & P.S.C., 153 M 380, 457 P2d 469 (1969).

The provisions of the motor carrier law are not invalid for failure to specify any method by which gross operating revenue of carrier in state could be determined or for failure to make distinction between large and small vehicles or heavy or light loads or number of miles traveled over state highways. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Aero Mayflower Transit Co., 119 M 118, 172 P2d 452 (1946), affirmed in Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 332 US 495, 92 L Ed 99, 68 S Ct 167 (1947).

The title of an act regulating motor carriers, stating that it provided for enforcement of the act and punishment for violation of the act, sufficiently gave notice of venue provision in the act. The state constitution requirements that a bill's subject be clearly expressed in its title and that local and special laws must not be passed on certain subjects are not violated. Great N. Ry. v. Hatch, 98 M 269, 38 P2d 976 (1934).

The motor carrier law is not violative of the 1889 Montana Constitution, nor is it rendered unconstitutional as special legislation. St. v. Healow, 98 M 177, 38 P2d 285 (1934).

The motor carrier law, regulating the use of state highways by motor carriers for hire, is a valid enactment, contrary to the contentions of a private contract carrier that by requiring him to obtain from the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now Public Service Commission) a certificate of public convenience and necessity, the act is invalid, denying him the right to contract and offending the Equal Protection of the Law and the Due Process of the Law Clauses of the Montana Constitution. Fulmer v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 96 M 22, 28 P2d 849 (1934); Barney v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 93 M 115, 17 P2d 82 (1923).

Application: The motor carrier law was intended to apply to all intrastate and interstate motor carriers operating over state highways. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Aero Mayflower Transit Co., 119 M 118, 172 P2d 452 (1946), affirmed in Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 332 US 495, 92 L Ed 99, 68 S Ct 167 (1947).

Evasion of Regulatory Act: When there is an attempt to evade the regulation of motor transportation and requirement of obtaining certificates of public convenience provided in this chapter through the formation of a corporation or association, courts will go behind the form of subterfuge or scheme to the substance. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Reed, 102 M 382, 58 P2d 271 (1936).

Regulations Held Reasonable: The use of the public highways is special and extraordinary and generally may be regulated by the state, and regulation by means of certificates of public convenience is reasonably devised to protect the public from abusive use of roads and evils incident to unregulated competition. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Reed, 102 M 382, 58 P2d 271 (1936).

Persons Required to Procure Certificate:

The provisions of the motor carrier law relating to the persons who must procure certificates of convenience and necessity before they may operate a motor vehicle for hire are broad enough to include the driver thereof, employed by its owner to operate it (whether such owner be an individual or corporation). Therefore, in a prosecution against an owner and driver, a contention that a penalty for a violation of the act could not be imposed upon the latter may not be sustained. St. v. Healow, 98 M 177, 38 P2d 285 (1934).

As a means of protecting its highways from abusive use and the public from the evils incident to unregulated competition, the state has the power to require both common and private motor carriers for hire to obtain from the Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) certificates of public convenience and necessity as a condition precedent to the right to conduct such business. Barney v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 93 M 115, 17 P2d 82 (1932).

Grounds for Denying Certificate: Under this chapter, making it incumbent upon the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now Public Service Commission) in passing on an application for a certificate to operate motor vehicles for hire to give "reasonable consideration" to existing transportation facilities, including railroads, the general rule is that the certificate should be denied unless the service furnished is inadequate or additional service would benefit the general public, or unless the existing carrier has been afforded an opportunity to furnish such additional service as may be required. Fulmer v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 96 M 22, 28 P2d 849 (1934).

Discretion of Board in Granting Certificate: The requirement of this chapter that one desiring to operate a motor vehicle for hire must secure a certificate of convenience and necessity carried with it a discretion on the part of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now Public Service Commission) to refuse it if in its judgment it is unwise to grant it. The contention that it has no power to deny it to one qualified and capable to furnish adequate service is without merit. Fulmer v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 96 M 22, 28 P2d 849 (1934).

Highways as Belonging to People: The state highways belong to the people for use in the ordinary way. Their use for the purpose of gain is special and extraordinary, which the state may prohibit altogether or permit on such conditions as it may consider proper to impose. Barney v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 93 M 115, 17 P2d 82 (1932).

Purpose of Statute: In the construction of the motor carrier law, the purpose of which is the supervision, regulation, and control of the state highways by motor carriers for hire, a matter of legislative discretion, all existing statutes relating to their use must be taken into consideration. Barney v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 93 M 115, 17 P2d 82 (1932).

Title 38, chapter 3, subchapter 10, ARM Transportation incidental to principal business.

Case Notes

Transportation Activities Incidental to Principal Business Not Subject to Motor Carrier Regulation: Grouse Mountain Associates, Ltd. (Grouse Mountain), provides guest transportation between its resort facility and The Big Mountain Ski Resort, the local airport, and the railway station at no cost and, for a nominal fee, to downtown Whitefish. The transportation service is not advertised or offered to the general public. A rival Whitefish business filed a complaint alleging that Grouse Mountain's guest transportation was subject to Public Service Commission motor carrier regulation. The District Court properly determined that Grouse Mountain's transportation services do not meet the definition of motor carrier because the service is accommodative only, is merely incidental to Grouse Mountain's principal business, and thus is not subject to motor carrier regulation. Grouse Mtn. Associates, Ltd. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 284 M 65, 943 P2d 971, 54 St. Rep. 750 (1997).

Definition of Motor Vehicle as Resulting in an Undue Burden on Interstate Commerce: Definition of motor vehicles (prior to 1979 amendment correcting the problem) as including a trailer, semitrailer, or dolly and requirement for a $5 fee on each motor vehicle constituted an undue burden on interstate commerce when Interstate Commerce Commission regulations provided for a maximum registration fee of $5 and the Interstate Commerce Commission definition of a motor vehicle was limited to the mechanical drive unit, not to whatever was being pulled by that power unit, because federal statute and regulations promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission were controlling over contrary provisions of state law. State ex rel. Sammons Trucking, Inc. v. Bollinger, 169 M 88, 544 P2d 1235 (1976).

"Motor Carrier" for Hire: A person who transports merely himself or his own property by means of a motor vehicle is not a "motor carrier" for hire even though he may be compensated directly or indirectly, within the meaning of this chapter, so far as it requires a certificate of public convenience and necessity. One who engages in the transportation of goods for another as an independent calling, under contract and for compensation, is such a carrier. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Gamble-Robinson Co., 111 M 441, 111 P2d 306 (1941).

Meaning of "For Hire": Several city mercantile establishments entered into a contract of purchase of a truck, agreeing to pay the seller $1,000, payable $100 down and $75 per month for 12 months. The truck was to be used for transporting merchandise bought or sold, and the purchasers assumed the expense of upkeep and operation as a certain ratio as between themselves based on the weight of merchandise carried for each per mile. The seller was employed as transportation manager at $6 per day and was to receive a bonus for good service. Neither the purchasers nor the seller, their employee, were carriers for hire and therefore were not required to secure a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) to entitle them to the use of state highways in the transportation of such merchandise. Christie Storage & Transfer Co. v. Hatch, 95 M 601, 28 P2d 470 (1934), distinguished in Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Reed, 102 M 382, 58 P2d 271 (1936).

Coordination Instruction: Section 18, Ch. 283, L. 1995, provided: "If Senate Bill No. 378 [LC 981] is passed and approved and if it includes a section that repeals 69-12-102, then [section 15 of this act], amending 69-12-102, is void." Senate Bill No. 378 amended rather than repealed 69-12-102; therefore, the amendment to 69-12-102 in sec. 15, Ch. 283, L. 1995, was effective as approved.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 364 in (1)(a), after "consisting of agricultural commodities", deleted "other than logs"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 322 inserted (1)(o) exempting the transportation of handicapped or elderly persons provided by private, nonprofit organizations; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 481 in (1)(a), after "commodities", inserted "other than logs"; and made minor change in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1992.

1985 Amendment: Inserted (1)(n) providing that state law on motor carriers does not affect the transportation of a commodity under an agreement between a motor carrier and federal office or agency.

Code Commissioner Correction: In (1) the Code Commissioner has deleted "Except as provided in 69-12-201(1)(f), (1)(g), and (2)" because subsections were deleted by sec. 1, Ch. 686, L. 1985.

1983 Amendments: Chapter 27 inserted (1)(j) providing that except for safety standards, state motor carrier laws do not affect transportation by motor vehicle of not more than 15 passengers between residences or termini near residences and places of employment in single daily round trip if driver is enroute to or from place of employment.

Chapter 75 inserted (1)(k) providing that except for safety standards, state motor carrier laws do not affect transportation of property by motor carrier as part of continuous movement if property, prior or subsequent to continuous movement, has been or will be air transported.

Chapter 160 inserted (1)(l) providing that except for safety regulations, state motor carrier laws do not affect the operation of urban transportation districts or municipal bus service.

Chapter 584 inserted (1)(m) providing that except for safety regulations, state motor carrier laws do not affect the operation of armored motor vehicles used exclusively for transportation of certain precious metals, stones, paintings, and other items of unusual value requiring special handling and security.

1981 Amendment: Added "Except as provided in 69-12-201(1)(f)" at the beginning of (1).

Responsibility for Primary Insurance Coverage: The federal statutes and regulations do not automatically impose responsibility for primary insurance coverage on the insurer of the I.C.C. carrier as a matter of law. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Transport Indem. Co., 180 M 419, 591 P2d 188 (1979).

The transportation service is not advertised or offered to the general public. A rival Whitefish business filed a complaint alleging that Grouse Mountain's guest transportation was subject to Public Service Commission motor carrier regulation. The District Court properly determined that Grouse Mountain's transportation services do not meet the definition of motor carrier because the service is accommodative only, is merely incidental to Grouse Mountain's principal business, and thus is not subject to motor carrier regulation. Transportation of Merchandise by Mercantile Establishments: Several city mercantile establishments entered into a contract of purchase of a truck, agreeing to pay the seller $1,000, payable $100 down and $75 per month for 12 months. The truck was to be used for transporting merchandise bought or sold, and the purchasers assumed the expense of upkeep and operation as a certain ratio as between themselves based on the weight of merchandise carried for each per mile. The seller was employed as transportation manager at $6 per day and was to receive a bonus for good service. Neither the purchasers nor the seller, their employee, were carriers for hire and therefore were not required to secure a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) to entitle them to the use of state highways in the transportation of such merchandise. No Authority to Revoke Compliant Certificate Based on Public Service Commission and Prior Certificate Holder Misconduct — Penalty Statutes Not Self-Executing: The Public Service Commission (PSC) authorized the purchase and transfer of a solid waste transportation certificate that had been purchased and transferred on three prior occasions with PSC approval. Plaintiffs contended that the first three owners had failed to comply with applicable rules and that the PSC failed to enforce the rules and that as a result of these violations, the certificate was invalid when it was transferred to the current owner and should be revoked. The PSC determined that the certificate was valid, the District Court affirmed, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that the penalty statutes applicable to revocation of a certificate are not self-executing, in that revocation of a certificate requires PSC action to implement the penalties, so a court may not revoke a compliant certificate holder's certificate based on misconduct. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint presented a nonjusticiable moot issue, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's decision. Mont. Solid Waste Contractors, Inc. v. Part 2

Role of Commission

69-12-201. Supervision and regulation of motor carriers.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 364 deleted (4) allowing Commission to determine rates for Class E motor carriers operating under contract when rates are required for best interests of public transportation; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (4) allowing Commission to set rates of operations of Class E motor carriers; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 20, 1991.

1985 Amendment: In (1)(c) substituted "regulate the properties, facilities, operations, accounts, service, practices, and affairs of all motor carriers" for "regulate the properties, facilities, operations, accounts, service, practices, affairs, and safety of operations of all motor carriers, each of which is considered to consent impliedly to reasonable safety inspections of its motor vehicles utilized in furtherance of its business as a motor carrier"; and deleted former (1)(f), (1)(g), and (2) that read: "(f) provide standards for the safe operation of all motor vehicles used in commerce that exceed 26,000 pounds gross vehicle weight, except farm vehicles; and

(g) provide standards for the safe operation of vehicles of less than 26,000 pounds gross vehicle weight if they are:

(i) being used to transport passengers for hire; or

(ii) being used to transport hazardous materials of a type or quantity that requires the vehicle to be marked or placarded in accordance with rules adopted by the commission.

(2) Such standards of safety shall be the same as prescribed for motor carriers, and the same inspection standards and procedures shall apply. However, standards relating to drivers, other than drivers for motor carriers, do not apply to a vehicle operated exclusively within a 200-mile radius of its work reporting location".

1981 Amendments: Chapter 226 added the last clause in (1)(c) after "all motor carriers" relating to implied consent for safety inspections.

Chapter 227 inserted (1)(f), (1)(g), and (2) (see 1985 amendment note for text).

Code Commissioner Changes: The Code Commissioner added "provide standards for the safe operation of" at the beginning of (1)(g) and divided the material inserted by Ch. 227 into three subsections, (1)(f), (1)(g), and (2), for clarification and renumbered former subsections (2) and (3) as (3) and (4).

1981 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 749 (Ch. 227, L. 1981) provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants the Public Service Commission the authority to provide safety standards for motor vehicles used in commerce.

All interstate motor carriers, interstate private carriers, and carriers hauling unregulated commodities in interstate commerce must now meet equipment safety requirements and inspections as established by the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations of the Department of Transportation. In addition, regulated intrastate motor carriers must also meet the same safety standards.

The Legislature intends to include large over-the-road trucks, in excess of 26,000 pounds GVW, used in commerce operating on Montana's highways to adhere to safety equipment standards. It is the intent of the Legislature to establish by regulation uniform safety standards and a safety inspection program that will focus on mechanical factors most often blamed for accidents involving trucks, passenger carriers, and hazardous material transporters. Included would be detailed inspections of brakes, steering components, tires, and driver logs where required.

It is intended that rules promulgated by PSC incorporate the "Critical Item Truck Inspection" program and that the rules include a procedure for conducting the inspection program as well as providing for a vehicle identification program acknowledging the inspection. The rules shall provide that safety infractions posing no imminent threat to public safety shall not result in an "out of service" order. Such a vehicle shall be allowed to proceed to obtain repairs before final inspection and issuance of inspection acknowledgment. It is recognized that repairing or parking large over-the-road trucks on the roadway is extremely dangerous." (Annotator's Note: Chapter 686, L. 1985, transferred authority for setting motor carrier and motor vehicle safety standards from the Public Service Commission to the Department of Justice.)

1979 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 473 (Ch. 387, L. 1979) provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it creates the necessity for the adoption of additional rules under the rulemaking authority granted by 69-12-201 to carry out the amendments to 69-12-314 and 69-12-407.

It is the intent of the legislature that the Public Service Commission has the authority to make rules defining what activities will be necessary to constitute the transportation of material allowed under a Class D motor carrier certificate "on a regular basis as part of the motor carrier's usual business operation." Thus the Public Service Commission may by rule establish the criteria by which "regular basis" is measured and may make rules describing how "part of the motor carrier's usual business operation" is to be interpreted in implementing the amendment to 69-12-314.

To implement the amendments to 69-12-407 regarding records and reports by Class D motor carriers, the Public Service Commission may amend the present rules governing the reports and records of Class A and Class B motor carriers to include Class D motor carriers. In addition, the Public Service Commission may by rule determine what will be "sufficient information" to show that a motor carrier is entitled to a Class D certificate and how the information is to be provided by the Class D motor certificate holder."

Case Notes

Standard of Review of Public Service Commission Conclusion of Law: The standard of review applicable to a Public Service Commission's conclusion of law is whether the Public Service Commission correctly interpreted the law in reaching the conclusion. Grouse Mtn. Associates, Ltd. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 284 M 65, 943 P2d 971, 54 St. Rep. 750 (1997).

Waiver of Condition of Public Service Commission Approval of Certificate Transfer: Rite-Line Transportation Services, Inc. (Rite-Line), owned Certificate No. 1136 that authorized it to operate certain routes in Montana. Molerway Freight Lines, Inc. (Molerway), sought to obtain the certificate and entered into a buy-sell agreement expressly conditioned on Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) approval of the transfer. After tendering a $30,000 downpayment, Molerway made two monthly installment payments. The P.S.C. approved the lease of the certificate but indicated that portions of the certificate that were duplicative of other routes already covered in Molerway's other certificates would be canceled. Both parties feared that the cancellation of duplicate authorities would jeopardize the buy-sell agreement. Both Rite-Line and Molerway requested that the cancellation of duplicate authorities be delayed until the buy-sell agreement was fulfilled. Although the P.S.C. granted the parties' request, Molerway objected, stopped payment on its monthly installment, and sought to rescind the contract and get back its downpayment, which Rite-Line resisted. In enforcing the contract, the District Court properly concluded that even if the P.S.C.'s cancellation of the duplicate authorities constituted denial of the transfer, Molerway's conduct manifested a voluntary and intentional relinquishment of its right to rely on the condition precedent of P.S.C. approval in order to void the contract. Molerway Freight Lines, Inc. v. Rite-Line Transp. Serv., Inc., 273 M 95, 902 P2d 9, 52 St. Rep. 839 (1995).

Automatic Approval of Tariff Revisions: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.), in refusing to approve and give effect to relator's proposed tariff schedules, failed to perform a clear legal duty arising under the motor carrier law. Since the P.S.C. did not hold a hearing within 180 days of suspension of relator's tariff, the tariff revisions were considered approved and effective as filed. State ex rel. Chem. Transp. v. Bollinger, 173 M 535, 568 P2d 172 (1977).

Terms and Conditions on Certificate: Under this section and 69-12-323, the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) is authorized and has a duty to supervise every motor carrier in the state and may, in its discretion upon issuance of any certificate, attach such terms and conditions as in its judgment may be required. Walter v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 153 M 384, 457 P2d 479 (1969). (Annotator's Note: Chapter 686, L. 1985, transferred authority for setting motor carrier and motor vehicle safety standards from the Public Service Commission to the Department of Justice.)

Discretionary Appointment: A taxpaying citizen was not entitled to an injunction in an action questioning the qualifications of a supervisor appointed by the Board of Railway Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) in the proper exercise of its discretion. Steel v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 144 M 432, 397 P2d 101 (1964).

2011 Amendment: Chapter 4 deleted former (1) and (2) that read: "(1) The commission shall appoint a supervisor of motor carriers who has general responsibility to the commission for enforcement of the provisions of this chapter. The supervisor must be either an attorney admitted to practice law in Montana or a person qualified by at least 5 years of suitable experience and training in appropriate phases of the motor carrier industry. The supervisor shall serve at the pleasure of the commission and at an annual salary to be set by the commission.

(2) The supervisor shall direct all enforcement activities on behalf of the commission, including the investigation and prosecution of violations of this chapter or the rules or orders prescribed under this chapter by the commission"; at beginning of section substituted "The commission may employ field inspectors to investigate and enforce the provisions of this chapter. Field inspectors employed by the commission are peace officers" for "The supervisor and whatever field inspectors may be employed by the commission to assist the supervisor are considered peace officers"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2011.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1985 Amendment: In (3) near middle of second sentence, after "motor vehicles" deleted "make reasonable safety inspections of commercial motor vehicles utilized by motor carriers".

1981 Amendment: Inserted "make reasonable safety inspections of commercial motor vehicles utilized by motor carriers" after "make reasonable inspections of cargoes carried by commercial motor vehicles" in (3).

Enjoining Use of Highways: This section must be construed with 69-14-134. The former, being a later enactment, modifies the latter so that the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) could maintain an action to enjoin a motor carrier from operating motor vehicles over state highways until the motor carrier complied with provisions of the motor carrier law. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Aero Mayflower Transit Co., 119 M 118, 172 P2d 452 (1946), affirmed in Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 332 US 495, 92 L Ed 99, 68 S Ct 167 (1947).

Change of Venue: Though, generally speaking, all equitable suits (injunction, inter alia) are properly triable, under 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118 by Code Commissioner, 1985), in the county in which defendants, or any of them, reside, this section specifically provides that a party injured by the illegal operation of a motor vehicle for hire may by Writ of Injunction seek enforcement of the act in any county in which the motor carrier is engaged in business. Hence, when injunctive relief was sought against such a carrier in a county and the defendant was doing business between the county seat of that county and the county seat of his home county, the court erred in granting a change of venue to his home county. 1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 156, L. 1993, provided: "In determining whether a motor carrier should be granted a certificate of operating authority, a threshold question to be answered by the public service commission is whether the carrier is fit, willing, and able to provide the proposed service, otherwise referred to as an inquiry into carrier fitness. [Section 1] [69-12-415] is intended to clarify the public service commission's authority in this regard by codifying the carrier fitness requirement. Although 69-12-201 and 69-12-203 provide the commission with supervisory, regulatory, and enforcement authority over motor carriers, its authority to investigate and hear complaints concerning violations of Title 69, chapter 12, is not clearly defined. [Section 2] [69-12-210] is intended to clarify this authority."

No Authority to Revoke Compliant Certificate Based on Public Service Commission and Prior Certificate Holder Misconduct — Penalty Statutes Not Self-Executing: The Public Service Commission (PSC) authorized the purchase and transfer of a solid waste transportation certificate that had been purchased and transferred on three prior occasions with PSC approval. Plaintiffs contended that the first three owners had failed to comply with applicable rules and that the PSC failed to enforce the rules and that as a result of these violations, the certificate was invalid when it was transferred to the current owner and should be revoked. The PSC determined that the certificate was valid, the District Court affirmed, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that the penalty statutes applicable to revocation of a certificate are not self-executing, in that revocation of a certificate requires PSC action to implement the penalties, so a court may not revoke a compliant certificate holder's certificate based on misconduct. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint presented a nonjusticiable moot issue, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's decision. Mont. Solid Waste Contractors, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 154, 338 M 1, 161 P3d 837 (2007).

Part 3
Classification and Motor Carrier Certificates

Part Case Notes

Evasion of Regulatory Act: When there is an attempt to evade the regulation of motor transportation and requirement of obtaining certificates of public convenience provided in this chapter through the formation of a corporation or association, courts will go behind the form of subterfuge or scheme to the substance. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Reed, 102 M 382, 58 P2d 271 (1936).

Regulations Held Reasonable: The use of the public highways is special and extraordinary and generally may be regulated by the state, and regulation by means of certificates of public convenience is reasonably devised to protect the public from abusive use of roads and evils incident to unregulated competition. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Reed, 102 M 382, 58 P2d 271 (1936).

Discretion of Board in Granting Certificate: The requirement of this chapter that one desiring to operate a motor vehicle for hire must secure a certificate of convenience and necessity carried with it a discretion on the part of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now Public Service Commission) to refuse it if in its judgment it is unwise to grant it. The contention that it has no power to deny it to one qualified and capable to furnish adequate service is without merit. Fulmer v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 96 M 22, 28 P2d 849 (1934).

Grounds for Denying Certificate: Under this chapter, making it incumbent upon the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now Public Service Commission) in passing on an application for a certificate to operate motor vehicles for hire to give "reasonable consideration" to existing transportation facilities, including railroads, the general rule is that the certificate should be denied unless the service furnished is inadequate or additional service would benefit the general public or unless the existing carrier has been afforded an opportunity to furnish such additional service as may be required. Fulmer v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 96 M 22, 28 P2d 849 (1934).

Persons Required to Procure Certificate:

The provisions of the motor carrier law relating to the persons who must procure certificates of convenience and necessity before they may operate a motor vehicle for hire are broad enough to include the driver thereof, employed by its owner to operate it (whether such owner be an individual or corporation). Therefore, in a prosecution against an owner and driver, a contention that a penalty for a violation of the act could not be imposed upon the latter may not be sustained. St. v. Healow, 98 M 177, 38 P2d 285 (1934).

As a means of protecting its highways from abusive use and the public from the evils incident to unregulated competition, the state has the power to require both common and private motor carriers for hire to obtain from the Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) certificates of public convenience and necessity as a condition precedent to the right to conduct such business. Barney v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 93 M 115, 17 P2d 82 (1932).

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 358 in (4), after "motor carriers", deleted "operating motor vehicles for distributing, delivering, or collecting wares, merchandise, or commodities or transporting persons"; and in (5), at end, substituted "garbage" for "(including pickup and disposal) ashes, trash, waste, refuse, rubbish, garbage, organic and inorganic matter, and recyclables". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 364 near beginning of (1) reduced number of classes from five to four; deleted (1)(e) referring to Class E motor carriers; deleted (6) specifying Class E motor carriers as motor carriers transporting logs for remuneration fixed in and transportation furnished under a written contract or agreement; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 341 in (5) expanded Class D motor carrier classification to include transportation of recyclables.

Chapter 481 in (1) increased number of classes from four to five; inserted (1)(e) providing for Class E motor carriers; inserted (6) to include in Class E all motor carriers operating motor vehicles transporting logs under certain circumstances; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 20, 1991.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 341, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill in order to provide guidance to the public service commission in adopting rules. It is the intention of the legislature that a Class D motor carrier have the authority to collect and transport source-separated recyclables and that Class C motor carriers have the authority to transport recyclables."

Case Notes

Proper Notice of Violation and Opportunity for Discovery Required by Statute and Due Process — Remand to Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Wilsons, who operated a garbage transport business under a certificate granted by the Public Service Commission, were served by the P.S.C. with a complaint and order to show cause why their certificate should not be terminated. The complaint and order did not refer to any particular rule, statute, or previous order of the Commission that was alleged to have been violated. Later, after the Commission denied an opportunity for Wilsons to discover the evidence to be used against them, the District Court granted Wilsons' motion to amend their application for a review of the P.S.C. order to include immediate review under 2-4-701. The Supreme Court held that the notice used by the P.S.C. did not comply with the requirements of 69-12-327, in that the notice did not specify the rule, statute, or order alleged to have been violated, and held that basic procedural due process was not followed by the P.S.C. in their denial of the Wilsons' request for discovery. The Supreme Court also held that judicial review of the final agency decision was not an adequate remedy when the record on which the final decision of the agency will be based contained no evidence of the statute, rule, or order violated; when no discovery was allowed; when there was no evidence that Wilsons had been notified of who would testify against them; and when, cumulatively, it appeared that Wilsons had been denied fundamental fairness. Wilson v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 260 M 167, 858 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 985 (1993).

Compliance: Where holder of Class C motor carrier certificate, in response to statutory requirement authorizing only Class D carriers to haul garbage and providing for issuance of Class D certificate upon submission of business records showing that carrier had been hauling garbage for period of 1 year, made an inadequate submission of the information required by statute, District Court was not in error by voiding the certificate that had been issued. In re Application of Galt, 196 M 534, 644 P2d 1019, 39 St. Rep. 106 (1982).

Scope of Judicial Review: Where District Court nullified Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) motor carrier certificate and appellant contended under 2-4-702(1)(b) that validity had not been an issue in the administrative hearing and that court was therefore precluded from reviewing question of validity, Supreme Court held that record shows that issue of validity had been raised before the P.S.C. and therefore court did not exceed its scope of judicial review. Case Notes

Nonreceipt of Certificate as Affecting Pending Contracts: In an action by the plaintiff contractor against the defendant motor carrier for breach of contract caused by the defendant's refusal to haul fabricated silo sections at a previously agreed price, the trial court did not err in finding that the fact that the defendant did not receive written state approval of the transfer of a motor carrier's certificate until after the contract was agreed to did not affect the legality of the contract. Under the rules of the Public Service Commission, the transfer of the certificate was effective before the contract was made, and nothing in the law prevented the defendant from contracting pending issuance of the certificate. Also, the hauling was to be done after the date upon which the defendant received his certificate. Consequently, the defendant could have performed the hauling contract. Empire Steel Mfg. Co. v. Case Notes

No Authority to Revoke Compliant Certificate Based on Public Service Commission and Prior Certificate Holder Misconduct — Penalty Statutes Not Self-Executing: The Public Service Commission (PSC) authorized the purchase and transfer of a solid waste transportation certificate that had been purchased and transferred on three prior occasions with PSC approval. Plaintiffs contended that the first three owners had failed to comply with applicable rules and that the PSC failed to enforce the rules and that as a result of these violations, the certificate was invalid when it was transferred to the current owner and should be revoked. The PSC determined that the certificate was valid, the District Court affirmed, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that the penalty statutes applicable to revocation of a certificate are not self-executing, in that revocation of a certificate requires PSC action to implement the penalties, so a court may not revoke a compliant certificate holder's certificate based on misconduct. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint presented a nonjusticiable moot issue, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's decision. Mont. Solid Waste Contractors, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 154, 338 M 1, 161 P3d 837 (2007).

Criteria for Finding of Fitness of Motor Carrier Applicant: The Public Service Commission properly considered the following factors when evaluating whether a motor carrier applicant was fit, willing, and able to provide service: (1) the financial condition of the applicant; (2) the intention of the applicant to perform the service sought; (3) the adequacy of the equipment that the applicant has to perform the service; (4) the applicant's experience in conducting the service sought; and (5) the nature of previous operations, if there are allegations of illegal operations. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, Ltd. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 284 M 245, 944 P2d 210, 54 St. Rep. 866 (1997).

Discretion of Public Service Commission to Consider Competition as Factor in Determining Public Convenience and Necessity: The Public Service Commission (PSC) can properly consider competition as one additional factor in assessing public convenience and necessity when rendering a decision on an application for a motor carrier certificate. Inherent in the concept of competition is the notion that the new applicant may take away some business from an existing transport service, but this fact alone does not mandate denial of an application. Rather, the issue is whether under the facts of the case, competition would impose undue hardship and impair the existing transport's ability to provide service to an extent that would be contrary to public interest. The PSC may consider competition case by case in any particular order with other factors, such as whether: (1) the applicant is fit and able to perform the proposed service; (2) public convenience and necessity require authorization of the proposed service; (3) public need for the proposed service can and will be met by existing carriers; and (4) the proposed service would have an adverse impact on existing transportation services. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, Ltd. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 284 M 245, 944 P2d 210, 54 St. Rep. 866 (1997).

Reexamination of Circumstances Reserved by Public Service Commission — No Error in Failure to Explain Departure From Prior Decision: The Public Service Commission (PSC) denied a Class D application in 1984, finding that competition with Three Rivers Disposal Company (Three Rivers) at that time would be destructive. In 1994, the PSC reconsidered and granted a Class D certificate to the 1984 applicant, finding that competition would promote the public interest in improving service and, perhaps, rates. Three Rivers contended PSC error in its failure to follow its own precedent and to provide a reasoned explanation for its departure from that precedent. Citing Atchison Topeka & Santa Fe RR Co. v. Bd. of Trade, 412 US 800, 37 L Ed 2d 350, 93 S Ct 2367 (1973), the Supreme Court noted that an agency has a duty to either follow its own precedent or provide a reasoned analysis explaining its departure from precedent. However, in this case, there was no change in prior PSC policy and standards; only the facts changed. In the 1984 decision, the PSC placed Three Rivers on notice that the power was reserved by the PSC to reexamine the situation and to grant a new authority if circumstances changed. Therefore, the PSC did not depart from established precedent and its order certifying a new motor carrier was correctly affirmed. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, Ltd. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 284 M 245, 944 P2d 210, 54 St. Rep. 866 (1997).

Unwillingness of Present Carrier to Provide Adequate Service — Unmet Shipper Need: Whether an existing carrier is capable of providing adequate service means nothing if it is unwilling to provide adequate service. It was not error for the Public Service Commission, based on overwhelming evidence of substantial unmet shipper need and inadequate service by a certified carrier, to consider competition when assessing public need and convenience in granting a certificate to another carrier that could fill unmet consumer needs, improve service, and, perhaps, improve rates. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, Ltd. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 284 M 245, 944 P2d 210, 54 St. Rep. 866 (1997).

Entry Into Business, Not Rates, Controlled by Commission: Through the authority bestowed on it in Title 69, the Public Service Commission controls entry into the garbage-hauling business; however, the Commission does not regulate rates charged by Class D motor carriers and does not regulate the quality of service provided. The express authority to regulate entry is not concomitant with the implied requirements to regulate rates. Rozel Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 226 M 237, 735 P2d 282, 44 St. Rep. 618 (1987).

Adoption of Self-Government Charter — Doctrine of Implied Preemption: Appellant private garbage haulers contended that the Legislature preempted the field of garbage regulation and preempted municipalities from collecting garbage by enacting 7-2-4736. Prior to the 1972 Constitution, cities had only those powers expressly given to them by the Legislature, and if the Legislature considered a subject to be a matter of statewide concern, it could enact laws on the subject and preempt local governments from the field. However, Art. XI, sec. 6, Mont. Const., states that a local government which adopts a self-government charter may exercise any power not prohibited by the Constitution, law, or the charter. The city of Billings adopted a self-government charter in 1976, and 7-1-102 allows the city to provide services or perform any functions not expressly prohibited. The Supreme Court held in Tipco Corp., Inc. v. Billings, 197 M 339, 642 P2d 1074 (1982), that "the only way the doctrine of pre-emption by the state can co-exist with self-government powers of a municipality is if there is an express prohibition by statute which forbids local governments . . . from acting in a certain area. The doctrine of implied pre-emption, by definition, cannot apply to local governments with self-government powers". Powers specifically denied to local governments are enumerated in 7-1-111 and include the exercise of any power that prohibits the grant or denial of a certificate of public convenience and necessity. Under this section, private garbage haulers are required to get a certificate of public convenience and necessity prior to doing business. The decision by Billings voters that the city should provide garbage services in no way prohibits the grant or denial of a certificate of public necessity. The Supreme Court held that the city was simply exercising its self-government powers to provide a service for its residents and was taxing them for that service. D & F Sanitation Serv. v. Billings, 219 M 437, 713 P2d 977, 43 St. Rep. 74 (1986), overruling Billings v. Weatherwax, 193 M 163, 630 P2d 1216, 38 St. Rep. 1034 (1981).

Award of Contract Under Montana Procurement Act — No Preemption of Other Statutory Requirements: The plaintiff was awarded a state contract to haul goods for the school lunch program. The contract was contingent upon the plaintiff's obtaining a Class C certificate from the Public Service Commission by August 1, 1989. The Commission informed the plaintiff that a public hearing had to be held on issuing the certificate and that the earliest the hearing could be held was August 23, 1989. The plaintiff argued that the policy of the Montana Procurement Act to promote competition preempted this section, which operates to protect the existing carrier. The Supreme Court ruled that more specific statutes regulating carriers govern over the procurement statutes with respect to carriers. State ex rel. Roberts v. Pub. Ser. The Commission informed the plaintiff that a public hearing had to be held on issuing the certificate and that the earliest the hearing could be held was August 23, 1989. The plaintiff argued that the hearing requirement denied him equal treatment because Class C solid waste carriers were exempt from the hearing process. The Supreme Court held that there was a reasonable basis for excluding solid waste carriers because they were regulated by other state laws and agencies. State ex rel. Roberts v. Pub. Ser. The Commission informed the plaintiff that a public hearing had to be held on issuing the certificate and that the earliest the hearing could be held was August 23, 1989. The plaintiff sought declaratory relief that all Class C carriers who had a state or federal contract were exempt from the hearing requirement. The Supreme Court ruled that there was no blanket exemption and that the plaintiff was required to adhere to the hearing procedure. State ex rel. Roberts v. Pub. Serv. Waiver of Condition of Public Service Commission Approval of Certificate Transfer: Rite-Line Transportation Services, Inc. (Rite-Line), owned Certificate No. 1136 that authorized it to operate certain routes in Montana. Molerway Freight Lines, Inc. (Molerway), sought to obtain the certificate and entered into a buy-sell agreement expressly conditioned on Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) approval of the transfer. After tendering a $30,000 downpayment, Molerway made two monthly installment payments. The P.S.C. approved the lease of the certificate but indicated that portions of the certificate that were duplicative of other routes already covered in Molerway's other certificates would be canceled. Both parties feared that the cancellation of duplicate authorities would jeopardize the buy-sell agreement. Both Rite-Line and Molerway requested that the cancellation of duplicate authorities be delayed until the buy-sell agreement was fulfilled. Although the P.S.C. granted the parties' request, Molerway objected, stopped payment on its monthly installment, and sought to rescind the contract and get back its downpayment, which Rite-Line resisted. In enforcing the contract, the District Court properly concluded that even if the P.S.C.'s cancellation of the duplicate authorities constituted denial of the transfer, Molerway's conduct manifested a voluntary and intentional relinquishment of its right to rely on the condition precedent of P.S.C. approval in order to void the contract. Plaintiffs contended that the first three owners had failed to comply with applicable rules and that the PSC failed to enforce the rules and that as a result of these violations, the certificate was invalid when it was transferred to the current owner and should be revoked. The PSC determined that the certificate was valid, the District Court affirmed, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that the penalty statutes applicable to revocation of a certificate are not self-executing, in that revocation of a certificate requires PSC action to implement the penalties, so a court may not revoke a compliant certificate holder's certificate based on misconduct. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint presented a nonjusticiable moot issue, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's decision. Mont. Solid Waste Contractors, Inc. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2007 MT 154, 338 M 1, 161 P3d 837 (2007).

Proper Notice of Violation and Opportunity for Discovery Required by Statute and Due Process — Remand to Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Wilsons, who operated a garbage transport business under a certificate granted by the Public Service Commission, were served by the P.S.C. with a complaint and order to show cause why their certificate should not be terminated. The complaint and order did not refer to any particular rule, statute, or previous order of the Commission that was alleged to have been violated. Later, after the Commission denied an opportunity for Wilsons to discover the evidence to be used against them, the District Court granted Wilsons' motion to amend their application for a review of the P.S.C. order to include immediate review under 2-4-701. The Supreme Court held that the notice used by the P.S.C. did not comply with the requirements of this section, in that the notice did not specify the rule, statute, or order alleged to have been violated, and held that basic procedural due process was not followed by the P.S.C. in their denial of the Wilsons' request for discovery. The Supreme Court also held that judicial review of the final agency decision was not an adequate remedy when the record on which the final decision of the agency will be based contained no evidence of the statute, rule, or order violated; when no discovery was allowed; when there was no evidence that Wilsons had been notified of who would testify against them; and when, cumulatively, it appeared that Wilsons had been denied fundamental fairness. Wilson v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 260 M 167, 858 P2d 368, 50 St. Rep. 985 (1993).

Hearing Required: Cancellation of a person's certificate without giving him notice or an opportunity to appear or to show cause why it should not be canceled deprived such person of the right to operate as a motor carrier and was in violation of this section and Art. II, sec. 17, Mont. Const., by depriving him of a property right without due process of law. State ex rel. Daniels v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 131 M 9, 306 P2d 264 (1957).

Petition for Rehearing: Montana Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission), granting motor carrier's application for certificate of convenience and necessity and granting railroad carrier's application to discontinue rail passenger service, was held not shown to be without authority to grant rehearing, notwithstanding change in membership of Board, when petition for rehearing was filed before conditions in Board's order had been fulfilled. In a suit for injunctive relief, the equity rule dispensing with the necessity for a reply was held applicable, except as to allegations concerning petition for rehearing and what was done about it, in the absence of an agreement between counsel that allegations of answer were admitted. Definition of Motor Vehicle as Resulting in an Undue Burden on Interstate Commerce: Definition of motor vehicles (prior to 1979 amendment correcting the problem) as including a trailer, semitrailer, or dolly and requirement for a $5 fee (prior to the 1983 amendment authorizing the fee to be set by the Public Service Commission) on each motor vehicle constituted an undue burden on interstate commerce when Interstate Commerce Commission regulations provided for a maximum registration fee of $5 and the Interstate Commerce Commission definition of a motor vehicle was limited to the mechanical drive unit, not to whatever was being pulled by that power unit, because federal statute and regulations promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission were controlling over contrary provisions of state law. State ex rel. Sammons Trucking, Inc. v. Bollinger, 169 M 88, 544 P2d 1235 (1976).

Motor Carriers' Tax Held Unconstitutional: The Supreme Court held that the statute levying a tax on motor carriers for use of highways in the state was discriminatory and denied common carrier of general commodities uniformity of taxation, due process, and equal protection. Two factors were key in the decision. Motor vehicles used for carrying agricultural commodities, supplies and materials for construction and maintenance of highways, for logging and mining operations, and for transport of newspapers, newspaper supplements, periodicals and magazines, and business concerns which acquired their own vehicles and accomplished their own hauling were exempt from the tax. Secondly, the formula used to compute revenue payable under statute was based upon income-producing ability of vehicles in interstate commerce rather than upon the use of highways, and therefore constituted a tax on the privilege of doing business and placed burden on interstate commerce in violation of commerce clause. Garrett Freightlines v. Mont. R.R. & P.S.C., 161 M 482, 507 P2d 1040 (1973).

Fee Higher Than Allowed by Federal Law: The imposition of a $10 fee on motor vehicles engaged in interstate commerce conflicted with federal law and regulations thereunder. The state could impose a fee no greater than the $5 per vehicle permitted by federal regulations. State ex rel. Sammons Trucking, Inc. v. Boedecker, 158 M 397, 492 P2d 919 (1972), distinguishing Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 332 US 495, 92 L Ed 99, 68 S Ct 167 (1947).

PIPELINE CARRIERS

Chapter Case Notes

Fuel Storage Tank as Part of Pipeline — Construction in Agricultural-Open Zone Permitted: After careful and conscientious review by the zoning coordinator and planning department, a building permit for a 35,000-barrel diesel fuel tank on property zoned agricultural-open space was properly granted. The tank could be considered part of a pipeline, which is a permitted use within such a zone. The Supreme Court found that contentions of error in interpreting the county zoning plan, which disallowed liquid fuel storage in a tank no matter how temporary or in what context in any agricultural-open zone, to be too narrow and rigid. The court held that since zoning laws and ordinances are in derogation of the common-law right to free use of private property, such ordinances must be strictly construed and must be given a fair and reasonable interpretation, by the officials assigned to interpret and apply the zoning laws, with some regard to the proposed use. Whistler v. Burlington N. RR Co., 228 M 150, 741 P2d 422, 44 St. Rep. 1415 (1987).

Chapter Attorney General's Opinions

Parameters of County Commission Authority to Permit County Road Use for Pipelines: A Board of County Commissioners is charged with a significant amount of discretion under 7-1-2103, 7-14-2102, and 7-14-2107 in determining whether to permit the use of a county road right-of-way for the laying of permanent or temporary pipelines. This discretion is potentially limited by state regulations under Title 69, ch. 13, concerning pipeline carriers, depending on specific factual situations. To be consistent with the holding in Bolinger v. Bozeman, 158 M 507, 493 P2d 1062 (1972), the Board must find that the action: (1) is necessary for the best interest of the county roads and the road districts; (2) does not unreasonably impair the special easements of abutting owners in the street for purposes of access, light, and air; and (3) is conducive to the public welfare and serves one of the purposes for which highways and streets are dedicated. 42 A.G. Case Notes

Description of Secondary Access Right-of-Way Within Statutory Requirements: In its complaint for condemnation for a pipeline and fiber optic right-of-way access across plaintiff's property, Cenex incorporated by reference the "minimum necessary interest" requirement and included a map of the pipeline route and a description of the primary easement sought. When the District Court granted condemnation of the 50-foot easement, plaintiff appealed, alleging that the District Court erred because Cenex had failed in its description to set forth a fixed way of access. In affirming the condemnation grant, the Supreme Court held that because Cenex was entitled only to the "minimum necessary interest", the description of the secondary right of access complied with the requirement of 70-30-203 through incorporation by reference of the requirement. 2007 Amendment Void: The amendment to this section made by Ch. 365, L. 2007, was rendered void by sec. 7, Ch. 365, L. 2007, a contingent voidness provision.

2013 Amendment: Chapter 44 throughout section in five places substituted "crude petroleum, coal, or the products of crude petroleum or coal or of carbon dioxide from a plant or facility that produces or captures carbon dioxide" for "crude petroleum, coal, the products of crude petroleum or coal, or carbon dioxide produced in the combustion or gasification of fossil fuels"; in (1) in two places before "produced or purchased" inserted "when any of those products were" and at end of last sentence in two places substituted "any of those products" for "the products". Case Notes

Authority of State to Regulate Railroads on Indian Reservation: The court, citing White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 US 136, 65 L Ed 2d 665, 10 S Ct 2578 (1980), held that the proper test to determine whether the state had regulatory jurisdiction over a railroad operated by non-Indians on an Indian reservation involved balancing state versus federal/tribal interests in the particular circumstances. It found that the state of Montana had exercised comprehensive regulatory authority over all railroads in the state, including on-reservation lines, for over 70 years, whereas there had been no federal or tribal regulatory action for nearly 100 years. The court therefore held that the state's interest predominated and that the state Public Service Commission had jurisdiction. Burlington N. RR. v. Dept. of Pub. Serv. Regulation, 221 M 497, 720 P2d 267, 43 St. Rep. 1005 (1986).

Case Notes

Change in Rates: Advantage, preference, or discrimination standing alone is not sufficient justification for interference with interstate rates. It is only undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice or undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination that justifies intervention by the Interstate Commerce Commission. (See 1997 amendment.) Mont. Citizens' Freight Rate Ass'n v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 128 M 127, 271 P2d 1024 (1954).

Disparity Between Interstate Rates and Intrastate Rates: The state board (now the Public Service Commission) has no authority to grant an automatic raise in intrastate rates simply because the Interstate Commerce Commission had granted a raise in interstate rates. The mere disparity between the interstate rates and the intrastate rates does not compel the state board to grant an increase so as to remove the disparity. (See 1997 amendment.) Mont. Citizens' Freight Rate Ass'n v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 128 M 127, 271 P2d 1024 (1954).

Hearing Complaint: A shipper, considering himself aggrieved by a rate fixed by the Montana Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) because unjust, unreasonable, or discriminatory, must proceed under 69-14-402 if he desires to have it declared so. When no rate has been fixed or the one established is considered excessive, he must apply to the Commission for investigation and determination of his contention under this section before he can maintain an action in the courts. If his case is predicated upon freight charges made in excess of those fixed and established by the Commission, his complaint must so allege and the action must be brought within 12 months from the date of payment, under 69-14-322 (since amended). (See 1997 amendment.) Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), explained in Mont. Horse Prod. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. 1997 Amendment: Chapter 235 in (1)(a) substituted "railroad employees" for "the lives of the employees of persons or corporations engaged in operating the same"; in (1)(b), at end, inserted "referred to in subsection (1)(a)"; in (1)(c), at end, substituted "safety laws referred to in subsection (1)(a)" for "penal provisions thereof"; in (2) deleted second sentence that read: "A copy of this annual report shall be mailed to the secretary of the department of transportation"; and made minor changes in style.

1983 Amendment: In (2), substituted "an annual report" for "the annual report required by 2-7-102".

69-14-116. General protection of health and safety on railroads — rear-end telemetry systems — exemption for a caboose-equipped train.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 235 in (1)(b) substituted "conduct inspections to implement" for "inspect the safety appliances, sanitation facilities, and shelters and enforce regulations with regard to the provisions of"; in (3), after "rules", deleted "and regulations"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 372 at end of (1)(a), after "employees", deleted "including but not limited to trainmen, enginemen, yardmen, maintenance of way employees, highway crossing watchmen, and clerical, platform, freight house, and express employees"; and near beginning of (2)(a), after "commission shall", inserted "to the extent permitted by federal law".

1991 Amendment: Inserted (2) and (4) allowing Commission to require a rear-end telemetry system on certain trains and outlining acceptable systems; in (3), after "regulations", inserted reference to subsections (1) and (2) and near end substituted "compatible with any federal provisions and may not create an undue burden on interstate commerce" for "from time to time coextensive with the requirements of and in conformity to the provisions of the acts of congress and rules and regulations of the interstate commerce commission and the department of transportation, as then effective"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Authority of State to Regulate Railroads on Indian Reservation: The court, citing White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 US 136, 65 L Ed 2d 665, 10 S Ct 2578 (1980), held that the proper test to determine whether the state had regulatory jurisdiction over a railroad operated by non-Indians on an Indian reservation involved balancing state versus federal/tribal interests in the particular circumstances. Discontinuance of Service:

An order of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) that there should be no curtailment or discontinuance of passenger train service between points within the state except when authorized by Commission (now P.S.C.) is valid under the statute and in line with authority stating that a public utility may not discontinue its service without approval of the Public Service Commission. Great N. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 130 M 250, 298 P2d 1093 (1956), appeal dismissed in 352 US 904, 1 L Ed 2d 114, 77 S Ct 146 (1956).

Railroad was not authorized to discontinue service without permission of commission (now the Public Service Commission), although in an earlier petition by the railroad to discontinue service the Commission had ruled it had no jurisdiction. That order was subject to review, and the obligation to have it reviewed rested on the railway company as a necessary step to procure consent of Board of Railroad Commissioners (now P.S.C.) for abandonment of service. Great N. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 130 M 250, 298 P2d 1093 (1956), appeal dismissed in 352 US 904, 1 L Ed 2d 114, 77 S Ct 146 (1956).

Operation and Effect: Section 69-12-209 must be construed with this section. The former, being a later enactment, modifies this section so that the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) could maintain an action to enjoin a motor carrier from operating over state highways until the motor carrier complied with the motor carrier law. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Aero Mayflower Transit Co., 119 M 118, 172 P2d 452 (1946), affirmed in Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 332 US 495, 92 L Ed 99, 68 S Ct 167 (1947).

1987 Amendment: Substituted entire section (see 1987 Session Law) for former section that read: "(1) Every person, corporation, or association operating a railroad in the state shall maintain and staff facilities for shipment and delivery of freight and shall ship and deliver freight and accommodate passengers in at least one location, preferably the county seat, in each county through which the line of the railway passes and at any point upon the line of such railway where there is a city or town having a population, according to the last federal census, of not less than 1,000; provided, however, that this section shall not require the maintenance and staffing of such facilities in any county or at any city or town in which such facilities were not maintained and staffed on July 1, 1969.

(2) Nothing in this section authorizes the discontinuance of any facility presently established in any city, town, or other location having a population of less than 1,000 without a hearing before the public service commission, as provided by law."

Case Notes

Statute Requiring Railroad to Maintain Freight Offices Upheld: Because it regulates economic activity, the standard for judging the constitutionality of this section is the same under the Due Process, Equal Protection, or Commerce clauses. It will be upheld if it bears a rational relationship to a legitimate state interest. It is generally agreed that legitimate state interest is defined by the state's need to ensure that carriers serve the public need and necessity. The public convenience and necessity may require a railroad to provide adequate and suitable facilities for the convenience of the communities served by the railroad. When enacted in 1905, the predecessor of this section was designed to serve the public convenience and necessity and was, therefore, valid. Burlington Northern did not meet its burden of establishing that the Legislature acted irrationally when it amended this section in 1969. Therefore, the statute was upheld. Burlington N. R.R. v. Dept. of Public Service, 763 F2d 1106 (9th Cir. 1985).

In the absence of statutory prohibition, a railway company may sell, for a reduced fare, a particular form of ticket whereby its liability is restricted and its obligations curtailed. Miley v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 51, 108 P 5 (1910).

One who purchased a railroad ticket at a reduced rate to a certain station on defendant's line and boarded a train which did not stop at the point to which his ticket called for transportation, having failed to pay the regular fare, was not one of the class of persons for whose benefit this section was enacted and therefore could not maintain an action for the penalty therein provided. Case Notes

State Law Requiring Caboose Preempted by Federal Regulation: The provision in this section requiring a caboose on all trains more than 2,000 feet in length was preempted by Federal Railroad Administration regulations permitting the use of telemetry devices as a substitute for visual inspection at the rear of trains. (See 1997 amendment.) Burlington N. RR Co. v. Mont., 880 F2d 1104 (9th Cir. 1989).

Case Notes

Admissibility Dependent on Nature of Treatise: Learned treatises are permissible for use in cross-examination of an expert if the treatise is "established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice". Here, a treatise on design of grade railway-highway crossings was properly used to test the knowledge of an expert witness in cross-examination. Another treatise concerning the visibility and audibility of trains approaching crossings was properly held to be inadmissible, as it was merely advisory in nature. Treatises may be admitted upon the foundation that they: (1) show what is feasible to the jury; or (2) show what the defendant knew or should have known about safety precautions. Runkle v. Burlington N. Ry., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

Ratemaking Procedures

CASES DECIDED PRIOR TO 1997 GENERAL REVISION

Publication and Notice: The Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) is not required, when acting upon a petition or application for reduced rail rates, to cause publication and to give notice pursuant to section 72-117, R.C.M. 1947 (replaced by 69-14-305 through 69-14-310, all now repealed), and section 72-118, R.C.M. 1947 (pertinent parts replaced in 69-14-311 and 69-14-312, both now repealed), in advance of any action on such petition or prior to issuance of any authorization thereon. State ex rel. Mont. Motor Tariff Bureau, Inc. v. Smith, 144 M 110, 394 P2d 758 (1964).

Change in Rates: Advantage, preference, or discrimination standing alone is not sufficient justification for interference with intrastate rates. It is only undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice or undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination that justifies intervention by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mont. Citizens' Freight Rate Ass'n v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 128 M 127, 271 P2d 1024 (1954).

Disparity Between Interstate Rates and Intrastate Rates: The state board (now the Public Service Commission) has no authority to grant an automatic raise in intrastate rates simply because the Interstate Commerce Commission had granted a raise in interstate rates. The mere disparity between the interstate rates and the intrastate rates does not compel the state board to grant an increase so as to remove the disparity. Mont. Citizens' Freight Rate Ass'n v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 128 M 127, 271 P2d 1024 (1954).

Rates Not to Be Changed Retroactively: Both the Public Service Commission and the courts lack power to invalidate retroactively established rates and thus permit recovery of overcharge or undercharge by shipper or carrier. Although ruling in Doney case, cited below, allowing reparations when Commission subsequently changes rates, was in error, it was binding until overruled. Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932); Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), overruling contrary holding in Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921). No federal right was infringed upon by trial court's adherence to Doney or Supreme Court's application of rule to past cases. Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932), affirming Sunburst decision above.

Voluntary Rate Reduction: Voluntary reduction of a rate by a carrier, with consent of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission), does not make the prior rate unlawful, unreasonable, or discriminatory or the basis of an action for damages. Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932).

Complaint: Because the presumption obtains that the Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) fixed and established reasonable rates in obedience to section 72-116, R.C.M. 1947 (replaced by 69-14-301, now repealed, 69-14-302, now repealed, and 69-14-321), and that the rate as established is in accordance with the approved and published tariff, a complaint which fails to allege that freight charges were not in accordance with such tariff is defective. Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), explained in Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

Established Tariff — Effect of Statute: A tariff duty filed and published by the Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) has the force and effect of a statute and is binding alike upon the shipper and carrier until modified by the tribunal authorized to change it. Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), explained in Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

Exclusive Remedy: The remedies prescribed by Montana carriers law for the recovery of damages caused by the exaction of discriminatory or unreasonable freight charges are exclusive, and a complaint based upon the common-law remedy and drawn in entire disregard of the provisions of the statute did not state a cause of action, the common-law remedies having been superseded by that law. Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), explained in Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

Hearing Complaint: A shipper, considering himself aggrieved by a rate fixed by the Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) because unjust, unreasonable, or discriminatory, must proceed under 69-14-402 if he desires to have it declared so. When no rate has been fixed or the one established is considered excessive, he must apply to the Commission for investigation and determination of his contention, under section 72-118, R.C.M. 1947 (replaced by 69-14-114, 69-14-301, now repealed, 69-14-311, now repealed, and 69-14-312, now repealed), before he can maintain an action in the courts. If his case is predicated upon freight charges made in excess of those fixed and established by the Commission, his complaint must so allege and the action must be brought within 12 months from the date of payment, under 69-14-322 (since amended). Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), explained in Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

Construction: As a statute may be remedial in part and penal in part for purposes of construction, the penalty clause of 69-14-303 (now repealed) should be construed according to the fair import of its terms, with a view to effectuating its object, as required by section 94-101, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), but the part prohibiting unjust discrimination in charging for transportation should be liberally construed with a view to carrying out the legislative intention. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910).

Purpose: The purpose of 69-14-303 (now repealed) was not only to benefit the railroad companies by driving the ticket brokers out of business but to provide against loss to the purchaser of an unused ticket by requiring that it should be redeemed by the seller. It was enacted that the railroad companies should themselves be prohibited from indulging in kindred practices of pernicious discrimination between persons of the same class. John v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 18, 111 P 632 (1910).

69-14-321. Complaints of unjust rate discrimination.

Case Notes

Change in Rates: Advantage, preference, or discrimination standing alone is not sufficient justification for interference with intrastate rates. It is only undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice or undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination that justifies intervention by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mont. Citizens' Freight Rate Ass'n v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 128 M 127, 271 P2d 1024 (1954).

Disparity Between Interstate Rates and Intrastate Rates: The state board (now the Public Service Commission) has no authority to grant an automatic raise in intrastate rates simply because the Interstate Commerce Commission had granted a raise in interstate rates. The mere disparity between the interstate rates and the intrastate rates does not compel the state board to grant an increase so as to remove the disparity. Mont. Citizens' Freight Rate Ass'n v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 128 M 127, 271 P2d 1024 (1954).

Rates Not to Be Changed Retroactively: Both the Public Service Commission and the courts lack power to invalidate retroactively established rates and thus permit recovery of overcharge or undercharge by shipper or carrier. Although ruling in Doney case, cited below, allowing reparations when Commission subsequently changes rates, was in error, it was binding until overruled. Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), overruling contrary holding in Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), and followed in Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932). No federal right was infringed upon by trial court's adherence to Doney or Supreme Court's application of rule to past cases. Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932), affirming Sunburst decision above.

Voluntary Rate Reduction: Voluntary reduction of a rate by a carrier, with consent of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission), does not make the prior rate unlawful, unreasonable, or discriminatory or the basis of an action for damages. Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932).

Exclusive Remedy: The remedies prescribed by Montana carriers law for the recovery of damages caused by the exaction of discriminatory or unreasonable freight charges are exclusive, and a complaint based upon the common-law remedy and drawn in entire disregard of the provisions of the statute did not state a cause of action, the common-law remedies having been superseded by that law. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

When no rate has been fixed or the one established is considered excessive, he must apply to the Commission for investigation and determination of his contention, under section 72-118, R.C.M. 1947 (replaced by 69-14-114, 69-14-301, now repealed, 69-14-311, now repealed, and 69-14-312, now repealed), before he can maintain an action in the courts. If his case is predicated upon freight charges made in excess of those fixed and established by the Commission, his complaint must so allege and the action must be brought within 12 months from the date of payment, under 69-14-322 (since amended). Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

69-14-322. Actions to recover excess charges.

Case Notes

Reimbursement for Overcharges — No Retroactive Rate Change: Both the Public Service Commission and the courts lack power to invalidate retroactively established rates and thus permit recovery of overcharge or undercharge by shipper or carrier. Although ruling in Doney case, cited below, allowing reparations when Commission subsequently changes rates, was in error, it was binding until overruled. Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Part 4

Review of Commission Action

69-14-401. Court review of commission actions.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 235 near beginning substituted "rule" for "classification, rate, toll, charge, regulation", near middle substituted "adopt a rule" for "make, fix, or establish any classification, rate, toll, charge, regulation", and after "county having jurisdiction" deleted former provisions governing initiation of legal action challenging Commission action (see 1997 Session Law for former text); deleted (2) requiring adoption of new rate by Commission if court finds existing rate unjust (see 1997 Session Law for former text); and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Obligation to Review: The fact that the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) ruled it had no jurisdiction to act on the railroad's petition to discontinue service did not authorize the railroad to discontinue service without the Commission's consent. The order was subject to review, and the obligation to have it reviewed rested on the railway company as a necessary step to procure consent for abandonment of service. Great N. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 130 M 250, 298 P2d 1093 (1956), appeal dismissed in Great N. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 352 US 904, 1 L Ed 2d 114, 77 S Ct 146 (1956).

69-14-402. Lawsuit to determine reasonableness of commission actions.

Case Notes

Appellant Review: The findings of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) are by law considered prima facie just, reasonable, and proper. Courts should ascribe to them the strength given to the judgments of a tribunal appointed by law and informed by experience. The Board's conclusion is subject to review, but when supported by evidence it is accepted as final. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 126 M 568, 255 P2d 346 (1953), explained in Great N. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 130 M 250, 298 P2d 1093 (1956).

Requiring Continuation of Service at a Loss: The fact that two trains were operated at a loss was not, standing alone, sufficient to justify discontinuance of the trains in question. The requirement that a particular service be rendered at a loss does not make a service confiscatory and thereby an unconstitutional taking of property. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 126 M 568, 255 P2d 346 (1953), explained in Great N. Ry. v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 130 M 250, 298 P2d 1093 (1956).

Federal Court Jurisdiction: A three-judge District Court was held to have jurisdiction of a suit by a railroad to enjoin Montana Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) from enforcing orders for continuation of operation of a certain of railroad's trains, because under this statute such review constituted exercise of a judicial function. Great N. Ry. v. Nagle, 16 F. Supp. 532 (D.C. Mont. 1936).

Rates Not to Be Changed Retroactively: Both the Public Service Commission and the courts lack power to invalidate retroactively established rates and thus permit recovery of overcharge or undercharge by shipper or carrier. Although ruling in Doney case, cited below, allowing reparations when Commission subsequently changes rates, was in error, it was binding until overruled. Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), overruling contrary holding in Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), and followed in Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932). No federal right was infringed upon by trial court's adherence to Doney or Supreme Court's application of rule to past cases. Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932), affirming Sunburst decision above.

Procedure:

Certiorari did not lie to annul an order of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) directing removal of station facilities from one town to another because the relator had a sufficient remedy under this section by bringing an action in the District Court to determine whether the order was just and reasonable. State ex rel. Mahood v. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs, 73 M 1, 234 P 834 (1925).

A shipper, considering himself aggrieved by a rate fixed by the Montana Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) because unjust, unreasonable, or discriminatory, must proceed under this section if he desires to have it declared so. When no rate has been fixed or the one established is considered excessive, he must apply to the Commission for investigation and determination of his contention under 69-14-114 before he can maintain an action in the courts. If his case is predicated upon freight charges made in excess of those fixed and established by the Commission, his complaint must so allege and the action must be brought within 12 months from the date of payment, under 69-14-322 (since amended). Doney v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 209, 199 P 432 (1921), explained in Mont. Horse Prod. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 194, 7 P2d 919 (1932), Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 91 M 216, 7 P2d 927 (1932), and Great N. Ry. v. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co., 287 US 358, 77 L Ed 360, 53 S Ct 145 (1932).

Injunction: The District Court has no power over any rate order of the Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) except by final judgment. This necessarily deprives a railroad, as well as a shipper, of the right to invoke and prohibits the court from issuing a preliminary injunction in its behalf. The District Court has, however, jurisdiction to use the provisional remedy of injunction in limine to suspend an order made by the Commission requiring a railroad company to operate a local passenger train each way daily between designated stations, pending final determination of action for review. State ex rel. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. District Court, 53 M 229, 163 P 115 (1917), explained in Mtn. States Power Co. v. P.S.C., 299 US 167, 81 L Ed 99, 57 S Ct 169 (1936).

Part 5
Railroad Corporations

Part Case Notes

Master-Servant Relationship Between Railroad and Locomotive Service Facility Established by Common Control — Applicability of Federal Employers' Liability Act: Employees of the Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc. (LRC), sought damages under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51, et seq., alleging that they were injured during the course of their employment while nominally employed by LRC, but that LRC was actually the servant of Montana Rail Link, Inc. (MRL), which engaged in the business of common carrier by railroad in interstate commerce. MRL's affirmative defense was that plaintiffs could not recover FELA benefits against LRC because LRC was not a railroad and that they could not recover FELA benefits against MRL because they were not employed by MRL. The issue on appeal was whether the District Court erred when it held that plaintiffs were not employed by a common carrier by railroad for purposes of FELA. As applicable law, the Supreme Court cited Kelley v. S. Pac. Co., 419 US 318, 42 L Ed 2d 498, 95 S Ct 472 (1974). Among the factors typically considered for purposes of determining whether a master-servant relationship exists, the most significant is the degree of control that the alleged master exercises over the work of the alleged servant. In this case, a master-servant relationship was established between MRL and LRC not only by control of business practices through common ownership and directorship, but also through: (1) MRL's direct, frequent, and unique supervision of LRC employees; (2) MRL's at-will acquisition of LRC property, including land exchanges without consideration or for less consideration than full market value, when acquisition was in MRL's self-interest; (3) LRC's dependence on MRL for training, tools, equipment, and parts; and (4) MRL's use of LRC property for its own purposes without compensation, including the common sharing of physical facilities. Based on the master-servant relationship, the LRC employees were also considered employees of MRL at the time that they were injured and were thus covered under FELA. Watts v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 1999 MT 18, 293 M 167, 975 P2d 283, 56 St. Rep. 88 (1999).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 125 in (1)(a) at end inserted reference to Title 70, chapter 30; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Interim Study Bill — Eminent Domain: Chapter 125, L. 2001, was enacted as a result of an interim study. See Eminent Domain in Montana, published by the Legislative Environmental Policy Office, May 2001.

Case Notes

Leases: The provisions of section 72-223, R.C.M. 1947 (partly codified as this section, which has been amended since codification), limiting the right of railroad companies to lease their roads to one another or to other companies that are not parallel or competing roads were repealed by section 72-229, R.C.M. 1947 (now 69-14-514). State ex rel. Nolan v. Mont. Ry., 21 M 221, 53 P 623 (1898).

69-14-514. Interrailroad business arrangements and out-of-state operations.

Case Notes

Filing of Charter or Articles: If a foreign railroad company, engaged as a common carrier of passengers between different states, seeks to engage in interstate commerce in this state, buys or is about to buy out another railroad, and seeks to avail itself of the benefits of this section, which requires the filing of its charter or articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State, it is not obliged to pay a fee, under 2-6-103, for the filing of articles of incorporation, on the basis of a percentage of its entire capital stock. The exaction of such a fee would be an unauthorized burden upon interstate commerce. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. Swindlehurst, 47 M 119, 130 P 966 (1913). See State ex rel. Gen. Elec. Co. v. Alderson, 49 M 29, 140 P 82 (1914).

Parallel and Competing Roads:

Section 72-229, R.C.M. 1947 (codified as this section, which has been amended since codification), repealed section 72-223, R.C.M. 1947 (codified in part as 69-14-513), insofar as section 72-223, R.C.M. 1947, limited the right of railroad companies to lease their roads to one another or to other companies that are not parallel or competing roads. State ex rel. Nolan v. Mont. Ry., 21 M 221, 53 P 623 (1898).

Under this section, one railroad company can lease its road to a parallel and competing road for a term of 10 years, and such lease is not a consolidation of the two roads within the meaning of the state constitution. This section is to be read as merely authorizing the amalgamation or consolidation of railroads not forbidden to amalgamate or consolidate by the state constitution. State ex rel. Nolan v. Mont. Ry., 21 M 221, 53 P 623 (1898).

69-14-531. Authorization to operate railroad.

Case Notes

Eminent Domain: The provisions of this section, section 15-810, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and section 72-205, R.C.M. 1947 (now 69-14-532, 69-14-533, 69-14-539, 69-14-552, 69-14-558, and 69-14-561), are exceedingly liberal, but they must be interpreted in the light of section 93-9905, R.C.M. 1947 (now 70-30-111), and the rule of necessity must be determinative of the right to take in each instance. N. Pac. Ry. v. McAdow, 44 M 547, 121 P 473 (1912).

69-14-532. Authority to plan, lay out, and construct rail lines.

Obstruction of Watercourses:

A railroad that quitclaimed land including the right-of-way across an irrigation ditch was not relieved of its statutory duty to maintain the cement drop, siphon, and wooden flume for the benefit of lower landowners who depended on the water. Harrer v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 130, 410 P2d 713 (1966).

A "watercourse" within the meaning of this section is a channel cut by running water with well-defined banks through which water flows for a substantial period of each year. Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

Under the common law a railroad company was, and under this section is, required to exercise the skill and knowledge ordinarily practiced in the construction of an embankment used with a bridge over a watercourse, and to leave sufficient openings for the passage of water known to flow in the stream in the time of usual freshets, and such as experience shows might occur at any time. Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

Under the common-law rule of liability for the obstruction of surface waters in force in this state in the absence of statute providing otherwise, the defendant railway company was not liable for damage caused to the plaintiff's property by surface waters which were dammed up by its embankment and for the escape of which it had failed to construct culverts or openings. Its duty in this respect was confined by this section and 69-14-240 to providing outlets for streams, watercourses, etc., intersected by the embankment. The plaintiff's evidence failed to establish that the invading waters were conveyed through a natural watercourse. Le Munyon v. Gallatin Valley Ry., 60 M 517, 199 P 915 (1921).

Liability for Flood Damage:

A railroad maintaining a bridge across a stream had the duty of ordinary care for protection of life and property along the course of the stream. The mere fact that flood occurring in valley was unprecedented in its volume and extent did not relieve the railroad of the responsibility to maintain a proper bridge across the stream. Whether it was negligent in failing to do so in anticipation of the flood and whether negligence was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's damages were questions for the jury. N. Pac. Ry. v. Wagner, 86 F2d 63 (9th Cir. 1936).

Liability for flood damage attaches only upon a showing of a railroad's negligence. When a railroad company constructs and maintains a grade across a watercourse, with proper culverts in conformity with statutory requirements and so as to provide for the passage of waters reasonably to be expected in times of usual freshets or such as are unusual but which experience shows might occur at any time, its construction or maintenance is not negligence per se. A railroad is not an insurer against flood damage. Peel v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. Ry., 94 M 334, 22 P2d 617 (1933); Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

Restoration of Stream:

Instruction that "the law contemplates some variation from the original condition of the stream and allows some discretion in the engineers" was proper on the issue of restoring a stream. Wibaux Realty Co. v. N. Pac. Ry., 101 M 126, 54 P2d 1175 (1935).

The failure of a railroad to restore a stream crossed while constructing its road constitutes actionable negligence. The duty to restore does not require that the full width of the channel be left open for passage of water, but it may be fulfilled by widening it and deepening it to carry as much water as it did originally. The duty may not be broadened by the courts. Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

The usefulness of or "franchise" of a nonnavigable stream which this section requires a railroad to restore is its use for irrigation purposes and drainage. Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

When a railroad company, after exercise of reasonable care in the construction of an embankment and bridge in crossing a stream, thereafter narrows the opening left for the passage of water or subsequently discovers that the opening is insufficient to carry away waters which may reasonably be anticipated, it must make suitable provision for such water within a reasonable time. Otherwise, the duty it owes under this section to restore the stream to its original usefulness is not discharged. Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

Authority to Lay Out Road:

The mere fact that one has made substantial improvements along a railroad in the expectation of its continued operation does not burden the railroad company with an implied obligation to operate. Briggs v. Great N. Ry., 92 M 463, 15 P2d 840 (1932).

A railroad company, in projecting a route through a town, had staked a line through the center of one of its streets 80 feet wide and caused it to be mapped and subsequently approved by its executive officer. In an action by a rival company looking to the condemnation of a strip of land 60 feet wide immediately adjoining one side of the street, the evidence was held insufficient to sustain a finding that such strip had already been appropriated by the first company for a public use of equal necessity, namely, for right-of-way purposes. Great Falls & Teton County Ry. v. Ganong, 48 M 43, 136 P 391 (1913).

The language of this section, "not exceeding in width one hundred feet on each side of its center line", is not a grant but a limitation. No obligation is imposed upon any company to take the full amount permitted, and in the absence of any necessity it cannot do so, either as against the will of the owner or the necessities of a competing road. Great Falls & Teton County Ry. v. Ganong, 48 M 43, 136 P 391 (1913).

Eminent Domain: The provisions of this section, the latter part of 69-14-552, section 15-810, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and 69-14-531 are exceedingly liberal, but they must be interpreted in the light of section 93-9905, R.C.M. 1947 (now 70-30-111), and the rule of necessity must be determinative of the right to take in each instance. Federal Railroad Safety Liability Preemption — Shanklin Clarified, Not Overruled by Subsequent Federal Legislation: In Norfolk S. Ry. Co. v. Shanklin, 529 US 344 (2000), the U.S. Supreme Court held that when federal funds are used to install warning devices at railroad crossings, the preemption clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (FRSA), 49 U.S.C. 20106 (1994), preempts state law tort claims. In 2007, Congress amended the preemption clause by adding an additional subsection clarifying state law causes of action. However, the amendment did not overrule the Shanklin preemption analysis or effect a substantive change to FRSA's preemption clause, but instead simply clarified the scope of the preemption clause, so the Shanklin preemption remains in effect. Smith v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 M 278, 187 P3d 639 (2008).

Whistle Statute Applicable to Any Railroad Crossing, Not Just Public Railroad Crossing: Langemo was injured in a collision with a Montana Rail Link train at a private railroad crossing. Langemo contended that the railroad was liable for negligence per se under this section because no whistle post was ever installed at the crossing, nor did the engineer sound the train whistle when approaching the crossing, in accordance with a longstanding railroad policy of not sounding the whistle at private crossings. The District Court applied the definition of road in 60-1-103, in which the word denotes a public way, and concluded that the whistle statute required bells and whistles to be sounded only at public crossings and granted summary judgment for the railroad. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed. The District Court's interpretation violated basic rules of statutory construction and misinterpreted the applicable statutes. The whistle statute's use of the phrase "any highway, road, or railroad crossing", in its ordinary and usual meaning, meant every railroad crossing, not just public crossings. The whistle statute was not expressly repealed by the highway code, nor did the general highway code enacted in 1965 impliedly repeal the specific whistle statute of 1873. (However, note that 2001 amendments to this section now explicitly require that railroad bells and whistles be sounded only at public crossings and the 2003 amendment provides for compliance with a written request to sound bells and whistles at a private crossing.) Langemo v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 273, 307 M 293, 38 P3d 782 (2001).

Improper Grant of Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Whether Train Crew Gave Adequate Auditory Warning at Railroad Crossing: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. In its order granting partial summary judgment to MRL, the District Court ruled, as a matter of law, that the MRL train crew had properly sounded the train whistle (now designated as locomotive horn) and bell, in accordance with this section, and that because Mickelson had no memory of the accident, he could not produce any specific facts that presented a genuine issue worthy of trial. In the brief opposing summary judgment, Mickelson pointed out several inconsistencies in the testimony of the train crew that raised factual and credibility issues concerning the crew's story about how the accident occurred, particularly with regard to Mickelson's prior common practice of loading the fire truck in a particular manner, which conflicted with the crew's story. The Supreme Court held that the trial court committed reversible error by preventing the jury from deciding crucial factual and credibility issues regarding adequate auditory warnings, citing several cases that precluded summary judgment on whistle issues because of disputed facts. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000). See also Easterwood v. CSX Transp., Inc., 933 F2d 1548 (11th Cir. 1991), Bowman v. Norfolk S. Ry. Co., 832 F. Supp. 1014 (D. S.C. 1993), and Borden v. CSX Transp., Inc., 843 F. Supp. 1410 (M.D. Ala. 1993).

Improper Jury Instruction Regarding Speed of Train — Applicable Law of Case: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. MRL moved for summary judgment, arguing that the subject of train speed was preempted by CSX Transp., Inc. v. Easterwood, 507 US 658, 123 L Ed 2d 387, 113 S Ct 1732 (1993). The District Court denied MRL's motion, ruling that a negligence action based on a state law duty to slow or stop a train to avoid a specific individual hazard was not preempted under CSX. Nevertheless, the court's instructions to the jury stated that "Under the laws governing the speed of trains, a train crew has no duty to slow a train until a reasonable and prudent train operator has reason to believe, based upon the circumstances present, that the operator of a motor vehicle will not yield to the train and there is a substantial risk of a collision" and that "Montana law does not provide the driver of an emergency vehicle any special privilege in relation to railroad crossings. Emergency vehicle drivers must follow the requirements when approaching and crossing railroad crossings as any other vehicle driver". Following jury deliberations, MRL was found not liable. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in instructing the jury on the speed of trains because the instructions did not state the applicable law of the case. As set out in Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), whether a railroad is negligent in a particular manner, such as failing to reduce train speed, is a question of fact for the jury. Here, the jury instructions improperly removed the question of train speed from jury consideration, compelling the jury to conclude that the train crew did not have a duty to do anything more than they did, rather than deciding whether the facts and circumstances of this case constituted a specific individual hazard. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000).

Admissibility Dependent on Nature of Treatise: Learned treatises are permissible for use in cross-examination of an expert if the treatise is "established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice". Here, a treatise on design of grade railway-highway crossings was properly used to test the knowledge of an expert witness in cross-examination. Another treatise concerning the visibility and audibility of trains approaching crossings was properly held to be inadmissible, as it was merely advisory in nature. Treatises may be admitted upon the foundation that they: (1) show what is feasible to the jury; or (2) show what the defendant knew or should have known about safety precautions. Runkle v. Burlington N. Ry., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

Warning Signal:

The court found that the obvious legislative intent of this section is that the whistle (now designated as locomotive horn) and bell of a train be audibly effective to persons on foot or in vehicles approaching or crossing over an intersection with the railroad. The court found that the legislative purpose is satisfied if either the whistle (now designated as locomotive horn) or the bell, both being sounded for the statutory distance, gives an audible warning to others using the grade crossing sufficiently effective that a collision with the train can be avoided by exercising reasonable care. Runkle v. Burlington N. Ry., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

The failure of railroad employees in charge of engine to sound the whistle (now designated as locomotive horn) was not the proximate cause of collision when a motorist struck the unlighted second passenger car of a train stopped on a crossing. The mere alleged failure of a signal at the crossing to function at time of collision was not evidence of negligence on part of railroad when it inspected the signals daily and found no defect in them and when they were in good order and functioned properly a few hours before and a few hours after the collision. In the absence of knowledge, the railroad was not under a duty to place a servant or light or other signal at or near the crossing to warn of the presence of a train on the crossing. N. Pac. Ry. v. Bacon, 91 F2d 173 (9th Cir. 1937), certiorari denied, Bacon v. N. Pac. Ry., 302 US 730, 82 L Ed 564, 58 S Ct 55 (1937).

While it may be conceded that a locomotive engineer who, on approaching a crossing, observes that signals are not heard or that his train is not seen by one crossing must give such additional signals as an ordinarily prudent man would deem necessary, refusal to give such an instruction was held not error as not warranted by the evidence. Norton v. Great N. Ry., 85 M 270, 278 P 521 (1929).

The burden of proving that defendant railway company's enginemen on approaching a highway crossing did not sound the locomotive whistle (now designated as locomotive horn) or ring the bell may be sustained by plaintiff's negative testimony, provided the attendant circumstances were such as to have afforded him a reasonable opportunity to hear the warning signals, if given. Grant v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 78 M 97, 252 P 382 (1927).

It is negligence for a railroad to permit its trains to approach a crossing without sounding the whistle (now designated as locomotive horn) and ringing the bell. Stroud v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 75 M 384, 243 P 1089 (1926); Sprague v. N. Pac. Ry., 40 M 481, 107 P 412 (1910); Hunter v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 22 M 525, 57 P 140 (1899).

When a person seeing a train approaching is killed in an endeavor to effect a crossing ahead of the train, failure of the enginemen to ring the locomotive bell or sound the whistle (now designated as locomotive horn), though punishable as a misdemeanor, is not a proximate cause of the death. Melzner v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 51 M 487, 153 P 1019 (1915).

A variance between an averment that defendant railroad was negligent in failing to give any warning of the approach of one of its trains and evidence which tended to show that, while warning was given, it was not until the train was within about 100 feet of the crossing was immaterial. De Atley v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 224, 112 P 76 (1910).

Evidence of failure of a railroad to give proper signals of the approach of its trains at crossings makes out a prima facie case of negligence. De Atley v. N. Pac. Ry., 42 M 224, 112 P 76 (1910); Sprague v. N. Pac. Ry., 40 M 481, 107 P 412 (1910); Hunter v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 22 M 525, 57 P 140 (1899). See Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Effect of Specific Indemnity Clause in Lease: A specific indemnity clause in a lease agreement between a railroad and a lessee which provided that the lessee would indemnify the railroad for claims, "whether due or not due to the negligence" of the railroad, was not invalid as applied to action against railroad for injuries allegedly received because of a violation of this section by the railroad. Ryan Merc. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 294 F2d 629 (9th Cir. 1961), affirming Ryan Merc. Co. v. Great N. Ry., 186 F. Supp. 660 (D.C. Mont. 1960).

Contributory Negligence: A railroad's failure to obey statute does not excuse citizen from use of at least ordinary diligence and prudence. Sprague v. N. Pac. Ry., 40 M 481, 107 P 412 (1910); Hunter v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 22 M 525, 57 P 140 (1899).

Part 6
Railroad Highway Crossings

Duty of Driver to Stop:

A motorist who was killed when his car hit a train at a railroad crossing was negligent in that he did not comply with the statutory mandate to bring his vehicle to a complete stop not less than 10 or more than 100 feet from a railroad crossing when a train is within sight or hearing or if crossing and view is not clear, full, and distinct. O'Brien v. Great N. Ry., 148 M 429, 421 P2d 710 (1966).

A railroad has a right to expect motorists to approach a railroad crossing with caution and is not bound to protect against the negligence of a motorist. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

Section 72-164, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-8-349) does not apply to trains that are not approaching a crossing but are actually occupying it. Broberg v. N. Pac. Ry., 120 M 280, 182 P2d 851 (1947).

Section 61-8-349, requiring a motorist, when the view of railroad crossing is obscure, to stop not less than 10 or more than 100 feet from the intersection of the crossing and the highway, does not impose on a driver a duty to stop within such distance from a grade crossing when the driver is not familiar with the location and when he cannot see the crossing because of peculiar conditions. Broberg v. N. Pac. Ry., 120 M 280, 182 P2d 851 (1947).

Contributory Negligence:

A railroad was not liable for the death of the plaintiff's son, even though it had failed to put out fusees at time when the car struck the train, because driver's view of the crossing was unobstructed, reflector signs warning of the crossing were in well-kept condition, and there were no other extrahazardous conditions. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

Knowledge or lack of knowledge of a custom to warn or of the fact that customary protective signals have been abandoned or are not in operating condition has an important bearing on the question of contributory negligence, but it does not affect the question of primary negligence. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

A truck driver could not recover for a collision with a train when he could have seen or heard the train if he had taken proper precautions. Monforton v. N. Pac. Ry., 138 M 191, 355 P2d 501 (1960).

Duty of Guest of Driver:

The negligence of a driver in failing to stop at a railroad crossing, as required by 61-8-349, cannot be imputed to his passenger. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965), followed in McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 72, 972 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

This rule does not absolve a passenger from taking reasonable precautions for his own safety. Grant v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 78 M 97, 252 P 382 (1927).

Hazardous Conditions: Railroad crossings are not made extrahazardous by the number of vehicles passing over crossing, dark-colored road surfaces tending to absorb vehicle's lights, or setting out of fusees by railroad. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

Motorist Not Absolved From Using Reasonable Care:

A railroad crossing is as a matter of law a place of known danger and one is bound by law to recognize it as such. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

One of the highest obligations of railroad operators is to protect the public at highway crossings. Watchmen and warning devices are required by law and installed for the primary purpose of warning the traveling public of approaching trains or cars, but the absence of such warning devices does not excuse the negligence of the highway traveler who is charged with reasonable care in the premises. Incret v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. Ry., 107 M 394, 86 P2d 12 (1938).

Railroad's Duty: The infrequent use of a railroad crossing may affect the degree of care required to be taken by the train in approaching the crossing, but when the train is on the crossing, that is in itself a sufficient warning of danger to the traveling public and a railroad is not negligent in failing to sound a whistle or bell, place warning lights along a train, or to provide a flagman to warn traffic. Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

"Obscure" Defined: The word "obscure" as used in section 72-164, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-8-349) means "not clear, full or distinct". Broberg v. N. Pac. Ry., 120 M 280, 182 P2d 851 (1947).

Outside Corporate Limits of Municipality: Crossing that was partly within city limits was not "outside" limits within meaning of section 72-164, R.C.M. 1947 (now 61-8-349), thus an instruction on the statutory duty to stop at a crossing outside city limits under certain conditions was inapplicable and the failure of a jury to follow the instruction did not require reversal of the judgment. Jarvella v. N. Pac. Ry., 101 M 102, 53 P2d 446 (1935).

Duty of Railroad to Construct and Maintain Safe Railroad Crossing — Summary Dismissal of Liability Case Against County for Road Construction Proper: The North Alaska road crossing was built in the early 1920s through the cooperative efforts of the county and the railroad. The crossing was entirely on railroad property, and the railroad allowed access to the county over the years to maintain the road and to erect signs on the railroad's right-of-way. Fisch was injured in 1998 when his dump truck was struck by a train at the crossing. The railroad sought to ascribe liability to the county for negligent design and construction of the crossing. The county denied all allegations of negligence, and the District Court granted summary judgment to the county on the issue of liability. The railroad appealed on grounds that ARM 18.6.311 required the county to construct and maintain the roadway through the crossing in a safe manner. The Supreme Court disagreed. The clear intent of the administrative rule was to limit application of the rule to projects arising from the state's allocation of federal funds made available to improve the safety of railroad crossings and did not address road-rail alignment or crossing design. The historical ambiguity of whether the railroad or the county chose the exact location for the crossing raised no genuine issue of material fact and was irrelevant to the question of which entity had the duty to construct and maintain the crossing. Rather, under this section, that duty was statutorily assigned to and rested clearly with the railroad. Thus, summary dismissal of the liability claim against the county was proper. Fisch v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2003 MT 76, 315 M 13, 67 P3d 267 (2003).

Admissibility Dependent on Nature of Treatise: Learned treatises are permissible for use in cross-examination of an expert if the treatise is "established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice". Here, a treatise on design of grade railway-highway crossings was properly used to test the knowledge of an expert witness in cross-examination. Another treatise concerning the visibility and audibility of trains approaching crossings was properly held to be inadmissible, as it was merely advisory in nature. Treatises may be admitted upon the foundation that they: (1) show what is feasible to the jury; or (2) show what the defendant knew or should have known about safety precautions. Runkle v. Burlington N. Ry., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

Jury Instruction on Negligence as Matter of Law — Effect of Department Manual: Plaintiff contended that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury that the state and Burlington Northern were negligent as a matter of law in failing to place signals on the railroad crossing where the accident occurred in conformity with the Department of Highway's (now Department of Transportation's) Manual on Traffic Control Devices. The manual, however, does not have equal dignity with statutory law. Before the defendants can be charged with negligence in violating the manual, it must first be determined: (1) that the crossing was extrahazardous; and (2) that failure to install additional warning signals was the proximate cause of defendant's injuries. These were questions of fact for the jury since conflicting evidence was offered at trial, so no error was committed by failing to give the requested instructions. Penn v. Burlington N. Ry., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600, 37 St. Rep. 93 (1980).

Case Notes

Duty of Railroad to Construct and Maintain Safe Railroad Crossing — Summary Dismissal of Liability Case Against County for Road Construction Proper: The North Alaska road crossing was built in the early 1920s through the cooperative efforts of the county and the railroad. The crossing was entirely on railroad property, and the railroad allowed access to the county over the years to maintain the road and to erect signs on the railroad's right-of-way. Fisch was injured in 1998 when his dump truck was struck by a train at the crossing. The railroad sought to ascribe liability to the county for negligent design and construction of the crossing. The county denied all allegations of negligence, and the District Court granted summary judgment to the county on the issue of liability. The railroad appealed on grounds that ARM 18.6.311 required the county to construct and maintain the roadway through the crossing in a safe manner. The Supreme Court disagreed. The clear intent of the administrative rule was to limit application of the rule to projects arising from the state's allocation of federal funds made available to improve the safety of railroad crossings and did not address road-rail alignment or crossing design. The historical ambiguity of whether the railroad or the county chose the exact location for the crossing raised no genuine issue of material fact and was irrelevant to the question of which entity had the duty to construct and maintain the crossing. Rather, under 69-14-602, that duty was statutorily assigned to and rested clearly with the railroad. Thus, summary dismissal of the liability claim against the county was proper. Fisch v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2003 MT 76, 315 M 13, 67 P3d 267 (2003).

Locomotives — Safety Devices: The U.S. Congress has not preempted the field of warning devices on railroad locomotives, and a jury trying a railroad crossing accident case should be allowed to decide whether a railroad has a common-law duty to equip its locomotives with various warning devices. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep 430 (1982).

Locomotives — Standards of Care — Writ of Supervisory Control: Petition for Writ of Supervisory Control, brought by plaintiff suing railroad in crossing accident case, was granted where District Court incorrectly decided that federal law preempted the field of warning devices on locomotives and that the jury could thus not deliberate on the question of whether railroad had the duty to equip its locomotives with devices other than those required by federal law. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Proceedings in Another Court: Railroad sued in railroad crossing accident case moved for a stay of state court proceedings, contending that there was a substantial risk that the state decision would conflict with a federal circuit court decision; that the issue was a federal question of congressional preemption of an interstate commerce matter and thus more appropriately decided by the federal courts; that the risk of conflicting decisions would create a dilemma for the railroad in operating its trains in Montana and other states; and that the interests of justice, judicial economy, and good court administration required a stay. The Supreme Court denied a stay because there was in fact no preemption question and thus no substantial risk of conflicting decisions; the railroad did not sufficiently show that a great hardship would befall it were a stay not granted; the railroad did not satisfy the court that the hardship on it would be less than that on plaintiff; and it was very doubtful that judicial economy would be adversely affected by refusing a stay. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 363 in (1), near beginning of first sentence after "corporations", substituted "shall build" for "must make", after "maintain a" deleted "good and", and at end inserted exception clause and inserted second sentence allowing landowner or lessee to construct, maintain, or repair fence subject to approval and reimbursement by railroad corporation; near beginning of (2), after "not", substituted "build" for "make" and after "cars" inserted "because of the lack of a fence or maintenance of a fence"; inserted (3) allowing landowner or lessee to file complaint with Public Service Commission for fence in disrepair, requiring Public Service Commission to notify railroad corporation responsible for fence and to inform County Attorney that railroad corporation was notified of fence, requiring railroad corporation to repair fence within 30 days or be fined, requiring County Attorney to prosecute civil action against railroad for failure to repair fence, and requiring fine to be deposited in county general fund; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Sufficiency of Complaint:

When injury to livestock was not occasioned by reason of the nonexistence of a fence enclosing defendant railway's tracks but, as alleged in the complaint, was caused by its employees in driving them away from the tracks into an enclosure where there was no water, the complaint insofar as it relied upon failure to fence did not state a cause of action under this section. Fabert v. N. Pac. Ry., 77 M 446, 251 P 546 (1926).

Under this section, a railroad which fails to maintain sufficient cattle guards is not liable for the value of livestock killed or maimed on its right-of-way unless the complaint alleges and the proof shows that the killing or maiming was done by its engine or cars, and the absence of such an allegation renders the complaint insufficient. Hunt v. White Sulphur Springs & Yellowstone Park Ry., 63 M 508, 208 P 917 (1922).

In an action against a railroad for damages sustained by the plaintiff in killed and injured cattle because of a railroad's negligence in failing to see that a private gate, which had been constructed by it in its right-of-way fence for plaintiff's convenience, was not left open, plaintiff need not allege or prove that defendant knew or should have known that the gate had been left open. Scheffer v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 53 M 302, 163 P 565 (1917).

In an action against a railroad for killing of livestock, it is necessary that the complaint allege plaintiff's ownership or possession of land along or through which the railroad runs, and that the stock was killed at such place. Metlen v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 33 M 45, 81 P 737 (1905); Beaudin v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 31 M 238, 78 P 303 (1904).

When, in an action against a railroad company for killing livestock, the only evidence was that the animals were found near the track, one dead and the other injured so badly that it had to be killed, and no showing was made as to the character of the injuries except that one had its legs broken, such evidence was insufficient to show that the animals were killed by an engine or cars of defendant. Beaudin v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 31 M 238, 78 P 303 (1904).

No allegation of defendant's negligence in the operation of its trains is necessary to render it liable under statutes of this character. Beaudin v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 31 M 238, 78 P 303 (1904).

Highway Crossings: This section, making it incumbent upon railroads to maintain good and legal fences on both sides of their track and property, impliedly excepts highway crossings, at which, however, they must install cattle guards made effective by wing fences on both sides of the highway. Bowers v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 61 M 200, 201 P 825 (1921).

Applicability to Station Grounds:

Railroad tracks at the depot and station grounds where passengers and freight are received and discharged, where employees are required to pass continuously back and forth, and where public convenience requires free and unobstructed access are impliedly excepted from the requirements of fencing made by this section. Bowers v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 61 M 200, 201 P 825 (1921).

No duty devolves upon a railroad to fence at a station under statutes of this nature. Beaudin v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 31 M 238, 78 P 303 (1904).

Not Applicable to Sidings or Spurs: Under this section, a railroad is not required to fence its tracks at spurs or sidings and is liable for injuries to livestock only at such places where its actual negligence is established. Knop v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 57 M 288, 187 P 1020 (1920).

Duty Relative to Private Crossing and Gate: When, for the convenience of a ranch owner, a railroad constructed a private crossing and a gate in its right-of-way, the railroad was, under this section, bound to see that it was not left open by persons passing through it. Failure in this respect constitutes negligence per se. Scheffer v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 53 M 302, 163 P 565 (1917).

Common-Law Duty to Fence: The duty to fence railway tracks may exist, not by virtue of the fencing statute but because of the railway company's common-law obligation to exercise ordinary care to furnish its employees with a reasonably safe place in which to work. Whether the duty does exist depends upon the presence of circumstances that may render such precaution necessary. Alexander v. Great N. Ry., 51 M 565, 154 P 914 (1916), appeal dismissed in Great N. Ry. v. Alexander, 246 US 276, 62 L Ed 713, 38 S Ct 237 (1918).

No Liability for Death of Child for Failure to Fence: The failure of a railroad to maintain a fence along its tracks does not render it liable on that ground for the death of a child who entered upon the unfenced track and was struck by a train. Nixon v. Mont., Wyo., & SW. Ry., 50 M 95, 145 P 8 (1914).

69-14-707. Liability for negligent destruction of domestic animals.

Case Notes

Injury to Livestock at Fenced Station Ground: In the absence of willfulness or negligence in handling their trains, railroads are not liable for injuring or killing livestock that stray into their depot or station grounds. A plaintiff who conceded that locomotive engineer was not negligent in handling the train which killed a horse for which damages were sought was not entitled to recover. Bowers v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 61 M 200, 201 P 825 (1921).

Evidence:

When the presumption of negligence on the part of a railroad company in the killing of livestock by one of its trains, relied on by plaintiff, is confronted with testimony of its train operatives that there was not any negligence on their part, the result is a conflict of evidence resolvable by the jury, and a directed verdict in favor of defendant was properly refused. Johnson v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 52 M 73, 155 P 971 (1916).

In an action against a railroad under this section, proof of an injury to an animal which would inevitably result in its death substantially supports an allegation of killing. Poindexter & Orr Livestock Co. v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 33 M 338, 83 P 886 (1905).

In an action against a railroad under this section, the testimony that the section boss showed the witness where the animal was struck and stated that after it was struck he killed it to end its suffering was not admissible as res gestae. Poindexter & Orr Livestock Co. v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 33 M 338, 83 P 886 (1905). See Callahan v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 47 M 401, 133 P 687 (1913).

Instruction on This Section: A jury instruction, given in an action for the killing of livestock, to the effect that the law presumed such killing to have been the result of defendant's negligence, correctly stated the law, even though it appeared that while the animal was fatally injured by the locomotive and cars of the defendant the actual killing was done by one of the defendant's employees to end its suffering. Poindexter & Orr Livestock Co. v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 33 M 338, 83 P 886 (1905).

Admissions of Employee as Prima Facie Case: In an action against a railroad company to recover for injuries to stock, the admissions of an agent of the company, acting within the scope of his authority and with knowledge of the circumstances, that he had ordered the animal killed and the beef sold for the benefit of the company and the receipt of the proceeds of such sale by the company establish a prima facie case of the admission of negligence by the company. McCauley v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 11 M 483, 28 P 729 (1892).

69-14-708. Records of accidents involving livestock.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 235 in (1) substituted current language requiring railroad company to report livestock killed or injured to Department of Livestock for former provision requiring record to be kept at county seat of train killing or injuring animal (see 1997 Session Law for former text); inserted (2) regarding liability of railroad failing to give notice to the Department; deleted former (2), (3), and (4) concerning inspection of records of animals killed or injured, notice of a railroad station designated to keep records, and liability of railroad failing to keep required records (see 1997 Session Law for former text); and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: Near end of (1) substituted "written demand provided for in 69-14-709" for "affidavit hereinafter provided for".

Case Notes

County Seat: When a railroad keeps the book required by this section in county seat town through which its line passes, it is under no obligation to cause a notice to be filed with the County Clerk designating the station at which it is kept. Its omission to do so does not render it liable in damages under this section. (See 1997 amendment.) Hunt v. White Sulphur Springs & Yellowstone Park Ry., 63 M 508, 208 P 917 (1922).

Failure to Keep Record Book:

When a railway fails to keep the book prescribed by this section, the District Court may, in an action to recover damages, decline to hear its defense and award judgment for plaintiff, the statute not being open to constitutional attack. (See 1997 amendment.) Foster v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 62 M 230, 204 P 375 (1922).

The fact that the owner of cattle killed has actual knowledge of the killing does not prevent him from invoking the provision of this section imposing absolute liability for failure to keep the required record book. (See 1997 amendment.) Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

Constitutionality: This section is not unconstitutional for delegating lawmaking powers to the court or jury. Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

Pleading and Proof: Under this section it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege or prove negligence on the part of the railroad. Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

Police Regulation: This statute is a general police power provision, analogous to one requiring fencing and cattle guards, and as such is valid. Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

Value of Services: In action under this section, testimony regarding the value of the attorney's services is not admissible, the question of its allowance being one for the determination of the court and not the jury. Vaill v. N. Pac. Ry., 66 M 301, 213 P 446 (1923).

Constitutionality: The provision of this section (prior to a 1919 amendment) allowing an owner, in an action brought by him to recover damages for cattle alleged to have been killed by railroad company, to recover also an attorney's fee if he is successful but denying such fee to the railroad company if it is successful, was unconstitutional as denying equal protection of the law. Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

69-14-721. Control of fire hazard along right-of-way.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 588 substituted current text concerning control of dangerous or combustible material within the right-of-way for former text that read: "It shall be the duty of all railroad corporations or railroad companies operating any railroad within this state to keep their railroad track and either side thereof for a distance of 100 feet on each side of the track or roadbed, so far as it passes through any portion of this state, free from dead grass, weeds, or any dangerous or combustible material. Any railroad company or corporation failing to keep its railroad track and each side thereof free as specified above shall be liable for any damages which may occur from fire emanating from operating such railroad. A neglect to comply with the provisions of this section in keeping free any railroad track and either side for a distance equal to the space of ground covered by the grant of the right-of-way for the railroad corporation or company shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of any such railroad corporation or company. No railroad corporation or company shall be required to keep free, as specified above, any land not a part of its right-of-way."

Case Notes

Definition of Railroad: The term "railroad" as employed in this section refers only to common carriers. Crowley v. Polleys Lumber Co., 92 M 27, 9 P2d 1068 (1932).

Logging Railroad: This section has no application to a logging railroad used solely in connection with the owner's logging business. Crowley v. Polleys Lumber Co., 92 M 27, 9 P2d 1068 (1932).

Rebuttal of Presumption: A prima facie case of negligence established by plaintiff may be overcome by evidence that the railway company exercised reasonable care to keep its right-of-way free from combustible material. Pure Oil Co. v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 56 M 266, 185 P 150 (1919).

Necessary Showing for Recovery:

In an action for the destruction of property by fire communicated to it through combustible material permitted by a railway to accumulate on its right-of-way, a prima facie case of negligence is established by showing that the defendant permitted the accumulation of such material on its right-of-way. To enable plaintiff to recover, he must show also that the property was destroyed by fire emanating from the operation of the railroad and that the combustible material was an agency through which the fire was communicated to the property destroyed. Pure Oil Co. v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 56 M 266, 185 P 150 (1919).

Failure to comply with this section does not render railroad liable for damage occurring from any fire emanating from operating the railroad unless combustible matter operated as an agency in communicating the fire to plaintiff's property. Spencer v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 11 M 164, 27 P 681 (1891).

Purpose of Damages: The damages awarded to individuals for the failure of a railroad company to comply with this section are compensatory only and hence are not a "penalty otherwise provided for" within the meaning of section 94-35-252, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). Cooper v. N. Pac. Ry., 212 F 533 (9th Cir. 1914).

Who May Complain:

A lease was construed as exempting a railway from liability for loss occasioned by fire incident to or arising from railway operation but not exempting it for loss arising from fire due to the railway's violation of this section. Cooper v. N. Pac. Ry., 212 F 533 (9th Cir. 1914).

This section is for the benefit of all going on the right-of-way for the purposes of or incidental to transportation and of all off the right-of-way who may be injured by the railroad's failure to perform the duty imposed. The benefit does not extend to trespassers or tenants on the right-of-way who take the same as they find it, or subject to the terms of their occupancy. Cooper v. N. Pac. Ry., 212 F 533 (9th Cir. 1914).

Provision Not Offensive to Chartered Right: It is as much the duty of a railroad company to keep its right-of-way free from dead grass, weeds, or any dangerous or combustible material as it is to use proper means to prevent the emission of sparks of fire. A statute requiring this to be done does not trench upon the chartered right, under act of Congress, of such a railroad company. Diamond v. N. Pac. Ry., 6 M 580, 13 P 367 (1887). See Bielenberg v. Mont. Union Ry., 8 M 271, 20 P 314 (1889).

69-14-722. Maintenance of fireguards.

Case Notes

Range or Grazing Country: One seeking recovery for failure to comply with this section must allege in his complaint that the property burned was situated in a "range or grazing country". Failure to so allege renders testimony relating to a breach of its provisions inadmissible and instructions relating thereto improper. Missoula Trust & Sav. Bank v. N. Pac. Ry., 76 M 201, 245 P 949 (1926).

Before the commission may approve closure of a station or facility, it shall require from the railroad an agreement to protect employees affected by the closure by providing jobs equal in nature and pay to the job held by the employee for the 6 months prior to the closure. The equal job and pay agreement must be in effect for a period of 4 years or, in the alternative, the number of years the employee has been employed prior to closure, whichever is shorter."

Case Notes

Master-Servant Relationship Between Railroad and Locomotive Service Facility Established by Common Control — Applicability of Federal Employers' Liability Act: Employees of the Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc. (LRC), sought damages under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51, et seq., alleging that they were injured during the course of their employment while nominally employed by LRC, but that LRC was actually the servant of Montana Rail Link, Inc. (MRL), which engaged in the business of common carrier by railroad in interstate commerce. MRL's affirmative defense was that plaintiffs could not recover FELA benefits against LRC because LRC was not a railroad and that they could not recover FELA benefits against MRL because they were not employed by MRL. The issue on appeal was whether the District Court erred when it held that plaintiffs were not employed by a common carrier by railroad for purposes of FELA. As applicable law, the Supreme Court cited Kelley v. S. Pac. Co., 419 US 318, 42 L Ed 2d 498, 95 S Ct 472 (1974). Among the factors typically considered for purposes of determining whether a master-servant relationship exists, the most significant is the degree of control that the alleged master exercises over the work of the alleged servant. In this case, a master-servant relationship was established between MRL and LRC not only by control of business practices through common ownership and directorship, but also through: (1) MRL's direct, frequent, and unique supervision of LRC employees; (2) MRL's at-will acquisition of LRC property, including land exchanges without consideration or for less consideration than full market value, when acquisition was in MRL's self-interest; (3) LRC's dependence on MRL for training, tools, equipment, and parts; and (4) MRL's use of LRC property for its own purposes without compensation, including the common sharing of physical facilities. Based on the master-servant relationship, the LRC employees were also considered employees of MRL at the time that they were injured and were thus covered under FELA. Watts v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 1999 MT 18, 293 M 167, 975 P2d 283, 56 St. Rep. 88 (1999).

Livingston Employees' Claims Against Railroad That Left Town: Claims of former railroad employees for damages caused by railroad's closure of its Livingston, Montana, operations, even though the railroad had allegedly twice promised that it would never leave town, were preempted by the federal Railway Labor Act. Therefore, the District Court had no jurisdiction over the claims. The employees' spouses' claims were also preempted because the claims were derivative in that the claims were based on damages the spouses allegedly suffered because their employee-husbands lost their jobs. However, a request to file an amended complaint to allege violation of this section and to claim damages under this section should not have been denied, and that part of the case should not have been dismissed. Polich v. Burlington N. RR Co., 942 F2d 1467 (1991). The decision holding that claims were preempted by the Interstate Commerce Act was affirmed in Polich v. Burlington N., Inc., 114 F3d 122 (1997).

Adequacy of Available Remedy — Availability of Injunction: Injunction was not allowed employees of defendant railroad when the latter attempted to move a home terminal because there was no convincing showing of any unlawful act, and if there were, a remedy in damages was plain, speedy, and adequate. Hamblin v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R., 34 St. Rep. 1048 (1977) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Strict Liability for Railroad Safety Under Federal Act — Contributory Negligence No Factor — Summary Judgment Proper: A motion for summary judgment was properly granted to claimant when the railroad admitted violation of portions of the federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. 1, et seq., since under the Act violation by a carrier of a specific safety requirement is held to constitute negligence as a matter of law regardless of a showing of negligence on an employee's part. Plouffe v. Burlington N., Inc., 224 M 467, 730 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 2341 (1986). See also Weber v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 223, 362 Mont. 53, 261 P.3d 984, which held that the District Court erred in granting the railroad's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the injured railroad employee's Locomotive Inspection Act claim when the evidence presented at trial indicated the locomotive was not performing properly and the locomotive's failure created an unnecessary danger of carbon monoxide exposure to the employee.

Availability of Affirmative Defenses to Railroad — Absolute Liability: Plaintiff was employed by a subsidiary of Burlington Northern and was injured in an accident involving Burlington's railroad cars. The Supreme Court decided the federal Safety Appliance Act applied despite the fact the railroad cars involved in the accident were on a siding where loading operations were handled by the subsidiary. Noting that the U.S. Supreme Court has declared that the question of whether a railroad can assert contributory negligence or assumption of risk as a defense in a case involving a nonrailroad employee depends entirely on state law, the Supreme Court cited its 1966 holding that, where the theory of absolute liability applies, liability is established when it is proved that a statute has been violated and there is a proximate cause connection between the violation and the resulting injuries. Proximate cause in a case under the Safety Appliance Act is decided using the definition that prevails under state law. Comparing the 1966 case under the Scaffolding Act with this case, the Supreme Court denied the defendant the two defenses. The Supreme Court also noted that railroad employees are entitled to a more liberal standard imposing liability than nonrailroad employees. Reynolds v. Burlington N. Ry., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Duty to Provide Safe Working Place — Railroad Employee: In a case brought by an employee injured while working for a subsidiary of a railroad, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was owed the duty to provide him with a safe place to work. Noting that giving the jury information about the subsidiaries might well have been highly prejudicial to the defendant railroad, the Supreme Court nonetheless felt obliged to consider it in this case. The plaintiff was working directly in the operations of the railroad in every sense of the word. The railroad would not be absolved of the responsibility to provide a safe place to work for employees who are technically employed by a subsidiary corporation but whose employment is directly related to the operations of a railroad. Closeness of the businesses of the parent and subsidiary companies was a factor in the court's conclusion that both corporations owed the duty to provide the plaintiff with a safe place to work. Reynolds v. Burlington N. Ry., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Punitive Damages Not Allowable Under Federal Employers' Liability Act: Court erred in allowing plaintiff to amend his complaint alleging willful and wanton conduct as a basis for punitive damages because only compensatory damages are the measure of damages recoverable under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. State ex rel. Burlington N. Ry., Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 480, 548 P2d 616 (1976).

Knowledge of Danger:

In an action against a railway for injuries to the feet of a shop laborer resulting from wearing defective and improper safety shoes furnished by the railway, the defense of assumed risk was not available. Palmer v. Great N. Ry., 119 M 68, 170 P2d 768 (1946).

Under state railroad employers' liability law an employee generally assumes risks normally incident to the occupation in which he voluntarily engages but does not assume other and extraordinary risks and those due to employer's negligence until he is made aware thereof or they become so obvious and immediately dangerous that an ordinarily prudent person would observe and appreciate them. Palmer v. Great N. Ry., 119 M 68, 170 P2d 768 (1946).

Whether a carman falling from ladder that assistant foreman allegedly directed him to use until scaffold could be found for use in replacing part of the siding of a freight car in the defendant railroad's repair shop assumed the risk of his employment or risk in using a simple tool was a jury question. Great N. Ry. v. Wojtala, 112 F2d 609 (9th Cir. 1940).

The defense of assumption of risk may be interposed as a bar in an action for personal injuries to an employee when they have been caused by hazard which is incident to the particular business or when they have been brought about by an increased hazard occasioned by the failure of the employer to perform his primary duty with relation to the safety of the employee if the latter was aware of such increased hazard or it was so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances would have observed and appreciated it. Matson v. Hines, 63 M 214, 207 P 474 (1922), certiorari denied, 260 US 734, 67 L Ed 487, 43 S Ct 95 (1922).

When an employee, knowing that obedience to an order of his foreman will expose him to injury and that the danger incident to obedience is obvious, glaring, and imminent, obeys the command, suffering injury, he assumes the risk. When, however, he has no independent knowledge of danger and relies upon the superior knowledge of his employer, he may rely upon the latter's judgment and assume that the order could be safely obeyed without laying himself open to the defense of assumption of risk. Matson v. Hines, 63 M 214, 207 P 474 (1922), certiorari denied, 260 US 734, 67 L Ed 487, 43 S Ct 95 (1922).

In an action by a section hand for injuries sustained in lifting a rail, in which the negligence charged was failure of the defendant company to furnish a sufficient number of men to assist him in doing the work in hand, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff, 28 years of age, familiar with the work he was engaged in, and who knew, as testified to by him, that it required from six to eight men to lift a rail weighing from 750 to 800 pounds with reasonable safety to the men doing the lifting, assumed the risk of injury from overstrain in attempting to lift it in company with three others. Matson v. Hines, 63 M 214, 207 P 474 (1922), certiorari denied, 260 US 734, 67 L Ed 487, 43 S Ct 95 (1922).

Liberal Construction: This statute is remedial in its nature, and its operation ought not to be limited by narrow construction. Palmer v. Great N. Ry., 119 M 68, 170 P2d 768 (1946); Regan v. Mont. Logging Co., 53 M 153, 162 P 388 (1917).

What Are Appliances: Safety shoes used by laborer in railroad shops were "appliances" and "equipment" within the meaning of this section. Palmer v. Great N. Ry., 119 M 68, 170 P2d 768 (1946).

Contributory Negligence — Pleading and Proof:

Contributory negligence on the part of a railroad employee does not bar his right to recover damages for injuries received during the course of his employment. The jury in such case is required to diminish the damages "in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee". Palmer v. Great N. Ry., 119 M 68, 170 P2d 768 (1946); Hall v. N. Pac. Ry., 56 M 537, 186 P 340 (1919).

Failure of a carman, injured by fall, to obtain a scaffold rather than a ladder that the assistant foreman allegedly directed him to use when replacing siding of freight car in repair shop would not be more than contributory negligence, which does not bar recovery under the statute. Great N. Ry. v. Wojtala, 112 F2d 609 (9th Cir. 1940).

Under the rule of comparative negligence declared by this chapter, contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is a partial defense which must be pleaded. Cornell v. Great N. Ry., 57 M 177, 187 P 902 (1920).

This statute does not change the rule that in a personal injury action the burden of pleading and proving contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is upon the defendant. Cornell v. Great N. Ry., 57 M 177, 187 P 902 (1920).

Scope of Employment:

This act covers injuries to railroad employees while engaged in any part of work connected with, and necessarily and directly contributing to, operation of railroad or handling or movement of any train, engine, or car. Palmer v. Great N. Ry., 119 M 68, 170 P2d 768 (1946).

A conductor of a work train was not only acting in furtherance of the operations entrusted to him but was also within the scope of his authority when, in the temporary absence of the engineer, he assumed charge of the locomotive and in his endeavor to switch a caboose from the main line, where it was a menace to life and limb on account of passing trains, to a sidetrack, caused a collision with the caboose injuring the plaintiff. Wegge v. Great N. Ry., 61 M 377, 203 P 360 (1921).

Whether a section hand injured by a collision while resting in a caboose standing upon the main line after the dinner hour and waiting to be transported to work was acting within the scope of his employment was a jury question. Wegge v. Great N. Ry., 61 M 377, 203 P 360 (1921).

Removability of Action Joining Causes Under Similar State and Federal Liability Acts: A plaintiff did not waive the right to trial in state court by joining with a cause of action under Federal Employers' Liability Act a cause of action under similar state statutes based on identical facts. The action was not removable to federal court. When an injured railroad employee is employed in interstate commerce, his remedy under the Federal Employers' Liability Act is exclusive, such act superseding similar state acts. Hoepfner v. N. Pac. Ry., 61 F. Supp. 819 (D.C. Mont. 1945).

Repair of Rolling Stock: This statute includes the repair of rolling stock and was applicable when a carman fell from a ladder while replacing vertical siding of a freight car in a repair shop. Great N. Ry. v. Wojtala, 112 F2d 609 (9th Cir. 1940).

Sufficiency of Complaint:

A complaint of a boilermaker who lost sight in one eye while working with an air hammer caulking bolts in the firebox of a locomotive alleging by way of conclusion that it was railroad's duty to furnish him with reasonably safe tools and appliances and containing additional averments as to the conditions under which he was required to work and necessity for protective goggles was sufficient to state a cause of action. Morelli v. Great N. Ry., 89 M 603, 300 P 210 (1931).

When a plaintiff locomotive engineer had but one cause of action against the defendant railway company, i.e., its wrongful act in permitting an engine to move on the same track at the same time and in the opposite direction from the engine operated by the plaintiff, causing a collision, and in his complaint brought under the federal liability law alleged that he was injured while in the engine whereas at the trial he testified that the injury occurred by coming in contract with the ground as a result of his jumping from the engine to escape the collision, the amended complaint filed by leave of court to conform to the facts did not state a new and different cause of action, and therefore refusal to strike it from the files was proper. Gillespie v. Great N. Ry., 63 M 598, 208 P 1059 (1922).

Limitation of Action: When an amended complaint in an action brought under the federal liability law did not state a new cause of action, the action was barred by the 2-year limitation prescribed therein. The amendment relating back to the date of the commencement of the action was unaffected by the intervening lapse of time. Gillespie v. Great N. Ry., 63 M 598, 208 P 1059 (1922).

Apportionment of Damages: Contributory negligence of plaintiff employee in an action brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act or state law does not bar recovery but is a fact which may be considered by the jury in apportioning damages. Kamboris v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 62 M 88, 203 P 859 (1921).

When Jury's Verdict Is Conclusive in Regarding Negligence: A jury's determination that a railroad was negligent in the death of a section man struck from rear by work train while shoveling cinders from track was conclusive when the evidence was in direct conflict. Kamboris v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 62 M 88, 203 P 859 (1921).

Burden of Proof:

A plaintiff has the burden of proving negligence in a personal injury action by an employee against his employer, whether based upon this statute or not. Hassan v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 105, 198 P 446 (1921).

In action by a railroad section hand for injuries caused by a tie falling upon him from a car which he, with others, was unloading, a nonsuit was properly granted, his evidence not disclosing negligence on the part of anyone to which the fall of the tie and the consequent injuries could be said to have been attributable. Hassan v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 105, 198 P 446 (1921).

Common-Law Liability: The purpose of the Legislature in enacting this legislation was to substitute for the benefit of railway employees the action provided by it in place of the common-law action, and in case of death, to create a new cause of action in favor of the dependents named for the pecuniary loss suffered by them. Cornell v. Great N. Ry., 57 M 177, 187 P 902 (1920).

Definition of Railroad: "Railroad", as used in this section, includes a road used for logging purposes. Regan v. Mont. Logging Co., 53 M 153, 162 P 388 (1917).

"Operating" Construed: When the plaintiff, a brakeman on the defendant's logging road, was also required to assist in loading and unloading cars and while doing so was injured by the breaking of an appliance, the defendant company was "operating" its road at the time of the injury within the meaning of this act. Regan v. Mont. Logging Co., 53 M 153, 162 P 388 (1917).
